1.1.1 New Rules for Radicals—How to Reinvent Kamala Harris (2024-09-01 17:02)

How do accomplished radicals elect a mediocre far-left presidential candidate?

The task might at first seem impossible.

[1]Kamala Harris is currently a radical incumbent vice president. For more than three years, she was second in command to an unprecedentedly unliked Democrat president, his failed policies, and his unpopular record.

Harris herself had compiled a hard-left trail over her own entire career while loudly boasting indiscreetly to leftist audiences of being proudly “woke” and “radical.”

Most challenging for a Harris candidacy makeover was the long, entrenched Democratic Party’s reluctance to remove a debilitated President Joe Biden from the Democratic ticket.

Why?

Because Harris was deemed such a liability that she had become a Spiro Agnew-like insurance policy for [2]a failing Biden.

Until just recently, Democrats had considered an unpopular and enfeebled Biden nonetheless far preferable to an incoherent, lightweight, and widely ridiculed potential replacement Vice President Harris.

After all, she had never before entered a presidential primary. She never won a single delegate by voting. She failed miserably as a candidate in 2020.

And she co-owns the unpopular record of an even more unpopular president.

The complete Harris makeover requires 15 radical rules followed to the letter:

1. Remake Harris as an entirely fresh happy face. She's about joy and vibe—which trumps position papers and policy statements. Banish all thoughts that she is an incumbent vice president and co-owns the last four years of the Biden administration.
2. Ignore/deny that Harris as vice president could have long ago enacted her new makeover proposal—or could do so right now in the remaining five months of her administration's tenure. She was the last person out of the room when Biden made those awful decisions.
3. For the next 70 days, reinvent Harris as a moderate. Xerox much of [3]Donald Trump's current more popular agenda. Have Harris claim it as her own. Reboot her as a border hawk, a China hawk, a defense hawk, a budget hawk, and a law-and-order hawk.
4. The word-salad Harris must not do a single unscripted media interview, live town hall, extemporaneous chat, ambush hot mic, or lecture without a teleprompter.
5. Harris must not offer any policy proposals such as her harebrained price controls that deviate from her 70-day new centrist image and teleprompted scripts.
6. Do not mention Biden at all. Harris is not to be seen with him in photos or at events. Create a vaguely joyful but completely imaginary, "Harris record." Separate it from the miserable Biden-Harris administration. Leak that she was unhappy with Biden.
7. Call Trump a mobster, criminal, insurrectionist, and dictator nonstop. Never provide any evidence to support such charges. When challenged, double down and let loose with worse invective.

8. Talk about abortion nonstop. But never dare mention the word. [4]Relabel abortion “reproductive rights.” Falsely reinvent Trump as a radical anti-abortionist who wants a federal ban.

9. Follow the 2020 successful Biden “basement” strategy: keep out of the public eye, silent on the issues, reliant on 70 percent of the ballots not being cast on Election Day, and outsourcing the campaign to the fusion media and billionaire class.

10. Harangue about race and gender nonstop. Define the election as a stark binary between a “young” oppressed but dynamic black woman and an old oppressor racist white guy.

11. Reinvent the “journey” and life “story” of Harris—the child of two PhDs—into a hardscrabble, lifelong struggle against poverty, systemic racism, and greedy “billionaires” like Trump. She is always to be from Oakland—never Berkeley.

12. Talk about transparency nonstop. Feign a willingness to have three or four debates. But agree to hold only one—and only on a left-wing network. Promise interviews and town halls endlessly. Enter into discussions about them. But always delay, stonewall, and evade for the next 10 weeks.

13. Meet privately and endlessly with the megarich donor class that helped to remove Biden. Assure Wall Street, Hollywood, and Silicon Valley grandees that banter about wealth taxes, taxes on unearned income, and higher corporate taxes are mere campaign posturing. Then outraise Trump again 3-1.

14. Privately assure leftist activists and [5]Democrat politicians that any backslidings from supporting lifelong left-wing advocacies are temporary and necessary 70-day pretexts. Instead look at what Harris actually does after Nov. 5, not anything she must say before then.

15. Control and modulate the street. Anti-Trump protests are a legitimate “movement” that are “not going to let up. And they should not.” Any violent anti-Trump demonstrator should be bailed out immediately.

All anti-Democrat, anti-Harris demonstrations should be deterred. A large police presence must be proactive with as many arrests as possible, with barriers, and plenty of backup. Protest leaders should be given private concessions and incentives to tone down their people.

1.1.2 The Electoral College is So [not] Stupid (2024-09-01 17:03)

There can be many different ways of choosing a country's chief executive. America's Founders created a historically unique one called the "Electoral College." It is debatable whether it is the best system, but it has worked well enough in American history. The Left hates it because it elected Donald Trump in 2016, even though Hillary Clinton received the most "popular votes." However, if the situation had been reversed—Clinton won the EC and Trump the popular vote—I doubt you would hear a peep out of the Left about it.

As noted in several previous articles, our Founding Fathers were not believers in democracy. "Democracy is the vile form of government," wrote James Madison, the man given most credit for producing our Constitution. Yet, a legitimate government must come from "the consent of the governed" because "all men are created equal." That doesn't imply democracy is the best form of government, but it does indicate the people should have some say in how they are governed. The Founders gave a share of government to democracy at the local, state, and national levels.

Political theorists in Western Civilization have largely recognized three "forms" of government—monarchy (from the Greek "rule by one"), aristocracy ("rule by the few"), and democracy ("rule by the many," or people). There are offshoots of those forms (e.g., oligarchy, timocracy), but the basic structure of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy exists. In America, the Presidency represents the "monarchical" form of government; the House represents "democracy," and the Senate the "aristocracy." Don't give any one form of government total power, or tyranny will result. A monarchy will degenerate into a dictatorship, an aristocracy will become an oligarchy (ruled by the rich), and democracy will devolve into cruel, uncontrollable mob rule, the worst of all. Thus, the Founders set up a system with all three forms of government included as part of the "checks and balances" they created.

Since it was designed to select the President (the "monarch"), the Electoral College has elements of the other two forms—democracy (the people vote) and aristocracy (the state representation numbers limit pure mob rule). In American history, the "majority" of the people have usually voted for the man who won the Presidency. Still, there have been cases when the candidate who received the most popular votes ("democracy") didn't win the Electoral College majority. That happened, as noted, in 2016, and the Left is scared to death it will happen this year. And it might. But that was the Founders' idea—protect against democracy, the “form” of government they despised the most.

It's not that “democracy,” as an ideal, is any worse than monarchy or aristocracy. The problem is that the more stupid, decadent people who are allowed to vote, the greater the possibility they will create chaos. “We may appeal to every page of history...for proofs irrefragable, that the people, when they have been unchecked, have been as unjust, tyrannical, brutal, barbarous, and cruel as any king or senate possessed by an uncontrollable power. The majority has eternally, and without any one exception, usurped over the rights of the minority” (John Adams). Mr. Adams further wrote: “The proposition that the people are the best keepers of their own liberties is not true. They are the worst conceivable, not keepers at all: they can neither judge, act, think, or will as a political body. Individuals have conquered themselves; nations and large bodies never.” It is, historically, impossible to refute what he said.

“Democracy is 51 % of the people taking away the rights of the other 49 %” (Thomas Jefferson). This, of course, has happened frequently in American history, nationally and on the state level. But it is also why the Founders delegated most government power into the hands of the states. If a state becomes tyrannical (California), you have 49 other states to choose from—which many Californians are now doing. If the national government becomes tyrannical, where do you go? Thailand?

What is fascinating is that one of the major goals of the Constitution, in the eyes of the Founders, was to protect against democracy: “the purpose of the Constitution is to restrict the majority's [democracy's] ability to harm a minority” (Madison). The Electoral College was a major part of that plan.

“Democracy was the right of the people to choose their own tyrant” (Madison). “Democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths” (Madison). “Remember, democracy never lasts long. It soon wastes, exhausts, and murders itself. There was never a democracy yet that did not commit suicide” (John Adams). Do you get the point? Our Founders did not establish a democracy, and it was deliberate.

But, besides checks and balances, what can be done? I talked about their solution in a couple of recent articles (here and here): “The cornerstone of democracy rests on the foundation of an educated electorate” (Jefferson). “A well-informed citizenry is the best defense against tyranny” (Jefferson). “The advancement and diffusion of knowledge is the only guardian of true liberty” (Madison). People must be educated in virtue and self-government. The more people who aren't—and democracy runs the greatest risk of this—the more probable bad government and tyranny will arise. Patriotic Americans must retake the educational system if the country is going to survive itself.

Our Founding Fathers would agree 100 % with the following assessment and, indeed, say, “we warned you”: “In the U.S., [just over a century] of full-blown democracy has resulted in steadily increasing moral degeneration, family and social disintegration, and cultural decay in the form of continually rising rates of divorce, illegitimacy, abortion, and crime.” (Hans-Hermann Hoppe). Chaos leads to tyranny—exactly what the Left wants.

1.1.3 Kamala Harris and Tim Walz Hate You (2024-09-01 17:04)

Imagine running for President of the United States and not speaking with anyone. Not “to,” you have to do lots of “speaking to” people, but “with,” as in having a conversation, an exchange. Kamala Harris and Tim Walz have been trying that for the past month and a half but finally caved to the reality that they would have to speak with someone and choose the softest target they could find that the public would accept. And the whole thing went about as well as you’d expect when the candidates hold the public in complete contempt.

Yes, that’s right: Kamala Harris, Tim Walz, and the entire left-wing establishment hold you, the American people, in contempt. They treat you with a twist on the old saying about children – you are to be preached to, not heard. You don’t treat people you respect like they are unworthy of addressing you, having their questions answered, or talking at them like a condescending kindergarten teacher.

Yet, that’s what these people do.

When they finally sat down for an interview, it was with CNN because going to MSNBC would have been dismissed as the partisan hackery it clearly would have been. Since NBC News has literally no one who could pass for a journalist, the campaign chose Dana Bash because she’s on the team but can still ask a semi-serious question. However, questions to politicians are only as good as the willingness of the person asking them to follow up and insist on an actual answer. The person asking them has to know or have a rough approximation of the answer to hold them to account.

But for any of that to happen, you must be interested in getting an answer, not simply getting through it. Bash was not.

Her time was limited—just 20 minutes was allotted. Imagine a campaign holding the American public in such contempt that they would only allow 2 minutes shy of a sit-com, which is 22 minutes long, for anyone to question their candidates. Bash ended up getting 27 because no campaign in their right mind would stop the tongue bath Harris and Walz were receiving, but if it had been serious, staff would have stepped in.

They went as far as they felt comfortable – dumb people and frauds can only hold it together for so long, even during a massage session where the interviewer asks leading softball questions without threat of follow-up.

What did we get? Not much. Kamala still couldn't articulate a single priority for "day one," even though that question was so obvious Stevie Wonder could've seen it coming. There is no pressing on any of her egregious flip-flops on fracking, the border wall, socialized medicine, etc. Bash simply lumped them all together into a question that any strip mall lawyer would have objected to as "leading the witness."

Bash asked, "Generally speaking, how should voters look at some of the changes you've made that you explain in your policy? Is it because you have more experience and have learned more about the information? Is it because you were running for president in a Democratic primary? And should they feel comfortable and confident that what you're saying now will be your policy moving forward?"

Pathetic, but not surprising.

The whole thing went like that with Kamala. She still offers up meaningless word salads like, "I am so proud to have served as vice president to Joe Biden and to I'm so proud to be running with Tim Walz for president of the United States and to bring America what I believe the American people deserve, which is a new way forward, and turn the page on the last decade of what I believe has been, contrary to where the spirit of our country really lies."

Advertisement

Considering Democrats controlled the White House for 6 of the last 10 years, that's quite a slam on what Barack Obama clearly started, isn't it?

Tim Walz, the coked-out college mascot, wasn't any better. He was, in fact, worse. Fraudie Murphy got one question tangentially related to his decades of stolen valor, but it was couched in the friendliest terms possible, of course.

He asked about his “weapons of war I carried on war” lie, and he brushed it off as bad grammar. Is it bad grammar that only one of the people he served with in the National Guard for over 24 years came forward to speak favorably about his character? ONE! Dozens have gone the other way, and the silence of the rest speaks volumes.

But Bash didn’t bring it up. She just let him adopt the cowardly Hamas tactic of hiding behind children. Fraudie said, “I said we were talking about, in this case, this was after school shooting, the idea of carrying these weapons of war. My wife, the English teacher who taught me grammar, is not always correct. But again, if it’s not this, it’s an attack on my children for showing love for me, or it’s an attack on my dog. I’m not going to do that. And the one thing I’ll never do is I’ll never demean another member’s service in any way. I never have, and I never will.”

He can’t demean another person’s service because, unless they abandoned their men right before a deployment, lied about their rank for 20 years, and pretended to be a combat veteran, there’s no way they are even as bad as, let alone worse than Tim Walz is.

Advertisement

What do his kids have to do with anything? Like all sewer water, he seeks the path of least resistance and kids offer that. No one attacked his kids, they simply pointed out how his son appeared to have lost control of his entire body at the convention, screaming, “That’s my dad!” I’ve heard his son is autistic and non-verbal, which seems odd since he was screaming that, but whatever – he’s not the awful candidate; his father is, so I don’t care either way. But that’s hardly an “attack on his children.”

They’re both frauds; they’re both awful. The idea that Kamala is simply rushed in her candidacy is undercut by the fact that she’s plotted for this moment most of her adult life, and definitely the last 5 years. And she’s been Vice-President – “ready on day one” to be president, just not ready on day 39 to answer questions about, apparently.

Walz is just a liar about everything. He tries to “awe-shucks” his way through his public appearances, bouncing around the stage like a coked-out college mascot for a team that sucks – prancing and dancing, pointing and clapping, desperate to get the wave started in a stadium out 20 percent full. You almost feel badly for him until you realize he’s a bad person.

The final question – and imagine having what may well be the only chance to ask someone running for president questions, and you waste time on something like this (have you ever heard a softball question remotely close to this asked of Trump or Vance? No.) – was, “And last question, Madam Vice President, the photograph that has gone viral, you were speaking one of your grand nieces that you were just talking about was watching you accept the nomination. You didn’t explicitly talk about gender or race in your speech, but it obviously means a lot to a lot of people. And that viral picture really says it. What does it mean to you?”

First, there’s no such thing as “grand nieces.” There are nieces and great-nieces. Kamala is not a grandmother, nor is she a mother. She is childless by choice (you can decide if you think she’s had abortions or how many, but you can’t deny she sure loves them) and only became a stepmother when her husband’s kids were in their late teens. How much time do you think California’s Attorney General spent “mothering” teenagers who mostly lived with their real mothers? None? Less than none?

Second, what a stupid question. What should the audience get from any answer that could be offered in response to it? Is some pointless rambling about “historic” or whatever doing to serve as a 25 percent off coupon at the grocery store or gas station? Do you get a discount on your rent, mortgage, or electric bill if you sit through it? No. Are you even remotely more informed about what Kamala Harris would do as president? You are not.

It was just a final example of how to waste an opportunity. The whole “interview” seemed to be conducted to get more future access by being nice to them. Journalists should conduct every interview with a politician like it’s the last time they will ever be allowed to speak with them, so they’d better ask tough questions.

I know the mentality; I’ve dealt with many people who do it on both sides. They suck up to the people they like hoping to get them back later. They all insist they’re tough, that they’re not friends with these people, but love telling their audience how close they are to them. And you come away with nothing as an audience except the inflated sense of self-importance from the questioner.

Dana Bash didn’t give her audience anything of use Thursday night, but she also didn’t allow Kamala Harris and Tim Walz to hurt themselves, which was more important to the left. The public knows nothing more about either of them or what they’d do in office other than they want to make things better. If the truth were on the side of Democrats, they’d be eager to tell it to anyone willing to listen. That they hide tells you all you need to know.

Democrats view the public as a feckless mass of humanity in desperate need of leadership in every aspect of your life. They hold you in contempt. Return the favor.

1.1.4 Bill Maher: You Should Have the Right to Say That the Election Was Stolen (2024-09-01 17:05)

Let's not kid ourselves here: Bill Maher has, more or less, called people who think the 2020 election was stolen are nuts. He's undoubtedly pressed those who have advocated such a position on his show. The HBO host has repeatedly espoused his most profound worry that Donald Trump would never concede power, all of which has never come to fruition. It's liberal psychobabble, but it's also an opinion. And he's not for censoring that being a free speech supporter. He might not agree with you about the reported funny business during the 2020 election, but he also doesn't want to see anyone censored for having that view.

The comedian said that claiming the 2020 election as stolen, or any election for that matter, shouldn't be censored. It's protected free speech.

Bill Maher believes Americans should have the right to claim the election is stolen:
Bill Maher: "Trump was off Twitter for a long time before Elon put him back on Twitter. It was kind of like keeping Pete Rose out of the Hall of Fame.
Can you say, if you're a Republican, or a... [1]pic.twitter.com/t7MWhu3LmU— Eric Abbenante (@EricAbbenante) [2]August 31, 2024

He mentioned the arrest of Russian entrepreneur Pavel Durov in France, who founded Telegram, a Twitter-like social media platform, to segue into this deeper discussion about censorship, though the circumstances surrounding Durov's arrest stem from his refusal to clean up some aspects of his site, like assisting in investigations into child sexual abuse, drug trafficking, and terrorism. Guest Peter Hamby noted that the ISIS terrorists who carried out the 2015 Bataclan attacks organized on Telegram.

That's a fair point, but in this discussion, Maher used Durov since he's like Elon Musk on free speech issues. I like the example the HBO host used to describe these two men's positions regarding such matters: it's a bathroom wall, and it's not my job to clean it. Donald Trump was banned from Twitter until Elon took it over, which was another point made in this discussion: Brazil is blocking Twitter.

Maher also discussed Facebook admitting that the Biden administration pressured them to censor material on COVID:

Bill Maher and the panel cover Mark Zuckerberg admitting that Facebook was pressured into censoring content by the Biden administration:

Bill Maher: "He [Mark Zuckerberg] wrote to Jim Jordan and kind of did a mea culpa on what happened a few years ago. He wrote that his team was... [3]pic.twitter.com/7Nbok9UfN6— Eric Abbenante (@EricAbbenante) [4]August 31, 2024

1.1.5 Kamala Harris Throws a Fit Over Debate Rules (2024-09-01 17:06)

Earlier this week, [1]as we covered at the time, former and potentially future President Donald Trump announced that they had reached an agreement on the upcoming September 10 debate with ABC News. For his debate with Vice President Kamala Harris, the same rules will be in place as the debate Trump did with President Joe Biden did on June 27 with CNN.

a list of rules to the Trump campaign on Tuesday. Those rules include muted microphones for when the other candidate is speaking.

Here are the debate rules that ABC sent to the Trump campaign Tuesday, per an email reviewed by the Post. No audience and muted microphones as first debate was. [2]pic.twitter.com/ukj12rxyks— Josh Dawsey (@jdawsey1) [3]August 29, 2024

Harris, however, is trying to put out another narrative, as she continues to drag her feet about the debates.

On Saturday morning, she put out a lengthy post complaining about the rules, in a quoted repost of The Washington Post's Josh Dawsey who noted on Friday that the Harris campaign has still not accepted the rules. They want the microphones to be unmuted.

Trump campaign has accepted these rules, per Tuesday email to ABC reviewed by the Post. Kamala Harris's campaign has not yet accepted these rules, as they seek to unmute the microphones for the entire debate. Debate is in less than two weeks. [4]<https://t.co/H1fHM000s3>— Josh Dawsey (@jdawsey1) [5]August 30, 2024

While trying to make Trump look bad if he interrupts Harris might have something to do with it, Harris' gaslighting post claims otherwise.

"Donald Trump is surrendering to his advisors who won't allow him to debate with a live microphone. If his own team doesn't have confidence in him, the American people definitely can't," her post claimed.

It's worth reminding that it was the Biden-Harris campaign who insisted on the rules in place for the June 27 debate, which Trump agreed to. Even after getting what he wanted, the president still performed so poorly that he was forced to withdraw from the race less than a month later.

"We are running for President of the United States. Let's debate in a transparent way—with the microphones on the whole time," Harris also claimed.

It's especially laughable that Harris would speak about doing something "in a transparent way," given that she [8]only just recently gave [9]her first interview upon Biden withdrawing from the race and endorsing her as his replacement. Harris [10]couldn't even do a solo interview, [11]as she was joined by her [12]running mate, Gov. Tim Walz (D-MN). It was also taped ahead of time. She's also refused to hold press conferences.

In the few hours it's been up, Harris' post already has approximately 15,000 replies and close to 2,000 quoted reposts, many of them taking issue with her narrative.

[13]Amy Curtis and [14]Doug P put together some of the best replies, with many noting that it sounds like Harris may be trying to get out of the debate, something Democrats previously accused Trump of. It's worth reminding, however, that the issue for the Trump campaign was that the Democrats did not have an official nominee at the time.

Reminds me of a cousin of mine. Playing a board game as kids, every time he was losing, always tried to change the rules and thought I would be stupid enough to agree. [15]<https://t.co/28xb1DQco3>— Márta Lisle (@UrUnpaidPundit) [16]August 31, 2024

1.1.6 The Media Lies Add Up (2024-09-08 21:16)

The public is exhausted after a decade of chronic untruth from the left-wing and its media.

The 2016 presidential campaign will be long remembered for the false allegation that Donald Trump colluded with the Russians to warp the election.

Citing the bogus "Steele dossier," loser Hillary Clinton and other Democrat grandees claimed that the victorious Trump was an "illegitimate" president.

Almost immediately, the left and media then pushed for the appointment of special prosecutor Robert Mueller. He assembled a "dream team" of partisan prosecutors to prove Trump-Russian collusion.

Some 22 months later, Mueller found no evidence that Trump improperly won the 2016 election with help from any colluding Russians.

More hysteria followed when Trump was impeached in December 2019.

The left claimed he had pressured the Ukrainian government to look into the family of Joe Biden (then a potential 2020 election opponent) for its corruption with Ukrainian oligarchs – as a condition for releasing military aid designated to Kyiv.

Yet Hunter Biden was paid nearly $1 million a year by a Ukrainian energy company to enlist his father, Vice President Joe Biden, for quid pro quo services.

In turn, Joe Biden later bragged that he had pressured Ukraine to fire its prosecutor, Victor Shokin, who happened to be looking too closely into the various shady schemes of the Biden family.

On the eve of the first 2020 debate, Biden aide and now Secretary of State Antony Blinken helped to round up "51 former intelligence authorities" to claim falsely that Hunter Biden's abandoned laptop – full of incriminating evidence of felonious Biden family behavior – was fabricated by the Russians.

Yet the FBI already had the laptop and had authenticated it as genuine.

The FBI was also actively enlisting Silicon Valley social media companies to suppress accurate news accounts of the laptop's embarrassing contents – ostensibly to aid the Biden campaign.

The signees of the false letter included former intelligence kingpins such as Leon Panetta, James Clapper, and John Brennan. None has ever apologized for deliberating lying to the country in a (successful) attempt to help alter an election.

During the summer of 2021, top military officials, at least publicly, parroted the Biden administration's lie that it was safe to abruptly withdraw all troops from Afghanistan.

The Biden plan was to take political credit for ending the two-decade-long war on the 20th anniversary of 9/11 and the American invasion of Afghanistan.

Yet many intelligence officials in and outside the Pentagon had warned both Biden and the Pentagon top brass that any such reckless and total withdrawal would collapse Afghanistan.

They rightly advised that sudden flight would give terrorists a windfall of equipment and infrastructure.

But they were ignored, and during the subsequent Biden misadventure, 13 American Marines were needlessly killed.

After the greatest military humiliation in a half-century, Biden and many in the media lied that the mission was nevertheless a successful withdrawal.

But that was not all. For the first time in history, a presidential candidate, Donald Trump, was subjected to numerous criminal and civil suits in an election year.

Yet the federal prosecutor, Jack Smith, met with Biden officials. A high-ranking Biden Justice federal attorney joined the New York municipal prosecution. The Georgia prosecutor met stealthily with Biden's legal counsel. And a major Biden donor funded the civil suit.

The once collusion-hungry media ignored all such lawfare and rank collusion.

During the 2020 Democratic primaries, the general election, and throughout the first three years of the Biden administration, it was evident that Joe Biden was physically and mentally incapable of serving as president.

Yet his aides and the media all misled the American people. They insisted that Biden was vigorous and sharp.

Then, suddenly, in June 2024, within a 24-hour period, these same insiders declared Biden unfit to continue as the Democratic nominee.

Their new problem with Biden was not just his long-standing embarrassing dementia. Rather bad polls increasingly warned that voters no longer believed their lies and thus would likely not reelect Biden but would instead punish most Democrats in the upcoming 2024 election.

So, a new media narrative arose: the once-hale Biden was forced to resign as the Democratic nominee. His once widely caricatured vice president, Kamala Harris, was coronated as his replacement candidate just as abruptly as his replacement candidate by an equally suddenly gushing and colluding media.

In sum, for some nine years, the media and the left have successfully fed the country a succession of rank deceptions and conspiracies.

They did so because they proclaimed Trump too dangerous to be president, and therefore, any means they employed to stop him were to be justified. And they are doing so for a third time in 2024.

As they continue, they have all but destroyed democracy, ruined the reputation of the media, alienated the public – and embarrassed their country before the world.

1.1.7 This Is Why Democrats Won't Let Harris Or Walz Do Any Real Interviews (2024-09-08 21:18)

Kamala Harris and Tim Walz can't avoid the debates without looking like they're deliberately avoiding them – which means Kamala will be there Tuesday – but they can avoid being asked any serious questions, and they will. You'd think that would be political suicide, and it certainly won't help them in the election. Still, the old saying about being silent and leaving people to think you might be an idiot or opening your mouth and confirming their suspicions is doubly true with this ticket.

The heavy lifting the Democratic Party media did in 2020 was unprecedented, but it's also nothing compared to what will be needed this year. Not because Donald Trump is so wildly popular, neither ticket has a majority favorability rating, but because Kamala Harris and Tim Walz are uniquely awful candidates and, honestly, people.

There's a reason they speak in platitudes and fortune cookie slogans, and it's not because they are desperate to find new ways to convey to voters their policy ideas. They are the equivalent of used car salesmen who are just shy of their boat payment in commissions this month, and they see you walk on their lot. You're the mark.

The limited interviews they've given thus far have been devoid of substance or follow-ups, the two things that make interviews have any value whatsoever. CNN simply plowed through topics, limited by time to the point of worthlessness, which was the purpose of making it so short.

Kamala interviewed with someone called "Angel Baby," which I doubt is the name on the birth certificate. The middle-aged Spanish language radio host in Arizona was tough enough to make CNN's Dana Bash a grand inquisitor. To say it was worth less than zero would be an insult to the book.

Then there is Tim Walz. The stolen valor college mascot who dances around a stage like a coked-out Muppet seems incapable of having a serious conversation. More importantly, the unvetted Fraudie Murphy not only can't act like a normal human being for a few consecutive seconds, he can't string together a coherent thought.

Part of it is that Kamala Harris has, at one point in the last 4 years, been on every side of all the issues. It must be hard to keep up and articulate a vision for someone how has none, but listening to Walz talk makes you realize he wants to hide his own opinions too.

He gave an interview to an NPR station in central Michigan in which he said exactly nothing. At least nothing coherent.

To show what kind of pandering, lying frauds Democrats are, Walz kept claiming he and Harris would do things to lower property taxes. The federal government has no say over property taxes, but he claimed that building more houses and more federal spending on education would lower them, and just their general state of the economy in their fantasy land would too.

Never, in all of property tax history, have any of those things happened, but Timmy just casually dropped that they would throughout the interview. It being conducted by a public radio station meant there was exactly zero engagement or asks for clarity. The "journalist" had their list of 6 questions on 6 different topics and literally nothing said was going to prevent him from asking all 6. It really was one of the most awful examples of an interview I've ever heard, check it out, it's only 8 minutes long.

On each topic, Walz used a lot of words to say nothing. Listening to it and you might be confused into thinking he has some idea of what he's saying, but when you read it you realize he's simply that kid writing every buzzword he can think of in answer to an essay question hoping to get at least partial credit.

Here's his answer on the idea that a Harris/Walz administration could build 3 million houses - 2055 per day - over 4 years. See if anything he says in there makes sense.

Walz said:

"Yeah. And I think when we talk about this one, and I know this for a fact that that my home, my first home I bought, the only home I bought, was using the GI Bill. And what the GI Bill does on that was is it gives you...you don't have to have a down payment on it. And what we know is that housing is foundational to everything. It's foundational to a family stability, it's foundational school achievement and we know that it's the path to generational wealth, and we know that the supplies are too short right now."

"We know that it's a little too difficult to build in some areas and those are things that of course state and local regulations are going to have to work with. But this idea of giving a tax credit on the front end, the same thing with like small businesses, you start people out with this, it gives them the foundation to get in. That foundation allows them to build on it, and what we end up seeing is we see wealthier communities with more money invested back into them. We see a broader tax base, which means lower property taxes for everybody. And so that dream of owning a home. We can do this. What we don't need is, we don't need large venture capitalists buying up large stocks of homes and then jacking the prices up on them. That is not what we need and that's what we've seen in many areas."

"So, I think this plan gets more at that ability to get people in, and look, folks will pay their own way. You're still going to have to pay your mortgage. You're still going to have to make your way, but that coupled with an opportunity economy with a middle class is making a living wage, making a housing wage, has healthcare, and now has a home. We see all kinds of positive things happen when we do that."

Forget the lies; assume it's all true. Does it make sense? Does it sound like someone who knows what they're talking about?

The Left-Wing Industrial Complex can't allow these people near anyone who might know what they're talking about or demand a coherent answer. They can only appeal to dumb people who are ready to believe the idea that there is some quick and easy fix for every problem. Still, these Democrats - who are currently in power and could implement them right now - will only clearly articulate them if they win in November. Otherwise, they'll take their "solutions" to the grave.

Let's send them to their political grave so they can take their ideas with them. That way, we don't have to suffer through the horror of what would inevitably be a deeper hole than we're already in as Kamala cackles and Tim flails around while insisting we can dig our way out of it if we just dig harder.

1.1.8 House Committee Subpoenas Walz in COVID Fraud Scheme Investigation (2024-09-08 21:22)

The GOP-led Committee on Education & The Workforce issued a subpoena to Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz on Wednesday for records related to the largest COVID-19 fraud scheme in the country.

“As the chief executive and the highest ranking official in the state of Minnesota, you are responsible for the MDE [Minnesota Department of Education] and its administration of FCNPs [Federal Child Nutrition Programs],” Chairwoman Virginia Foxx (R-NC) said to Walz in a [1]cover letter accompanying the subpoena. “Statements in the press by you and your representatives indicate that you and other executive officers were involved, or had knowledge of, MDE’s administration of the FCNP and responsibilities and actions regarding the massive fraud.”

In 2022, a U.S. attorney charged 70 individuals associated with Minnesota-based Feeding Our Future (FOF) for their alleged roles in defrauding the USDA of over $250 million in taxpayer funds—money intended to feed hungry children. To date, five individuals have been convicted of fraud that the assistant U.S. attorney on the case called “not just criminal, [but] depraved and brazen.” Charges include federal programs bribery, wire fraud, conspiracy, and money laundering. While dozens are still awaiting trial, questions remain regarding the role of the Minnesota Department of Education’s (MDE) administration of the Federal Child Nutrition Programs and its oversight of FOF.

After MDE, under Governor Walz, failed to respond to previous attempts by the Committee to garner information necessary to uncover how the Governor and the USDA allowed such fraud to occur, the Committee today is proceeding with a subpoena to compel responses. ([2]Committee on Education and the Workforce)

The Committee said subpoenas were also sent to the U.S. Department of Agriculture and its Office of Inspector General.

1.1.9 Biden Reveals What the Woefully Misnamed Inflation Reduction Act Is Really About (2024-09-08 21:25)

With his term ending in a matter of months, President Joe Biden is still trotted out on occasion to give remarks. As he continues to be less and less with it, Biden has also made some curious admissions, including when it comes to the woefully misnamed Inflation Reduction Act (IRA), over two years after he signed it into law.

Speaking in Westby, Wisconsin on Thursday, Biden made quite the declaration. "I'm proud to announce that my-my investments—that through my investments, the most significant climate change law ever," accurately pointing out how the IRA is more so about climate alarmism. He also reminded that the bill came with a $369 billion price tag.

"It's called the—we-we should have named it what it was, but it—but any rate," Biden trailed off to laughter from the audience.

Joe Biden just STRAIGHT UP ADMITTED that the Inflation Reduction Act was a TOTAL SCAM that had NOTHING to do with reducing inflation!

Does Kamala Harris agree with this?

"We should've named it what it was!" [1]pic.twitter.com/2WL7N1exN2— Town-hall.com (@townhallcom) [2]September 5, 2024

It's not only telling that Biden said the quiet part out loud about the IRA, which is that it didn't even have the proper name, but that he couldn't bring himself to say the actual name of the bill. He started to do so, but was ultimately unable to complete the thought. Is it because the president doesn't even know the name of a supposedly signature piece of legislation? Even if he did, it's still concerning that he couldn't get the words out.

Vice President Kamala Harris, in her interview from CNN last Thursday, spoke about the IRA in terms of prioritizing climate change, as Monica Crowley reminded when sharing a clip of Biden's remarks from this week.

Kamala admitted in her CNN interview that the "Inflation Reduction Act" was a scam to force through climate communism, aka the Green New Deal.

Here's Biden today admitting the same.

Trillions spent, setting off massive inflation, all on a lie.

CNN's Dana Bash presses Harris on why she flip-flopped on fracking: [5]pic.twitter.com/jhjQGqIQaQ— Townhall.com (@townhallcom) [6]August 30, 2024

Prices [7]have certainly gone up during the Biden-Harris administration, which Harris is currently a part of as the sitting vice president, yet she still talks about how she'll handle inflation if she's elected president. Inflation rates [8]are particularly high compared not only to the Trump administration, but the past several presidential administrations going back to Lyndon B. Johnson.

As Harris herself acknowledged in that CNN interview, [9]she also cast the tiebreaking vote for the IRA back in August 2022, making her pledge to combat inflation even more nonsensical.

Harris is still trying to gaslight voters into thinking Bidenomics is working and blames Trump's "mismanagement" of the pandemic for Americans' current struggles.

1.1.10 MSNBC Host Says the Quiet Part Out Loud About the ABC News Debate (2024-09-13 01:11)

Donald Trump missed his chance to deliver a knockout blow to Kamala Harris. It was sloppier than his first debate. She got under his skin, which led to some nonsensical tangents, something Harris wanted to do. Anything that can be done to get her out of talking about policy is a win for that camp. Yet, despite my disappointment in Trump's performance, where he had multiple opportunities to turn Harris inside out as a total clown who is unqualified and unprepared to be president, the vice president was assisted mightily by ABC News moderators David Muir and Linsey Davis. It was the Democrat media complex at work, and they arguably were debating with Trump during this circus last night. MSNBC's Nicole Wallace and Tim Walz both said the quiet part out loud: the moderators rigged the debate.

They live-fact-checked Trump five times to Harris' zero. The microphones were not muted; they made sure to sneak in ridiculous questions, like asking about Kamala Harris' race. It was election interference, and when MSNBC hosts and Bill Kristol are saying ABC News' moderators are doing a good job, you know it's trash. From the war in Ukraine, which happened under Biden-Harris, to the spike in crime, ABC News was hell on wheels to fact-check the former president, even bizarrely getting whether Trump was being sarcastic or not. 1.1.11 Good Guys with Guns (2024-09-13 01:13)

Do you carry a gun?

Bad idea, says Hollywood. Civilians with guns are fools. You are more likely to hurt yourself than the bad guy.

"Leave it to a good guy with a gun to really screw things up," says a cop on ABC's "The Rookie."

Liberal politicians agree.

"A good guy with a gun will stop bad guys with a gun?! It doesn't hold up," smiles New York Gov. Kathy Hochul.

"An adolescent rescue fantasy," adds an "expert" on CBS.

Now, I'm not a gun person. I was raised among lefty gun haters. I assumed Hollywood and "experts" were right.

When I saw economist John Lott's book, "More Guns, Less Crime," I rolled my eyes. But now I understand that Lott makes a good point.

"A couple million times a year, people use guns defensively," he says in my [1]new video. "When a civilian tries to stop one of these instances, they're overwhelmingly successful."

But FBI reports say self-defense with guns is rare.

"They're simply missing a huge number of cases," says Lott. He's posted [2]a list of cases the FBI ignored, where civilians stopped shooters.

The FBI lists the Pulse nightclub shooting in Orlando. Forty-nine people were killed.

"One week afterwards," says Lott, "there was a similar attack at a nightclub in South Carolina."

But there, a civilian shot the attacker.

"Still had 125 rounds of ammunition on him when he was stopped!" says Lott.

Somehow, the FBI missed that case, along with so many others.

When 17 people were killed at Parkland, Florida, that got lots of news coverage.

Few people know that "just a few months later in Titusville, Florida, (at) an elementary school," says Lott, "a man came up, started firing his gun. Fortunately, a hot dog vendor (with a) concealed handgun was able to wound the attacker and stop him before he was able to kill."

"Stepped in and saved a lot of people's lives," said a local police officer.

But the FBI somehow missed that, too ...

Lott's list of ignored cases includes the story of Raul Mendez, who was at a party when a guest opened fire.

"Bullet enters right by my ear, goes straight through my face and out my left eye ... Blind from one eye and covered in blood, I unloaded four rounds and finished him off."

Mendez probably saved the lives of a dozen people at that party.

I tell him, "The FBI records instances like this, but somehow they have no record of your case."

"They're not recording the true numbers," Mendez replies.

I ask Lott why.

"There's a lot of political views that infect their data," he says. "I had interactions with the people in the FBI ... I had people tell me, 'Well, I'm a Democrat.'"

I push back. "The FBI, who carry guns, are anti-gun? It's not believable."

"They think that it would go against the narrative that they want to push," answered Lott.

Advertisement

Stossel TV asked the FBI why they don't include self-defense cases like Mendez'. They replied that their data is: "not intended to explore all facets of active shooter incidents."

Too bad politicians and the media don't realize that.

"It'd be great if we could just make all guns disappear," says Lott. "But when you ban guns, it's basically the most law-abiding good citizens who obey. Every place in the world that's banned all guns or all handguns has seen murder rates go up."

So-called experts like a psychiatrist featured on Detroit's CBS station confidently say, "There haven't been good guys with a gun who stop mass shootings. It's the kind of thing you learn reading comic books!"

Mendez replies: "I was prepared, and it saved lives. There's no comic book story about that. Those are facts. That's what happened. I was there. I'm sure there's many more out there that go unheard."

1.1.12 Voter Reactions to the ABC News Debate Were Not Good...for Kamala (2024-09-13 01:14)

Donald Trump didn't clinch a decisive win last night, though he had his chances. That's what's so frustrating. Kamala Harris wasn't good, but also not a total disaster like Joe Biden was in June. She got under Trump's skin, with the former president taking the bait on rally size and the 2020 election. Trump sounded and looked flustered over these topics, plus January 6 and the weaponization of the Justice Department. The more he spoke less about policy, the more comfortable Kamala became—that's not good. There were chances to land a haymaker to knock her out, and Trump failed. Instead of demoralizing Democrats, we will now hear about how Kamala shifted the race.

The ABC News debate was a disaster from a moderator standpoint, with David Muir and Linsey Davis exhibiting gross bias, also laying traps for Trump like the question about Kamala Harris' racial identity. Trump was facing Harris, Muir, and Davis last night. If you want to say it was a draw, that's fair, but the fact Trump could bury Harris on policy is what irks me. It was there. Yet, as I noted earlier this morning, it might not matter. The CNN snap poll on who won showed Harris running away with it. Yet, on the crucial issue of the economy, she lost ground. It was already at a paltry 37 percent; it dropped to 35.

We had voters saying how Trump, by default essentially, is more trusted on immigration. ABC News even admitted post-debate that Harris didn't answer the questions. One voter in a CNN focus group said that when it comes down to brass tacks, her life was better under Trump—this was an undecided voter:

We're in Rorschach territory on this one: those who thought Kamala dominated will see that while other voters will think Trump bested her. Let's revisit this once the latest wave of polls are released. No, I don't think Trump lost, but he didn't win either.

1.1.14 The GOP Could Sweep the Senate...If We Don't Screw It Up (2024-09-16 22:43)

We Republicans have to not just win the Senate but win the Senate beyond the margin of Lisa Murkowski and Susan Collins. If we have less than 53 Republicans in our coalition, it's these two who are going to be running things and Mitch McConnell won't be there to crack the whip and impose his iron discipline. But can we do it? We currently have 49 seats out of 100, but we have a pretty good map this year. That would normally mean that we're well-positioned to win. Yet, we Republicans have a disadvantage. We're Republicans, and far too often, we blow it.

Except this time, that doesn't seem to be true. Things look good. There are some real fights going on, and we shouldn't take any of them for granted. But the fundamentals are with us, the presidential election seems to be going our way despite the regime media orgasm over her marginal debate performance the other night, and we've got some good people running. We need to take the Senate, and we need, as a practical matter, about 53 seats to be able to support Donald Trump in making America great again.

We have a good shot at doing it, but it's not a given. It's not going to be easy. We could very easily not achieve it, especially if we don't focus and work. But things are looking good in recent elections. The vast majority of contested Senate races went away from the presidential winner, and Trump's looking pretty good.

But then, when I start feeling good, I start wondering if it's confirmation bias. I want to win. I want to hear we are doing well. So, I reached out to my sources deep in the fight, folks who are actually working with the candidates or candidates themselves. They are telling me things are looking better overall. Said one deep insider: "Not overhyping our odds, but if the environment is good, lightning could strike and build a durable majority."

Oh, it's not going to be a walkover. It's going to be a battle, and a Trump victory will be key. So, let's see where everything is at from my perspective and from some of the candidates...

Let's start with the gimmes. In West Virginia, Joe Manchin is sending himself off into retirement. There goes a Democrat seat in the reddest of America's states. He will be replaced by their current governor[1], Jim Justice, who looks like he should be chasing Bo and Luke and the General Lee through the backroads in a sheriff's cruiser. He's a politician from another time, arguably a better time than this gender, confused communist nightmare era. He's going to win, and the most important thing besides him providing the GOP's 50th vote is that he will bring his awesome puppy, [2]Ladydog, with him to Washington, DC.

Another done deal is [3]Jim Banks in Indiana, where he'll be replacing another, softer Republican. Banks is a Navy veteran and hardcore, and it looks like the Democrats are giving up even their faint hopes of success there. I asked him about the state of the race, and he told me that his "opponent had $15,000 cash on hand as of the last FEC report, and Democrats appear to be completely conceding Indiana to Republicans." You love to hear it!

For some reason, the Democrats think they can beat [4]Deb Fischer in Nebraska, and I want to encourage this delusion because I want them to spend money there. Spoiler alert: The Democrats are not going to win Nebraska.

The Democrats say they're going to beat [5]Rick Scott in Florida, which tells me that they aren't waiting for the voters to pass the marijuana legalization initiative before getting high.

And, of course, the Democrats are imagining that they are going to turn Texas blue somehow and beat [6]Ted Cruz with some liberal hack. It's always fun to watch them Lucy and the football his Texas Senate races. Ted's going to beat this dude like he beat the furry.

Montana is not a done deal, but it's getting close.

The GOP voters in Montana did the smart thing and nominated [7]Tim Sheehy to replace fake country guy John Tester. Sheehy's campaign points out that "Tester claims to fight for Montanans, but he votes with Biden-Harris 95 % of the time." That seems to be a suboptimal argument for reelection. Tester is a professional politician who acts like a character from “Yellowstone” when he visits Montana and drives his Prius to Whole Foods to get tofu when he’s back home in Washington, D.C. Sheehy was a Navy SEAL, and the polls have him ahead. He’s likely to be seat 51.

Now things get more challenging. Ohio and Pennsylvania are the big targets, and I happen to know the nominees in both races. [8]Bernie Moreno, who immigrated legally and made himself rich, is running in Ohio. He built himself a huge business, and, by coincidence, before he even got into politics, one of his companies happened to have an issue out in California, and I was the lawyer for his company. I remember noting that this CEO took a personal interest in that substantial, but not incredibly huge, case. I respect hands-on leadership. Bernie is a great guy and exactly what we need in The Swamp. The only thing I didn’t like about him was that he spoke Spanish with my wife, and I think they were talking smack about me!

I asked him about the state of the race in my home state: “We just got numbers out of the field and are tied - despite Sherrod spending $25 million over eight months. We just started our advertising and have Sherrod at the lowest point of his career. Voters are very smart and aren’t sending Sherrod Brown back to the Senate to stop President Trump’s agenda when he wins on November 5th!”

The Schlichters come from Pennsylvania, and [9]Dave McCormick lived as a child in both towns where my parents grew up. Dave is a soldier - finally, somebody from the Army! - and I won’t hold him being a West Pointer against him. He went on to build a huge business, create jobs, and get rich, which real Americans understand to be a good thing. Dave is a genuine and down-to-earth guy, and I am particularly glad that he is a fellow Gulf War veteran because it’ll be nice to have somebody who was part of America’s last unequivocal victory helping to rebuild our military.

Some of the other races may be tougher, but they are winnable. I’ve gotten to know [10]Kari Lake, and the fake regime media image of her is complete baloney. She’s down-to-earth, funny, and a smart and dedicated patriot. I think she is particularly wise for reaching out to moderate Republicans this time, trying to rebuild a state party that was shattered by internal division. But can she win? She told me: “The Arizona Senate race is a dead heat — AARP bipartisan polling shows it statistically tied. Club For Growth Polling shows the race tied. NRSC shows me leading by 1 point. President Trump is beating Harris by 4 points in recent New York Times polls.” Kari knows her state - she spent years talking to the people of Arizona as a newscaster, and only a fool would underestimate her potential against the outright Marxist lunatic she’s running against.

Advertisement

[11]Sam Brown has a tough race in Nevada against a faceless Democrat hack. Another Army vet, Brown has a shot of riding Trump's coattails to a surprise victory.

In Virginia, we have another Navy guy, [12]Hung Cao. He's got a tough but doable race. My fellow O6 told me that "the Virginia Senate race is one that will surprise everyone. President Trump knows this and that's why he made Virginia a battleground state. Virginia wants change, and change can't come from the same person that got us into high inflation, higher grocery and gas prices and higher interest rates." I think he will be greatly helped if the Trump campaign puts some effort into Virginia, which may happen if Kamala completely melts down, something I believe is possible.

And then there is deep blue Maryland. Unlike New Hampshire, where a popular blue state governor wussed out, Larry Hogan stepped up. Look, I know he's soft. But like Susan Collins, we're never doing better than him in that pinko hellhole.

We've got good candidates: [13]Mike Rogers in Michigan, [14]Eric Hovde in Wisconsin, and [15]Nella Domenici in New Mexico. But let's face it, fax. If it isn't a Trump landslide, it will be really hard to win these. That said, if you want to guarantee they lose, do nothing and don't get out there and help.

So, we're well positioned to get a majority, but a functioning and practical majority is more than just one seat. We need at least four turnovers, and right now, that is within reach. But in the end, it really depends on you. Pony up and get out and help. And if you aren't in one of those states, pick a candidate and help him or her out. Make it happen, folks, we have to win this one and win it big if we are going to help Donald Trump make America great again.

1.1.15 Jennings Has a Message for Those Complaining About 'Both Sides' After Trump Assassination Attempt (2024-09-16 22:46)

On Sunday, a second assassination attempt took place against former and potentially future President Donald Trump. It was rhetoric from Democrats and their allies in the mainstream media that incited such an attempt on the Republican nominee's life, as the Trump-Vance campaign highlighted in [1] a long list of examples sent out on Monday. Also on Monday, CNN commentator Scott Jennings shared his thoughts to counteract the narrative from Democrats and the media, which is that it's supposedly a "both sides" issue.

As he made clear we're living in "unprecedented" and "crazy" times, Jennings pointed out "I know everybody is talking today about all the rhetoric in this country, and what are we going to do to fix it going forward."

"Folks, it's too late. It's too late, in my opinion, because all the rhetoric about Donald Trump over the last several years that he is a threat to democracy that the country will come to an end if he gets elected president again," Jennings continued, as he mentioned how the media blamed Sen. JD Vance (R-OH) for bomb threats in Springfield, Ohio. The governor [2] made clear that such threats were hoaxes. "Well, if you have believed that over the weekend, then how can you not believe that the rhetoric leading up to today is not somehow responsible for the fact that this man has now survived two assassination attempts," Jennings asked.

As Jennings pointed out he is "extremely concerned for [Trump's] safety," he also noted he has "no level of confidence and anybody is prepared to do it" when it comes to the need for the nation to "calm down."

That was when host Rahel Solomon tried to cut in, claiming "but the rhetoric is on both sides," prompting Jennings to become even more passionate in his remarks.

"They have tried to kill this man twice. Okay? He got shot in the ear, and this guy was sitting up sharp outside of a golf course to try to kill him this weekend. And I know, after something like this happens, it's very fashionable to talk about rhetoric on both sides. Donald Trump is the target. Okay? He is the current target. And it's happening and it's happened again," Jennings reminded.

He also called on a discussion about losing elections, especially how Democrats and their rhetoric about Trump. "What I want Democrats to do, honestly, is to say, it's okay. Like, if Donald Trump wins, democracy will not end. The Constitution will not end. We're not going to live in a dictatorship. There will not be a bloodbath. All the things they say that are totally fabricated, to me, it would be a good day to stop doing that," Jennings offered.

It was an argument he stressed again later in the segment, after speaking about how "we have a culture of fear in politics." Thus, Jennings added, "the most important thing that could possibly happen, in my opinion, is for everybody to agree, especially Democrats that the country is not going to be irreparably damaged if Democrats lose that where Constitution is not going to go away, democracy is not going to come to an end."

Jennings also once more reminded viewers of the false claims that Democrats have made, should Trump be elected again. "There will be no [3]bloodbath. There will be [4]no dictatorship on day one, which they all say all day long on this network and others. If everyone could just agree that that kind of hyperbolic statement will not take place anymore and that it's not been true every time it's been said, that would be a step in the right direction."

Towards the end of the segment, Jennings also focused on worries for Trump, as he noted that he's "very concerned about Trump's safety. I mean, he- obviously, if he goes outside, he is in danger, and I don't know what to do about it."

I'm not interested in "the rhetoric on both sides" today. Trump is the target. He's survived two assassination attempts. He's in danger and it's probably too late to de-radicalize everyone who thinks the country will end if he wins. 1.1.16 NAACP Poll Is Brutal for Kamala (2024-09-16 22:48)

The tweet from The Hill sounded ominous: an NAACP poll showed that black voters are more enthused to vote in 2024 than in 2008. However, it only takes about three seconds to know that's facially untrue. Kamala Harris isn't Barack Obama. Harris isn't leading in the battleground polls since we know the Trump vote is underestimated—she's nowhere near where she needs to be to offset that polling conundrum. Obama had political skills and could efficiently deliver a message; it resonated. Harris is a cackling idiot who never answers the question. Obama was excellent in interviews, while Harris is a trainwreck from East Palestine, Ohio.

One could argue that the framing done by liberal outlets on this poll is insulting to voters, especially nonwhite voters, as it's an unnecessary 'what they meant to say' sort of spin to counter the heinous polling Harris is generating right now. [1]Here's how the Hill framed this poll:

Black voters, buoyed by Kamala Harris, more excited to vote in 2024 than in 2008: Poll [2]<https://t.co/3COY4X60HI>— The Hill (@thehill) [3]September 15, 2024

A majority of Black voters are just as excited or more this year as in 2008, when then-Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.) became the first Black president, according to new polling.

A survey from the NAACP, in partnership with HIT Strategies and Hart Research, found that 78 percent of Black voters feel the same sense of excitement as when Obama first ran, with 56 percent being more excited now than in 2008.

Fifty-one percent of Black voters said they would cast their ballots for Harris if the election were held today. Only 27 percent said the same of former President Trump.

But gender and generational disparities persist among Black voters.

While 79 percent of women over the age of 50 said they would vote for Harris, 66 percent of men over 50 said the same. Only 56 percent of voters aged 18-49 said the same.

And then, Ryan Girdusky decided to go to the source, and it's a disaster for Harris:

So I read this poll and it's actually a disaster for Kamala Harris.

Obama won over 95 % of the black vote.

The NAACP has Kamala winning 63 % of the black vote, including only 49 % of black men under 50. [4]<https://t.co/KO145tLeWs> [5]pic.twitter.com/W20a6gX2zj— Ryan James Girdusky (@RyanGirdusky) [6]September 15, 2024

Newsweek did mention how the NAACP [7]doesn't bode well, though it wasn't as specific as Girdusky. It only noted many lines down that Harris is polling behind past Democratic candidates.

1.1.17 What I did during the Holidays (2024-09-17 22:22)

Daily writing prompt

How do you celebrate holidays?

[1]View all responses

This is my first writing prompt. In the 1980s and 1990s, holidays were reunions with 4 nuclear families with cousins and aunts / uncles and grandparents. My grandma would invite me to her house or my uncle would invite our family over to their house with 3 or 4 other nuclear families. The men watched national football league (Greenbay Packers with Bret Farve) and drank Coors or Pabst Blue Ribbon beer. They would tell stories about their health. Then I had a birthday party for halloween where mom's friends were nurses or the Hartmons (David Hartmon, age 39, Brian Hartmon age 37) would spend the night and play Nintendo 64, Saturn, Dreamcast, or Gamecube with me. I would watch Halloween (1979), The Horror of Dracula (1958), The Devil's Bride (1963), Sleepy Hollow (1999), Taste the Blood of Dracula, The Thing (1950), Curse of the Demon (1950) or Dracula Prince of Darkness. (1962) We would decorate the house with pumpkins and department 56 halloween houses and german nutcrackers.

At Christmas, I would open presents under a Christmas tree and some years with a Christmas train. In my childhood, I went to a old Redeemer Lutheran church in Burkhardt, Wisconsin to celebrate with mom's pastor. Later I would open presents under a christmas tree, and watch youtube or movies like Ben Hur, A Christmas Carol (1984), A Christmas carol (1938), A Christmas Carol (1951) . Shop Around the Corner, White Christmas, Holiday Inn. There is also german santa clause nutcrackers and wreaths.

During Easter, I would find the basket with a gift inside and watch Ben Hur (1959) or The Ten Commandments, and always Easter Parade (1944). All these movies were on Turner Classic Movies, but over time I bought DVDs and Blurays. There is also Easter bunny nutcrackers.

1.1.18 Share a lesson you wish you had learned earlier in life. (2024-09-17 23:14)

<https://hkh.xrd.mybluehost.me/go-back-talk-to-my-younger-self/>

I went to a trade school earlier in my life in 2004 after high school up until 2007 at WITC New Richmond and Chippewa Valley Technical College I tried Electrician associate degree, but after the Algebra and flunking Electrician in 2nd quarter, I went into Industrial Networking with the multimeters and soldering motherboards and making Cat 3e RJ-45 cable and typing source code C++ into Visual Basic/Visual Studio. some students were taking mechanics or learning business administration. I knew I would fail, because I was failing at Electrician so I needed a Management information systems Business administration like industrial networking administrations. I couldn't see myself getting through college. I went to Rasmussen University after i flunked Chippewa Valley Technical college in River Falls Wisconsin and then WITC New Richmond. I wasn't good socially or with women. Women are just too crazy even then in 2004! I had no girlfriend for 40 years. ,Unless I had a stroke in my mid-20s. so point is I was at two trade schools. Then I got my BS in project management in business administration after 11 years driving to school, getting tutoring from college or spending most of the week on the school's online message board and typing 10-12 pages a week in Microsoft Word. Its so easy to get Fs in college if you slack just a little. To get that BS i had to be serious for 11 years.

I was on okcupid and eharmory and plentyoffish since 2005 and no woman were interested in me so I dated once in 2005 at a Hudson Wisconsin coffee shop with Nikki or Nicole. Nikki or Nicole was in college taking chemistry to become a scientist and didn't like my JPEG slideshow off my Playstation Portable of my house and hobbies. In 2012, Plentyoffish just banned me for messaging several women. The women wanted rich $100000 salary, tall, intelligent white men, and banned me. In the 2000s, those dating services were free. I have desktop screenshots of those 2000s dating sites logged in, but i have yet to upload them. The good guys were marrying from 2008-2014 my age. Since I'm 40, I know some divorced boy scouts already.

1.1.19 Anyone Notice What Was Odd About the First Biden Cabinet Meeting in 11 Months? (2024-09-22 18:24)

With Joe Biden no longer running, another Trump assassination attempt, and Election Day within weeks, the Biden administration is preparing for their political funeral by holding its first cabinet meeting in almost a year. But there was something unusual about this gathering: First Lady Jill Biden at the head of the table. It reverts to an old question about this presidency: who's in charge?

And would it shock you that CNN would frame the meeting like this as if this were anything but normal? Of course, Jill being at this meeting is buried toward the end. What is likely accurate, and it's not shocking, is that "President" Joe Biden wants his incompetent crew to go into hyperdrive [1]in enacting his agenda as his presidency ends. Everyone does that:

BREAKING: The White House just held its first cabinet meeting in 11 months

President Joe Biden will instruct Cabinet members Friday to "sprint to the finish," a White House official said, as he looks to burnish legacy items while ensuring as much of his agenda is implemented before a potential second Trump presidency.

"He will direct his Cabinet to get as much work done as possible – whether that is moving funding out the door, announcing new programs or policies or delivering on programs and policies we have already announced," the official said.

At Friday's meeting, first lady Dr. Jill Biden will share an update on a White House women's health research initiative, the first time she's participated in a such a session. Previous first ladies have attended their husband's Cabinet meetings.

"The president will direct his Cabinet to get to work and make the next four months as productive as any other period in our administration," the official said. "Much of the Cabinet has been with President Biden since Day One and this meeting will be an opportunity for all of them to assess the enormous progress they have made together and game out how they will continue to make history in the remaining months of the Biden-Harris administration."

At no point do the Articles of the Constitution state that the first lady may sit in for the President when he cannot fulfill his duties. In fact, article II section 1 explicitly states the vice president has that responsibility. [6]pic.twitter.com/YmrqRHwM4G— The Redheaded libertarian (@TRHLOfficial) [7]September 20, 2024

1.1.20 JD Vance Delivered Another Masterclass in Obliterating the Media (2024-09-22 18:25)

It got buried because Donald Trump was the victim of another attempted assassination on the same day. Still, Sen. JD Vance (R-OH) took CNN's Dana Bash to the cleaners about the situation in Springfield, Ohio. He took the liberal narrative about the town and ran it over with a tank. He knows the game—and executed another masterclass in outmaneuvering the establishment press. Bash was clearly irritated that she couldn't land any punches, and it was becoming clear that Vance might be entering an area where his invitation to this network might be cut down significantly or outright rejected if he kept embarrassing the network's hosts in this manner.

Bash tried to suggest Vance and Donald Trump were responsible for the bomb threats against the town. We now know that these threats were hoaxes sent by unhinged jokers overseas, though the media was sure it was the fault of the 2024 Republican ticket. At the time and during this interview, Vance denounced the violence. Still, the Ohio Republican said, rightly, that we can do both things: reject the violence being directed at the town and talk about Joe Biden and Kamala Harris' failed immigration policies, specifically the abuse in issuing temporary protected status.

Not sure if CNN is going to keep inviting JD Vance on as he always seems to run circles around their "journalists." After spending 5 mins trying to blame him for reported threats in Springfield, Ohio, Vance leaves [1]@DanaBashCNN stammering that of course she would be treating... [2]pic.twitter.com/6HR1PzJC1n— Tom Elliott (@tomselliott) [3]September 15, 2024

I can't stop watching this. Dana Bash jerking her head around like a bird because her target didn't accept her Narrative's premise. Vance rejects the premises. Then he attacks the premises. Just beautiful. [4]pic.twitter.com/gsnOV4hiwJ— Oilfield Rando (@Oilfield_Rando) [5]September 15, 2024

The CNN host interrupted Vance, who took the combative interview in stride. You know that Bash was cornered when she pressed Vance, a US Senator from Ohio, on whether he visited Springfield. When Vance said yes, he'd been there more than 100 times and knew the community. Bash wondered if he had recently as if that mattered. We know one thing is true: Bash and CNN probably never set foot within 1000 miles of Springfield until they thought they could use it to attack the Republicans.

The fact that memes and now remixed songs are coming from Trump's remarks about "eating the dogs" and "eating the cats" shows the media cannot control this story. They cannot weaponize it, and it drives them nuts. A lot of it has to do with the fact that everyone knows the media has no integrity. They lie—and we know CNN is unabashedly anti-Trump.

Cope and seethe, CNN.

All Vance did was bring up concerns from his constituents. He admitted that he'd ignore it if it were one or two people. It's not that, though—and now it seems to be spreading to nearby Columbus and Dayton.

With the media taking buckshot to the face on that narrative, why should we discount the Springfield city manager who made the allegations about pets being eaten back in March or the numerous eyewitness accounts?

Springfield, Ohio resident, Mark Sanders, tells Primetime how the influx of Haitian migrants has displaced lifelong residents and how they're being financially preyed upon. 1.1.21 Can Harris's Cynical, Run-Out-the Clock Campaign Succeed? (2024-09-22 18:26)

Cynically running out the clock has been the overarching principle of the entire abbreviated 105-day presidential campaign of Vice President Kamala Harris – ever since President Joe Biden, at the 11th hour, dropped out in July.

Harris seems unwilling or unable to answer any impromptu question that she has not been previously prepped for. Her answers at the debate were memorized and canned. They never addressed the questions asked.

Her single, 11-minute post-debate Philadelphia interview was a shipwreck of dodging and dissimulating – even though the host was sympathetically left-wing.

Even socialist Bernie Sanders pointed out that for Harris to get elected, she must temporarily disown her lifelong leftist credentials.

As vice president, she must further deny co-ownership of the unpopular record of the Biden-Harris administration.

Left unstated is that whether she wins the presidency – or loses it and continues as vice president for another three months – nonetheless she will inevitably revert back to her hard-core, lifelong leftist beliefs.

In addition, Harris has reconstructed her privileged upbringing as a child of two PhDs, living in a posh Montreal neighborhood into a struggling, middle-class Oakland childhood.

How can she stage such a complete makeover – and contemptuously count on the voting public to be so easily deceived?

She avoids all news conferences, one-on-one nationally broadcast interviews, and town halls. And like Biden, she will debate only on leftist venues with impartial pro-Harris moderators.

When asked to provide the details of her past responsibility for the open border, inflationary economy, spiraling crime, attacks on fossil fuels, and collapsing foreign policy, Harris smiles, makes hand gestures, and dodges. She changes the subject to her empathetic personality, her "joy" campaign, and her iconic profile as a supposedly dynamic black woman.

When pressed, Harris outsources the task of squaring her hypocrisies and subterfuges to the stonewalling campaign, Democratic surrogates – and the media.

Harris is also certainly not running on her demonstrable experience, vision, or intelligence as much as she is not Trump (or, for that matter, her former partner, Biden).

To make that distinction stark, Harris must demonize and bait Trump nonstop and make the country fear him.

So, she paints Trump as a racist and violent insurrectionist, not a former president whose four-year term saw a superior foreign policy, economy, border, and security than during the Biden-Harris term.

Instead, Harris has repeatedly claimed Trump is a dictator and a threat to democracy – as if he had politically weaponized the FBI, CIA, DOJ, or IRS as had former President Barack Obama and Biden.

Trump as Hitler has become a staple Democrat smear for the past decade.

That vicious caricature is so entrenched that major Democratic figures assume it's OK to joke about, or seriously call for, Trump's demise.

So, Harris's current prominent advisor David Plouffe years ago warned the nation that "it is not enough to simply beat Trump. He must be destroyed thoroughly. His kind must not rise again."

Just last year, Rep. Dan Goldman, D-NY, claimed that Trump "is destructive to our democracy, and he has to be, he has to be eliminated."

Advertisement

Even after an assassin sought to kill Trump last week, House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries declared, "Extreme MAGA Republicans are the party of a national abortion ban and Trump's Project 2025. We must stop them."

Harris's dehumanizing of Trump, outsourcing the campaign to the media, avoiding all public dialogue, and temporarily reinventing one's politics and biography have taken a toll on the country.

Harris was coronated the Democratic candidate without ever entering a primary or winning a single delegate by vote. Some 14 million Democrat primary voters were reduced to irrelevancy.

Like the 2020 Biden campaign, Harris has nationalized a new kind of cynical campaign in which leftist candidates seek for a few months to deceive the public into thinking they are centrist and moderate – until elected.

Avoiding all cross-examination and outsourcing the campaign to the obsequious media is now the new norm.

Most news stories deemed unhelpful to Harris – the left-wing, pro-Harris politics of the recent would-be Trump assassin, the distortion that dozens of bomb threats were called in against Springfield schools by Trump supporters when most, if not all, were perpetrated by foreign actors, or prominent Democrats before and after the recent assassination attempt blaming Trump for being the target of an assassin – are suppressed by the media.

The recent two foiled assassination attempts on Trump logically follow a near-decade pattern of trying to destroy rather than outvote him.

The Russian collusion hoax, the laptop disinformation con, the two impeachments, the effort to remove Trump from some 16 state ballots, and the attempt to jail and bankrupt Trump through five criminal and civil "lawfare" indictments and suits also led to the current hateful climate of Trump assassination attempts.

Harris thinks her delays, deceptions, and vilifications for the next 47 days will ensure her victory.

But if so, it will be because she, her stealth campaign, and her self-proclaimed guardians of democracy have been willing to systematically destroy it.

1.1.22 Tim Walz Roasted for Major Slip Up (2024-09-22 18:28)

Democrat vice presidential nominee Gov. Tim Walz (D-Minn) let slip the truth behind the Biden-Harris Administration—and the agenda he’s been touting since becoming Vice President Kamala Harris’ running mate.

During a campaign stop in Pennsylvania, Walz declared that America cannot “afford four more years of this.”

While criticizing former President Donald Trump’s running mate, Sen. JD Vance (R-OH), Walz promised to bring Harris home, claiming Vance and Trump want to “instill fear.”

“They want to tell you that [you should] just get over it; it’s a fact of life. This is the way it is,” he said. “[Harris] simply has said it doesn’t have to be this way. It doesn’t have to be this way. We can’t afford four more years of this.”

Tim Walz: “We can’t afford four more years of this.”

While it is unclear what Walz was referring to when he said the U.S. can’t “afford four more years,” social media was in a frenzy pointing to obvious issues the Biden-Harris Administration has caused.

(@CoClarified) [5]September 21, 2024

Thanks to Bidenomics, prices are up 17.3 percent, with food prices increasing 20.2 percent. Rent costs are up 19 percent, and electricity costs are up 25 percent.

Since January 2021, when President Joe Biden first took office, the price of ground beef shot up [6]26 percent. The recent Consumer Price Index (CPI) data found that overall grocery items increased by 22 percent when Trump left the White House.

In addition, illegal immigration has swept through the country, destroying American communities and taking innocent lives.

Due to Biden and Harris' policies, the United States is also on the brink of WWIII. Hundreds of millions of dollars have gone toward foreign countries peddling war and corruption, while the U.S.'s own border has not been helped.

So, yes, Walz, you're right. America cannot afford to spend another four years under a Harris Administration.

1.1.23 Kamala Harris And Oprah Winfrey's Delusional Campaign Telethon (2024-09-22 18:30)

I've never understood the appeal of Oprah Winfrey. She's always struck me as a giant fraud, the kind of person who will smile and hug when the cameras are on but an absolute oblivious nightmare when the public is not looking. Note that I didn't say mean; I don't know if she's mean, but she sure as hell seems to have zero self-awareness regarding her surroundings.

That's how she could do a show, back when she did shows, about her "favorite things," and it'd be full of things you'd have to mortgage your house to afford. Sure, it's great that she could be the world's most expensive whatever it is, but she seemed to notice no one, not her, could too.

It's the ultimate "Let them eat cake" mentality.

Kamala Harris, on the other hand, is just the opposite. From all reports, she is an absolute nightmare to work for. As Vice President, [1]her staff had more turnover than a [2]Suzuki Samurai.

Oprah actually grew up poor, and Kamala grew up really well-off, no matter how many times she tried to claim she was "middle-class." Do you know anyone whose family struggled with two parents who had Ph.D.s? Even after they divorced, high pay and job security were there waiting for both of them. Why she claims to have grown up in Oakland when she grew up in Berkeley and Montreal is a testament to her feeling the need to hide her privilege from Democratic Party voters. It's why she claims to have worked at a McDonald's, when no single human being has ever claimed to remember her there or has any proof that it has ever happened.

When your boss is Joe Biden, you learn that you can lie about your biography with impunity because even when you're caught, no one bothers reporting on it.

One thing Kamala Harris and Oprah Winfrey have in common is they are so insulated from the real world and even distant memories of when they weren't part of the wealthy elite that they can't be related to normal people. It's probably been 50 or more years since Oprah has had to shower from work rather than for it. Unless you count how Kamala got her first political job from Willie Brown, she likely never has had to.

So, when the two of them got together to "help" Kamala's presidential campaign, it made perfect sense that it would be a completely out-of-touch trainwreck.

A friend who works in crisis management once told me about the time a client, a long-dead singer who was in the midst of a career-destroying crisis, and an old, very famous actor (also now dead) decided they would address the singer's scandal by doing a live television interview with each other. While it would have been an all-time spectacular mess, especially if you knew the names, the crisis management firm talked them out of it over several hours. It was the best money either of them had ever spent.

There was no firm to talk Kamala and Oprah out of what they did.

It was a 90-minute joke of a campaign event, filled with filthy rich celebrities and screened audience members (who were all donors, by the way) pretending they weren't rehearsed. You could tell if it was fake by how the studio audience chosen to recite questions were wearing microphones that were run up under shirts, not handheld mics someone had randomly chosen would be given.

When not tossing word salads and not answering basic questions about things as simple as how she plans on bringing down costs she helped raise, the multimillionaire and the multibillionaire spent a lot of time talking to Hollywood celebrities. The collective net worth of Julia Roberts, Ben Stiller, Jennifer Lopez, Bryan Cranston, Chris Rock, Meryl Streep, and the rest likely rival Oprah's. Kamala Harris interacts more with them than she does with the audience.

Why? Because she and Oprah think they can "celebrity" her way into office. Barack Obama did it; why not Kamala?

However, Obama, while he was a "celebrity candidate," also spoke about policies. He lied about them – if you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor, anyone? – but he at least offered them up. Kamala couldn't give you a straight answer if you asked her what time it was; instead, she would lecture you about time zones and even conduct a brain-damaged exploration of the concept of time while mispronouncing basic words.

The Vice President has no idea how to communicate with real people because she hasn't had to in decades. To win an election in California, you have to suck up to the wealthy donor class. Do that, and you're most of the way to winning the Democratic Party's nomination. Land that, and you're in. You'll run against another Democrat, usually, but if you can't out-box-check them on the left-wing victimhood food pyramid, you're as good as elected.

President is different – you have to appeal to real people, normal people. Kamala has never had to before and she has no idea how to do it. Oprah thinks she does because she’s been made rich by preaching to people on television. But just like the church Oprah belonged to for decades, then claimed to have not noticed the casual racism of (she was a member of Jeremiah Wright’s church with Barack and Michelle Obama, who also missed all the racism), the world she inhabits is unrelatable to most people. And thank God for that.

Weirdly, even though he’s been rich his whole life, Donald Trump actually can relate to normal people. The poll of Teamsters members shows just how connect they feel to him. There is no such corollary for Harris. The closest would be empty-nested, wealthy, white suburban women who have nothing to do all day except sip chardonnay and convince themselves they know best how everyone else should live. You know, Oprah’s old viewers.

Those two celebrities I referenced trying to hold a televised interview to save one of their careers had people they paid to tell them “no” when needed. Oprah Winfrey and Kamala Harris have no such people around them. And it showed in that “town hall.”

But what it really showed was how out-of-touch with normal people Kamala Harris truly is and how disinterested in even talking with them she is when Julia Roberts is available.

Life is about priorities, and you will learn everything you need to know about someone by watching what they do when they think they’re in safe company, which Harris even was. For that reason, I am grateful for Oprah Winfrey—but only for today.

1.1.24 How Nebraska Could Change the Outcome of the Election (2024-09-22 18:34)

Nebraska has renewed efforts to make it a winner-takes-all electoral votes state after Gov. Jim Pillen (R-NE) and Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) met with more than 20 Republican state senators to discuss changing the state’s electoral college votes.

Nebraska and Maine are the only states that do not follow the winner-take-all system for electoral votes. Instead, it gives two electoral votes based on the statewide result and votes allocated by who wins certain congressional districts. In Nebraska, two of the five electoral votes are awarded to the candidate who wins the most votes statewide, while the other three go to the winners of each of the state's three congressional districts.

In recent months, the red state has attempted to secure a move that would award former President Donald Trump an extra electoral college vote in what will be a tight race. The extra vote could secure the election for the 45th president.

Meanwhile, Maine Democrats have tried to counteract the Nebraska legislature's move. However, it appears Democrats missed the deadline.

"I want the law changed. I've made no qualms about it," Graham said. "They were open-minded. I said: 'Listen, it's your decision to make. It comes down to one electoral vote. I want you to understand what that one vote would mean.'"

With the 2024 race looking to be tight, each electoral vote will be critical for the presidential candidates. Getting 270 delegates for either candidate will come down to just a few states.

Nebraska Sen. Merv Riepe (R-NEB) said he spoke to Trump, who supported changing the law.

Earlier this year, Gov. Jim Pillen (R-NEB) and Trump endorsed a proposal to change the state's Electoral College to a winner-take-all system. Ultimately, it was struck down.

However, Pillen announced efforts to call for a special legislative session that would reconsider the proposal if the GOP had 33 votes to make the change.

Although Nebraska is predominantly a Republican state, its 2nd Congressional District, which surrounds Omaha, has historically gone to Democrats, including former President Obama in 2008 and President Joe Biden in 2020.

If the law were to be changed, and Vice President Kamala Harris wins Michigan, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania. In contrast, Trump wins North Carolina, Georgia, Arizona, and Nevada, they would tie at 269 electoral votes. However, if the change does not happen, and the same election results as explained above occur, and she takes Omaha, Harris would secure enough votes to be the next president, 270-268.

1.1.25 Illegal Aliens Arrested for Trying to Steal From Hurricane Victims in Eastern TN (2024-09-30 22:02)

In Washington County, Tennessee, a gang of illegal aliens decided to do the unthinkable amid the chaotic conditions that have befallen the area due to Hurricane Helene. They got busted, robbing stranded residents trapped due to heavy rains and catastrophic flooding. Over 100 people have died, with many expected to be without access to water or electricity for weeks.

Based on reports, Sheriff Keith Sexton and his deputies arrested eight men on September 28. They were due in court today and held on $20,000 bond:

Meanwhile, we shouldn't expect much from the Biden administration. Kamala has been dragging her feet, taking staged photos to make it seem like she's engaged with the situation. Joe Biden likely is getting this natural disaster and the Israeli strikes in Yemen mixed up. These clowns did nothing when there was a toxic train derailment in East Palestine, Ohio. And we're more than blasé when Maui was engulfed in the deadliest wildfire in a century. This is rapidly becoming the Biden-Harris Katrina moment.

1.1.26 Israeli Forces Have Invaded Lebanon (2024-09-30 22:04)

We have reports that Israeli forces have invaded Lebanon. It was a military operation many observers foresaw even in the immediate stages of the ground war in Gaza after the October 7 attacks. The rocket attacks from Hezbollah have led to an internal displacement crisis within Israel.

The terror group planned a massive barrage that targeted Tel Aviv that was only disrupted at the last minute by a massive airstrike by Israeli forces. They didn't get all the munitions but severely crippled what could have been a more deadly attack. For months, it was assumed that at some point, Israel would have to invade Lebanon. It couldn't come at a better time: the terror group's entire leadership was decapitated in a massive airstrike last week. Hassan Nasrallah and his minions were turned into an ashtray, and his replacement was killed hours after he assumed control of the terror group.

The operation doesn't seem to be as aggressive as Israel's sloppy 2006 incursion or its invasion from 1982. The ground operations come after Israel conducted limited cross-border raids for intelligence purposes. The primary goal is overrun Hezbollah positions from which they've launched endless rocket attacks for months (via [10]NY Post):

The Israeli military has closed a stretch of northern Israel along the Lebanese border — as US officials reported that the Jewish state is preparing for an “imminent” invasion of southern Lebanon to take out Hezbollah outposts.

By Monday night, Israel's Northern Command head, Maj. Gen. Ori Gordin, ordered a section of Israel's northern district closed to all civilians, according to the Times of Israel.

The Jewish state told the Biden administration Monday that a limited incursion into southern Lebanon to take out Hezbollah's terror infrastructure is ready to begin at any moment, US officials told the Washington Post.

The goal is to ensure Hezbollah no longer can continue its daily missile strikes on northern Israel, which have caused tens of thousands to evacuate the area since Oct. 8.

The ground operation follows intelligence raids by special operations troops that have been carried out over several months, the Wall Street Journal reports.

Daily writing prompt

What have you been putting off doing? Why?

[1]View all responses

I always wanted to visit a foreign country, but I put off doing it since it costs $3300 to travel there and if I'm lucky, Donald Trump will be president in 2025. You know because the southern border is horrible, terrible inflation, illegal aliens, Democrats lost Afghanistan war last year with thousands of military equipment lost (all Biden's /Democrats fault) , Biden's dementia. Democrats are still leading for some reason.

I wanted to renounce to Australia due to late 2020s/early 2030s nuclear family problems and long term employment troubles (it seems managers ask minimum wage when they employ me and want me to be homeless and hungry without friendships or relationships). I doubt Australia is this evil. I guess I had government payments off medicaid and other generous payments so i have somewhere to call home.

1.2.2 Understanding the Orthodox Christian worldview motivating Vladimir Putin in war with Ukraine (2024-10-02 23:11)

It seems a good, if not vital, moment to try and look beyond the narrow analysis of the dreadful war in Ukraine provided by the vast majority of our politicians and mainstream media, given the current conflation of related and significant events all happening around the same time.

Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky is currently visiting the US to drum up further military support for his beleaguered country – including being able to fire western missiles deep into Russia – while Russian President Vladimir Putin is again warning that the nuclear option is not off the table if Russia feels threatened enough, and Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump is saying that if he becomes the next US President he will end the war in Ukraine.

Ten years or so ago, a popular documentary film on prime-time Russian television drew attention to the lessons for Russia about the fall of Byzantium. It was from Byzantium that missionaries had brought the Orthodox faith to Russia in the 10th century, and it was to the Byzantine Emperors that the Tsars of Russia had traced their line of descent, all the way back to Constantine the Great.

The film The Fall of an Empire: The Lessons of Byzantium claimed that the foundations of the modern West's banking system derive from the Fourth Crusade's loot of Constantinople in 1204, and also that a significant factor in the Empire's final collapse had been its impoverishment by rapacious Western oligarchs through aggressive exploitation of trade concessions granted to them in 1082 by a cash-strapped Byzantine Emperor.

Constantinople's sack in 1204 remains firmly embedded in the consciousness of the Orthodox East, partly because it so weakened Byzantium to the point that its final collapse became inevitable, causing Christendom's centre of gravity to shift westward, but also because of the barbaric savagery of the Crusaders, who looted their way across Constantinople in a manner even the Vandals and Goths would have found unpalatable.

Although the Byzantines recaptured Constantinople from the Crusaders in 1261, the West's collective failure to honour the agreement they made with the Byzantines at the Council of Florence in 1449, and to provide them with military assistance against the advancing armies of Mehmet the Conqueror, was a further contributory factor in Constantinople's final fall to the Ottomans in 1453.

A particular source of scandal for the Orthodox East is that the Crusaders had been engaged in a Holy War. The concept of Holy War has never really been accepted by the Orthodox East, which is why Patriarch Kyrill's support for the Russian invasion of Ukraine is so controversial within the Orthodox world.

In the West, however, since at least the time of St Augustine and his Just War Theory, later expanded on by St Thomas Aquinas in Summa Theologica, there has long been an acceptance that there are circumstances in which war can be justified, one example of which is if the war is to be fought for the "common good".

The Byzantines avoided war as much as they possibly could, relying on diplomacy and the use of bribery instead, in order to achieve their foreign policy objectives. However, they did also accept that there are circumstances in which the oikoumene – the ordered hierarchy of subordinate, Orthodox Christian states bound by a common allegiance to the Emperor of Byzantium – might use armed force in order to protect the integrity of its people.

Importantly, as far as the Byzantines were concerned, the Empire existed not for the purposes of material profit, or for political and social “progress”, but rather to provide the basic material conditions within which the Emperor’s subjects could pursue their one, over-riding duty and purpose in life – the quest for deification (theosis), or union with God. This quest required that a man be able to master himself to the extent that he ceased to be a creature of appetite.

The Byzantines strongly believed that one of the Emperor’s sacred duties was to act as the katechon, “the one who withholds” (2 Thessalonians 2: 6-7), a biblical concept developed by the Byzantines into a political philosophy, according to which the Emperor’s most sacred duty was to act as a restraint on the rise of the Antichrist. Any threat to the existence of the Empire, so long as the Empire was led by an Emperor mindful of his duty to act as a katechon, raised, in the view of the Byzantines, the possibility of the victory of the Antichrist.

Russian President Vladimir Putin is regarded by some in the Orthodox world as a 21st-century katechon, a view of Putin that is obviously very different to the one that prevails in decision-making circles in the West and among our media.

Despite recent claims in various Western press outlets that Putin dabbles in the occult, and likes to discuss nuclear weapons policy with Mongolian shamans – as described in a recent story by UK media The Times – it is an undeniable fact that Putin is a practicing Russian Orthodox Christian, who regularly attends the Divine Liturgy, and takes guidance from Orthodox spiritual directors, known as starets, as well as from his confessor Father Tikhon Shevkunov, who directed the film The Fall of an Empire.

In much the same way that many in the Orthodox world believe that, in order to weaken the Byzantine Empire – and maximise profit – the late medieval West instigated the separation of Serbia and Bulgaria from the Empire, so too, in around 2004, the great Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn warned Vladimir Putin that the US-led, neo-liberal West would set about Russia’s dismemberment by encouraging its “Balkanisation”.

Solzhenitsyn said that this policy would be justified in the name of liberal “progress” – an encouragement of the “rights” of the constituent parts of the Russian Empire to exercise the principle of self determination, and break away from Russia. In actual fact, some would argue, that dismemberment of Russia would have nothing to do with high moral principle, and everything to do with weakening Russia’s sovereignty in order to open it up to commercial exploitation by outside interests.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn, initially an atheist and later a Russian Orthodox Christian, stands within the “Slavophil” tradition of Russian intellectuals – a core belief of this tradition being that the Russian people are a Chosen People, with a unique destiny to act as a catalyst for the spiritual transformation of the world. Much of the reason for this ancient belief derives from the “Russian situation” on a boundary between East and West – long regarded as a necessary preliminary for the emergence of a new civilisation.

“Sophisticated” people in the West, of course, scoff at the idea of a people having a unique, God-given destiny, but plenty of the greatest intellectuals produced by Russia, including, for example, FM Dostoevsky and Vladimir Soloviev, fully subscribed to such a view of Russia as the bearer of a messianic mission.

If a people believe that they are descended from God, and not so much from apes, then it is not surprising perhaps if they believe that they have a God-given destiny to fulfil in life.

The Slavophiles of the nineteenth century were especially exercised with the problem of how best to respond to the Enlightenment-conditioned ideas that began to penetrate Russia from the West in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

They firmly believed that the Russian Orthodox faith is a purer, spiritually superior interpretation of Christianity than Westernised versions, and that Russia, which even at the end of the 19th century had not yet fully industrialised, was in a strong position. This was due to its unique situation as a Christian country on the boundary between East and West, and its being in a position to learn from the mistakes made by the West during the latter’s process of rapid industrialisation, which the Slavophiles believed had led to a degradation of European character, intelligence and creativity.

[1]RELATED: Neo-liberal chaos: from the Olympics’ opening ceremony to the UK riots

The Slavophiles were not imperialists – in fact they were probably more akin to the “off-the-grid” hippy types and eco-warriors of our times. Many, if not most, were, like Alexei Khomiakov, who had served in the Imperial Guard, high-minded, country gentlemen, nourished by the ascetic traditions of their Orthodox faith, with a deep love and respect for what they saw as the exemplary character of the Russian peasantry.

The Slavophiles were absolutely determined to resist any attempt to Westernise Russia. Khomiakov, for example, was famous for wearing a kaftan when visiting his club in Moscow, rather than the Western-style frock coat that Peter the Great had ordered on the gentry as part of his efforts to Westernise and “modernise” Russia.

The Slavophil vision for Russia was of a trans-national, decentralised Russia, based around a network of village republics, rather like Gandhi’s vision for a post-independence India, all held together under the leadership of a father figure, the Tsar Autocrat, protector of the Orthodox faith, spiritually bound to the service of his people through the act of solemn anointing at his coronation.

The Slavophil vision for the world was of a universal brotherhood of man, as outlined so eloquently, for example, by Dostoevsky in his famous "Pushkin Speech".

It is said that when Solzhenitsyn met Putin in 2000, there was a meeting of minds about how best to rebuild Russia, although it is also said that Solzhenitsyn later expressed disappointment at Putin's failure to properly prioritise action to prevent impending ecological catastrophe.

Putin, for his part, was especially impressed by Solzhenitsyn's focus on what Solzhenitsyn called "The Great Catastrophe of the 1990s", which was one way of describing the fact that, following the collapse of the Soviet Union, 25 million Russians had suddenly found themselves cut off from their homeland.

The question that Solzhenitsyn believed Russians must ask themselves was, "shall our people be or nor be?" Solzhenitsyn believed that the Russian people were not so much an ethnic identity as a spiritual consciousness, and that any dismemberment of the Russian people, via, for example, the break up of the union of the Slavic people, would lead to the ultimate death of a unique spiritual consciousness – with all the negative consequences that loss would bring to the world as a whole.

In the light of all this it is not unreasonable, therefore, to understand Putin's "special operation" in Ukraine, the place where the Russian people were first united by the Christian faith, in terms of an attempt by Putin to protect Russia's particular spiritual consciousness, which Solzhenitsyn believed will wither away and die if Russia's leaders allow it to be dismembered.

The French playwright Honoré de Balzac once said that "behind every fortune there is a crime". One of the justifications for Byzantine autocracy was that it was needed to act as a check against the kind of oligarchic corruption that had helped bring about the collapse of pagan Rome.

Although the Russian aristocracy was hated by many for having allowed itself to become heavily Westernised, many Russian aristocrats only ever spoke Russian when dealing with their servants, and there was an undeniably close link between the Russian peasantry and the Tsars. It was Tsar Alexander II, for example, who had forced the emancipation of the serfs, and it was to the Tsars that the peasantry would directly appeal when they felt that their rights were being undermined by government elites in St Petersburg.

One of the themes of the campaign leading up to the US presidential election this November is widespread distrust of what President Trump has called the “Washington Swamp”, which Robert F Kennedy Jr believes has been pervaded by corporate corruption and subsequently caused innumerable harm to the physical and environmental health of the US.

At the same time, vice presidential candidate JD Vance is known to have been involved in conversations about whether or not America’s pursuit of economic growth, the cornerstone of corporate profit, really is conducive to the nation’s health.

If the Republicans win the next US presidential election, there may well emerge a strong degree of synergy between the anti-establishment policies of President Trump, Vice President Vance, John F. Kennedy Jr and President Putin, all of whom bear a deep distrust of global, oligarchic elites – the kind of elites that brought both Byzantium, in the late Medieval Era, and Russia in the 1990s, to their knees.

And the kind of elites, as some in the US are arguing, who, driven by a deluded faith in the false of gods of economic growth and human “progress”, are more than capable of bringing America to its knees.

1.2.3 JD Vance’s Catholic conversion inspired by St Augustine - and the wreckage of the modern age (2024-10-02 23:13)

The start of the 1996 film Jerry Maguire begins with our hero, the same-named sports agent played by Tom Cruise, suddenly getting an attack of morals about the way the sports management business he is in conducts itself and treats its clients, often young, impressionable sports stars.

During a long-night-of-the-soul episode, he pens a manifesto/mission statement laying out what’s wrong with the industry and what needs to change, focusing on working with fewer clients to produce more caring relationships. Then, in an even more audacious moment, he sends it (by fax) to everyone in the business.

Initially, it seems that he has become a hero – everyone praises him for speaking out and trying to improve what needs improving. But then it begins, the system pushing back: over lunch he is fired, and then one by one his own clients start to leave him and he ends up with no one, a pariah for daring to buck the status quo.

JD Vance, the newly nominated running mate for Donald Trump, recently had a similar “Jerry Maguire” moment, penning a [1]long, heartfelt and very revealing essay for Catholic journal The Lamp, detailing how and why he became a Catholic.

His explanation, titled “How I joined the resistance”, reads like a Catholic mission statement. His turn to Catholicism is shown to be inextricably caught up in, and a response to, the dreadful state of society Vance grew up surrounded by and which actually continues even when he finds himself in the higher echelons of society, where as he trains to be a top-flight lawyer he finds himself submerged in hyper competitiveness, hubris and hollow careerism.

Fortunately for Vance, and unlike Jerry Maguire, given how many people aren’t interested in Catholicism or what it has to say about the state of the world, his manifesto hasn’t caused much reaction or led to much comment.

Though it is the most read article on The Lamp website, as it should be. It’s fascinating. Any US Catholic, whether leaning Democrat or Republican, should read it to get a better understanding of the man and where he is coming from. Especially given that, as Trump’s running mate and vice president nominee, Vance now has a real chance of becoming the country’s third Catholic president in 2028 (if Donald Trump wins, he can only serve one term up to 2028).

Vance describes how he grew up with religion in the background thanks to his beloved grandmother who took care of him much of the time – though he highlights how much she mistrusted Catholicism, finding its liturgy and habits particularly peculiar – and notes that his “least favourite” passage from Scripture was Numbers 14:18: “The LORD is slow to anger, abounding in love and forgiving sin and rebellion. Yet he does not leave the guilty unpunished; he punishes the children for the sin of the parents to the third and fourth generation.”

He explains that previously he took this as “evidence of a vengeful, irrational God”, helping to drive him away from religion. But now, he says, he reads it very differently, because “who could look at the statistics on what our early twenty-first century culture and politics had wrought—the misery, the rising suicide rates, the ‘deaths of despair’ in the richest country on earth, and doubt that the sins of parents had any effect on their children?”

He goes on to say that, as a result, the words of Saint Augustine “echoed from a millennium and a half earlier, articulating a truth I had felt for a long time but hadn’t spoken”.

Vance cites a passage from City of God, which he had to study at college, in which Augustine summarises the decadent ways of Rome’s ruling class, the saintly scholar writing his critique from the perspective of that same debauched class:

“This is our concern, that every man be able to increase his wealth so as to supply his daily prodigalities, and so that the powerful may subject the weak for their own purposes. Let the poor court the rich for a living, and that under their protection they may enjoy a sluggish tranquillity; and let the rich abuse the poor as their dependants, to minister to their pride. Let the people applaud not those who protect their interests, but those who provide them with pleasure. Let no severe duty be commanded, no impurity forbidden. Let kings estimate their prosperity, not by the righteousness, but by the servility of their subjects. Let the provinces stand loyal to the kings, not as moral guides, but as lords of their possessions and purveyors of their pleasures; not with a hearty reverence, but a crooked and servile fear...”

The passage goes on, with St Augustine giving many more examples of folly and a broken society, leaving one hard pushed not to agree with Vance’s summation that:

“It was the best criticism of our modern age I’d ever read. A society oriented entirely towards consumption and pleasure, spurning duty and virtue.”

Vance notes that at the same time he read St Augustine, his friend Oren Cass published a book “arguing that American policy makers had focused far too much on promoting consumption as opposed to productivity, or some other measure of wellbeing”.

His friend’s book – like Jerry Maguire’s attempt at offering some home truths – was not well received, Vance points out, being heavily criticised for “daring to push policies that might lower consumption” and upset the status quo.

This condemnation left Vance bemused, he says, noting that “If people die sooner in the midst of historic levels of consumption, then perhaps our focus on consumption is misguided”.

And it was this revelation, Vance explains, “that ultimately led not just to Christianity, but to Catholicism...I slowly began to see Catholicism as the closest expression of [my grandmother’s] kind of Christianity: obsessed with virtue, but cognisant of the fact that virtue is formed in the context of a broader community; sympathetic with the meek and poor of the world without treating them primarily as victims; protective of children and families and with the things necessary to ensure they thrive. And above all: a faith centred around a Christ who demands perfection of us even as He loves unconditionally and forgives easily.”

There is a lot more that Vance offers, including how his [2]exposure to the French Catholic philosopher René Girard also greatly influenced his journey toward Catholicism as an answer to the “madness of the crowds”.

It’s pretty searing stuff, especially to read as a non-American. It is close to nigh-on impossible for a British politician to write such a thing publicly, and to so candidly address how their religion informs their thinking and heart.

The political costs are too high – just look at what has happened to SNP politician Kate Forbes for simply being known to be an active Christian, and the Liberal Democrats’ decision to reportedly deselect parliamentary candidate David Campanaleo over his Christian beliefs. I don’t want to live in a theocracy. I am very glad we don’t have such a system dictating our ways. I don’t want to live in a Catholic integralist society either. But I still think it is impressive, and exciting, to have a figure like Vance on the scene, speaking about the intersection of faith, virtue and society so daringly.

If more politicians and figures of authority could manage what Vance does – or at least just be a bit more like Jerry Maguire – we might actually get somewhere in addressing the problems of today, rather than the continual posturing, often over appalling policy that, as Vance lays out in his article, is proving so destructive and causing such misery.

1.2.4 Do We Want a Constitutional Government or Not? (2024-10-07 22:37)

“The government of the United States is a definite government, confined to specific objects. It is not like the state governments, whose powers are more general. Charity is no part of the legislative duty of the government.”

“I cannot undertake to lay my finger on that article of the Constitution which granted a right to Congress of expending, on objects of benevolence, the money of their constituents.”

Sadly, the answer to the question that is the title of this column is “no,” Americans no longer want a constitutional government (at least not our current Constitution), nor do we have such. The author of both the quotes above is James Madison, the man given most credit for writing America’s Constitution. If anyone should know what the Constitution means, it’s because he wrote it. Please note his words carefully—“Charity is no part of the legislative duty of government.” Indeed, (the second quote), where is the Constitution clause giving the national government the right to spend taxpayer's money on charity? As Madison said, the states can do it; that's what the 10th Amendment authorizes. However, nothing in the Constitutionally given powers to Congress says anything about spending taxpayer money on charity. So says James Madison, the main author of our Constitution.

Republicans—most of them—have been gleefully bashing the Biden administration for being slow in responding to the needs of people in southern states due to the damages caused by Hurricane Helene. “Where is the federal government?” “They don’t care about red states,” and there is probably much truth to that. Americans now believe when there is a national catastrophe, that the feds are supposed to jump in with whatever money is necessary. Remember George W. Bush and Hurricane Katrina? He moved too slowly and was crucified for it. Charity is now a power of the national government.

Where did we get that? Certainly not from the Constitution, James Madison being our witness. But then, 99 % of what the federal government does today couldn’t be found in the Constitution if you read it until your eyeballs fell out. Washington, D.C., except in some structural matters that do not relate directly to power, pays absolutely no attention—none, zero, zilch—to what the Constitution actually says. And that applies to all three branches—Congress, the President, AND the Supreme Court.

There were reasons why our Founders did not assign charity as one of the powers of the national government. They knew history and the tendency of government to grow in power at the expense of the freedoms of the people, and they intended to try to prevent that. They also understood that charity and welfare were no business of government, and for very good reasons. And those reasons mostly have to do with the nature and object of government and what government can and cannot do effectively.

Our Founding Fathers well understood that the nationalization of government is the nationalization of force because everything the government does is by force or the threat thereof. Citizens know that paying taxes is necessary, but we don’t generally do it out of the goodness of our hearts, and most of us try to pay as little as possible. But there is this thing called the “IRS.” They don’t ask for charity, and they don’t politely request we cough up our hard-earned cash. And then say, “Oh, it’s ok if you don’t, it’s your choice.” There is force behind everything the government does.

Advertisement

And force is the very antithesis of charity. “We are going to force you to be charitable.” That is an oxymoron if ever one existed. And so, the Founders didn’t put “charity” in the Constitution. If we want the national government to force us to be charitable, which our Founders didn’t, then we need to put that in the Constitution. Otherwise, don’t ever say the United States government has a Constitutional right to provide charity for hurricane victims. Such is NOT in our Constitution.

The Founders also understood quite well that the people (especially government) who give you money can control you, can tell you what to do, and if you don't do it, they can take away the money (or, in the case of government, worse than that). Power-loving politicians know this principle very well. Government telling you what to do isn't exactly "freedom." Every dime the government takes from me is one dime more power they have, and one dime less free I am. Government takes, it doesn't give, and when it DOES give, it is only because it has first taken something from us, thereby lessening our freedom by just that much. And, to get what government gives us we have to do what government tells us. You want government charity? Then you'll have to do what government tells you to do. And "a government big enough to give you everything you want is strong enough to take everything you have" (Thomas Jefferson).

Helping people in distress is certainly a very good, and needed, thing. But it isn't in the Constitution as a power given to the national government. Charity comes from the heart, which a government does not possess. Individuals, churches, charitable organizations—these are the groups, historically, helping the needy in times of distress, and millions of Americans have graciously and generously done so in the recent hurricane. That's as it should be.

My only point in this essay is, if we want Washington to do so much of our charity for us, then the Constitution needs to be amended to add that power, from the states, to the national government. That's what the Constitution says. And then we'll have to expect our government to grow in power at the expense of our freedom. Which is exactly what it has done over American history.

And that is exactly what our Founders warned us about and why we fought a civil war.

1.2.5 Kamala Just Gave the Wrong Answer on The View (2024-10-08 15:18)

Vice President Kamala Harris is in New York City Tuesday, a stop on her friendly media tour this week, and gave an interview to the ladies of The View.

Throughout her campaign, which started in July when President Joe Biden abruptly left the 2024 campaign trail and she quickly ascended as the Democratic nominee, Harris has attempted to distance herself from Biden's record – a record that is very unpopular with voters.

Kamala Harris: "They've been very vague on the VP's agenda because she's trying to run away from the unpopularity of the Biden agenda and she can't fall back on her 2019/2020 stances because they are very far left and unpopular with those outside of... [1]pic.twitter.com/JrV4LGO1gk— TV News Now (@TVNewsNow) [2]August 19, 2024

Today, she fully embraced the Biden-Harris White House tenure and the Trump campaign took notice.

"If anything, would you have done something differently than President Biden during the past four years?"

KAMALA: "There is not a thing that comes to mind."

□□ [3]pic.twitter.com/kvS3zkMc4p— Trump War Room (@TrumpWarRoom) [4]October 8, 2024

Harris' comments come as Trump continues to lead with swing state voters on top issues of the economy and illegal immigration. Biden's approval continues to sit in the high 30s and low 40s.

The president's party has never (at least back to 1980) won another term in the White House with so few Americans saying the U.S. is on the right track (28 %, today).

The average when the prez party loses (25 %) is far closer to today's number, though there is a bit of a twist. [5]pic.twitter.com/hZtWRMW9mn— (((Harry Enten))) (@ForecasterEnten) [6]October 4, 2024 ice President Kamala Harris spent [1]some time on "60 Minutes" talking about...well, I don't really know.

1.2.6 How Is Anyone Backing Kamala? (2024-10-08 15:19)

I know she was asked a bunch of questions and gave responses, but that didn't clarify anything for anyone, really. In fact, following up on the discussion here a couple of days later, I'm left wondering who in the world is voting for her.

[2]RealClearPolitics shows the race between her and Donald Trump is neck and neck, with her having a slight edge but inside the margin of error, so someone is saying they support her, but I'm left wondering why.

I get that Donald Trump is loud, brash, and annoys a whole lot of people. I'm not a fan of his style of politics in the least, though at least his policies are generally a far cry better than anything the Democrats have offered. That's even true of the issues I don't agree with him on if I'm being fair, though that's all beside the point.

But while she was asked questions on "60 Minutes" and gave responses, she didn't answer all that much. It was just the latest example of word salad from the league leader in that category.

And this is just after Harris' interview on a podcast called "Call Her Daddy," which, let's just note, has nothing at all to do with parenting.

These, however, are two of the very few interviews the vice president has given, and based on the nothingness that comes out of her mouth, that was probably the smartest tactical decision her campaign could have made.

Harris also tried to pick a fight with Florida Governor Ron DeSantis, saying he was ducking her hurricane-related calls.

Of course, President Joe Biden says [3]he's talked to DeSantis and offered support should the state need it with Hurricane Milton bearing down on it.

This isn't the first time the president has [4]stepped all over one of Harris' talking points, either. Couple these with her claims that she worked at a McDonald's that literally no one can prove she worked at. Not even a former coworker stepped up and said, "Yeah, I worked with her." Nothing.

The media is largely silent on fact-checking the next Anointed One that no one seems to actually like, but if Trump gets a little boisterous or his running mate, Senator JD Vance, engages in some hyperbole about eggs, everyone comes out of the woodwork to debunk what they said.

Which might well explain much of it.

Kamala Harris lacks substance in almost every way, but because she's presented as if she's the messiah for democracy, a lot of the lemmings who simply do as the media tells them will trot out to vote. I just can't see how anyone can look at her, follow the campaign, and still decide she's the best choice.

It boggles the mind that anyone could be that stupid.

Then again, a lot of those folks don't know what bathroom to use or what a woman is, so I don't see why I'm so surprised.

1.2.7 Mayorkas Was Questioned If FEMA Has Enough Resources for Hurricane Milton. Here's What He Said. (2024-10-08 15:21)

Category 4 Hurricane Milton is closing in on Florida this week. This comes just after Hurricane Helene wreaked devastation in North Carolina and other areas of the southeast.

Last week, Department of Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas admitted that the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) did not have long-term funding to help the victims of Hurricane Helene. As Townhall [1]reported, over a billion FEMA dollars were spent on illegal immigrants in recent years.

“We are meeting the immediate needs with the money that we have. We are expecting another hurricane hitting,” Mayorkas said, according to the [2]Associated Press. “FEMA does not have the funds to make it through the season.”

“The New York Times is reporting that FEMA is running out of staff to respond to this hurricane that seems to be barreling towards Florida...Does FEMA have what it needs to respond to the storm?” former White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki asked Mayorkas on MSNBC.

“Yes it does, quite clearly. Everybody should rest confident that FEMA has the resources. We already have 900 personnel deployed, prepositioned, in Florida. People who are responding to Hurricane Helene...We are there. We have search and rescue teams, the Army Corps of Engineers are there. We are ready. We have the personnel...We can respond to multiple events at a single time.,” Mayorkas stated.

[3]@SecMayorkas to [4]@jrpsaki: “You and I both remember a time when an extreme weather event actually brought people together. Now, unfortunately, tragically, quite frankly, it is politicized... the people who are victimized by the natural disaster are the ones who will suffer.” [5]pic.twitter.com/z0RocPxva3— Inside with Jen Psaki (@InsideWithPsaki) [6]October 8, 2024

Last week, Townhall [7]covered how several whistleblowers have come forward alleging that FEMA misappropriated funds in the wake of Hurricane Helene. This was outlined in a letter to Mayorkas from Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL).

“FEMA has wasted taxpayer funds, misappropriated funds, and left other federal, state, and local responders without deployment orders on the ground,” the letter stated. “As reported and further confirmed by my office, hundreds, if not thousands, of service members were deployed by the Department of Defense to North Carolina and have say idle, waiting for FEMA.”

“We have confirmed FEMA employees deployed, on the clock, awaiting orders in hotels. FEMA pre-disaster aid was withheld, exacerbating the emergency. It is also public that NGOs have purchased airline tickets for migrants through the use of FEMA funds,” it added.

“The aftermath of Hurricane Helene is a major disaster, and your waste and unpreparedness are leaving Americans in distress – unable to access food, water, or medicine – and expecting help, with none coming,” it continued.

BREAKING: FEMA whistleblowers have come forward alleging that the agency misappropriated funds in the wake of Helene, withheld pre-disaster aid, and that first responders and service members have been waiting in hotels without deployment orders. 1.2.8 Harris Has a New Excuse for Her Policy Flip Flopping (2024-10-08 15:24)

During an interview with 60 Minutes Tuesday night, Vice President Kamala Harris gave a new excuse about why voters don't trust her latest and superficial policy positions.

This might be the worst television interview by a candidate in U.S. presidential history.

Bill Whitaker: “You’ve changed your positions so much that no one believes anything.”

Harris: “Well, I’m the vice president and I travel a lot.”[1]pic.twitter.com/5T33OawnD5— Tim Murtaugh (@TimMurtaugh) [2]October 8, 2024

The explanation comes after months of Team Harris desperately trying to walk back far left positions espoused by the presidential candidate during her failed 2020 campaign and her record as the most progressive member of the U.S. Senate - even beating out self proclaimed socialist Senator Bernie Sanders.

Former President Donald Trump responded to the interview on Truth Social.

"The Interview on 60 Minutes with Comrade Kamala Harris is considered by many of those who reviewed it, the WORST Interview they have ever seen. She literally had no idea what she was talking about, and it was an embarrassment to our Country that a Major Party Candidate would be so completely inept. In addition, her Incompetence on 'helping' people through the devastation of Hurricane Helene is being reviewed as, by far, the Worst in American History, even worse than Katrina - If that is possible! I can't imagine anybody living in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, or Tennessee, voting for her," Trump said.

"Pollsters are saying that the anti, or negative, Vote in those places, and even places not affected but with people watching what took place, will be heavily against her. This is good news because November 5th is the Most Important Day in the History of our Country, and we cannot bear four more years of Incompetence. MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN!" he continued.

Harris is on a friendly media blitz this week as she continues to lose ground in polling among key demographics.

1.2.9 'Shark Tank' Star Says the US Must 'Bring China to Its Knees With a Blowtorch.' Here's How. (2024-10-08 15:30)

Investor Kevin O'Leary called on the U.S. to impose even heavier tariffs against China, telling Fox News' Trey Gowdy on Sunday that the "Chinese only understand the stick."

Pointing to Congress' bipartisan ban on TikTok as just one example of how the Chinese do not compete on a level playing field, the "Shark Tank" star recalled how they used the U.S. judicial system against Americans.

"Congress on a bipartisan basis said, 'Look, it's a spyware and we want to shut it down January 19th.' It's an act of Congress, it's the demand of the people of America, they made that decision," he said. "The Chinese came here, the supreme leader who controls it, and he used our court system to sue us, to litigate that from happening, suing the American people. Do you think I can do that in China? Not a chance in hell I could do that in China. So, I'm OK if he wants to use our legal system against us, but I have to do the same thing. I want access to their courts, I want access to their IP, they have to pay the same price to list their companies that I do, and they don't because they don't have the same compliance costs, and we should kick them off the exchanges.

"I want to go to DEFCON-19 against China," O'Leary added. "I don't like tariffs against anybody else, but I want to bring them to their knees with a blowtorch to deal with us fairly. And that is why you use tariffs. You squeeze them because the Chinese only understand the stick. I've said it countless times, they understand the stick, they respect the stick, give them the stick. And believe me, after enough pain, because their economy has got some fractures in it, they will say, 'Okay, just kidding. We will play on a level playing field.' I want heavy, heavy, heavy tariffs on China, more than we have, even more, because I live with it. They steal our IP. I can't say enough negative stuff. I'm sorry, I'm just telling the truth."

The Chinese only understand the stick and with enough economic pain, they will come to the table and play fairly. I don't like tariffs against anybody else, but we need to bring China to its knees with HEAVY tariffs then we can have a level playing field. 1.2.11 How to Blow Up the Middle East War in 5 Easy Steps (2024-10-15 23:12)

When [1]Joe Biden became president, the Middle East was calm. Now it is in the midst of a multifront war.

So quiet was the inheritance from the prior Trump administration that nearly three years later, on Sept. 29, 2023—and just eight days before the Oct. 7 Hamas massacre of Israelis—[2]Biden’s national security adviser, Jake Sullivan, could still brag that “the Middle East region is quieter today than it has been in two decades.”

So, what exactly happened to the inherited calm that led to the current nonstop chaos of the present?

In a word, theocratic Iran—the nexus of almost all current Middle East terrorism and conflict—was unleashed by Team Biden after having been neutered by the Trump administration.

The [3]Biden-Harris administration adopted a five-step revisionist protocol that appeased and encouraged Iran and its terrorist surrogates Hamas, Hezbollah, and the Houthis.

The result was a near guarantee that something akin to the Oct. 7 massacres would inevitably follow—along with a subsequent year of violence that has now engulfed the Middle East.

First, on the 2020 campaign trail, Biden damned longtime American ally Saudi Arabia as a “pariah.”

He overturned the policies of both the [4]previous Obama and Trump administrations by siding with the Iranian-supplied terrorist Houthis in their war on Saudi Arabia.

Biden accused the kingdom of war crimes, warning it would “be held accountable” for its actions in Yemen. Biden-Harris took the murderous Houthis off the U.S. terrorist list.

Almost immediately followed continuous Houthi attacks on international shipping, Israel, and U.S. warships—rendering the Red Sea, the entryway to the Suez Canal, de facto closed to international maritime transit.

Worse still, by the time of the 2022 midterms, when spiraling gas prices threatened Democratic congressional majorities, Biden opportunistically flipped and implored Saudi Arabia to pump more oil to lower world prices before the November election. Appearing obnoxious and then obsequious to an old [5]Middle East ally is a prescription for regional chaos.

Second, Biden-Harris nihilistically killed off the Trump administration’s “Abraham Accords.” That diplomatic breakthrough had proved a successful blueprint for moderate Arab nations to seek detente with Israel, ending decades of hostilities to unite against the common Middle East threat of Iran.

Third, Biden begged Iran to reenter the appeasing, so-called Iran Deal that virtually had ensured that Iran would eventually get the bomb.

Worse yet, it dropped oil sanctions against the theocracy, allowing a near-destitute Iran to recoup $100 billion in profits. And it green-lighted $6 billion in hostage ransoms to Tehran.

An enriched Tehran immediately sent billions of dollars in support and weapons to the anti-Western terrorists of Hamas, Hezbollah, and the Houthis to attack Israel, Americans, and international shipping. Iran soon began partnering with China and Russia to form a new anti-American axis.

Biden-Harris also fled abruptly from Afghanistan, abandoning billions in weapons and American contractors. The humiliation thus virtually destroyed American deterrence in the Middle East, inciting enemies and endangering friends.

Fourth, Biden-Harris restored hundreds of millions of dollars in aid to the West Bank and Gaza, but without any guarantees that the Palestinian Authority and Hamas would desist from their past serial terrorist acts.

In the case of Hamas, U.S. and Western “humanitarian aid” simply freed up more fungible dollars in Gaza to arm Hamas and to expand its subterranean tunnel complex essential to its Oct. 7 massacres and hostage-taking.

Fifth, from the outset of the ensuing increased tensions, Biden-Harris began pressuring the Israelis to act “proportionally” in responding to the massacre of some 1,200 Israelis and nearly 20,000 missiles, rockets, and drones launched at their homeland from Iran, the Houthis, Hamas, and Hezbollah.

Such straitjacketing of our closest Middle East friend further signaled the Iranian-backed terrorists that there was now “daylight” between the U.S. and its closest regional ally. That opportunity provided still further incentives for Iran to test just how far it could safely go in attacking Israel.

But why did Biden-Harris so foolishly ignite the Middle East?

In part, the administration naively tried to resurrect the old, discredited Obama administration notion of “creative tension”—of empowering a rogue Iran and its terrorists to play off Israel and the moderate Arab regimes, as a new sort of balance of power in the region.

In part, Biden-Harris was caving to increased antisemitism at home and the rise of powerful, pro-Palestinian groups on U.S. campuses and in critical swing Electoral College states.

In part, Biden-Harris was naive and gullible. The two bought into the anti-Americanism and anti-Israel boilerplate of our enemies. So, they thought to make amends by seeing Iran and its terrorists as the moral equivalent of democratic, pro-American Israel.

Their malignant legacy is the current Middle East disaster.

1.2.12 Try a Little Honesty About Israel (2024-10-15 23:13)

Both the Harris-Walz presidential ticket and now lame-duck President [1]Joe Biden keep insisting that they are Israel's best friend.

A snarly Biden recently bragged at a contentious press conference, "No administration has helped Israel more than I have. None, none, none. And I think [Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu] should remember that."

Yet the thin-skinned and triggered Biden's prickliness poorly hid—or perhaps revealed—the truth: This current administration knows that it is responsible for the current explosion of the Middle East and the particular dilemmas of [2]Israel.

Biden further revealed his blame-gaming of the Israeli government when asked another loaded question about purported Netanyahu election interference, saying, "Whether he's trying to influence the election, I don't know."

Biden apparently forgot who just flew Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy into swing-state Pennsylvania, just as early and mail-in voting there began, to lobby for more aid even as he trashed candidates Donald Trump and JD Vance to a left-wing magazine.

Recently, Democratic candidate Vice President [4]Kamala Harris refused to say whether the Netanyahu administration is even an ally of the United States.

Her Democratic running mate, Minnesota Gov. [5]Tim Walz, could not state whether the Democratic ticket would approve of an Israeli response—by either targeting the Iranian nuclear bomb program or its oil fields and exporting facilities—to some 500 Iranian missiles and rockets that hit the Jewish state.

Another Bob Woodward racy and gossipy tell-all book just appeared. It alleges that Biden despised Netanyahu and has reportedly smeared him to aides: “That son of a b—, Bibi Netanyahu, he’s a bad guy. He’s a bad f—king guy!”

What are we to make of this Biden-Harris-Walz mess?

It is an election year and one of the closest races in modern memory. Biden and his would-be successors, Harris-Walz, know that support for Israel is a bipartisan cornerstone of U.S. foreign policy and critical for Democratic unity.

Yet they feel they must also pander to anti-Israel, Muslim-American voters who may determine the Electoral College votes of critical swing-state Michigan.

Democratic politicians square that circle by claiming they support Israel—despite damning the conservative Netanyahu. That way they seek to blame Netanyahu for alienating Arab and Muslim-American voters, while they do not alienate left-wing Jewish and pro-Israeli Democrats.

For all the invective, a demonized Netanyahu is now regaining public support in Israel. The Israeli public approves of his near-destruction of Hamas, the ongoing brilliant Israeli emasculation of Hezbollah, and Israel’s revelations that the once widely feared terrorist regime in Iran may in fact well prove to be a paper tiger.

Biden [6]national security adviser Jake Sullivan admitted just eight days before the Oct. 7 massacres that “the Middle East region is quieter today than it has been in two decades.”

His boast was an admission that Biden and Harris had inherited from the prior Trump administration a stable Middle East.

So, what blew up Sullivan’s quietude?

Certainly not Netanyahu or Israel in general.

It was the terrorists of Hamas who surprise-attacked and killed 1,200 Israeli civilians during peace and a Jewish holiday.

Their slaughtering, torturing, raping, and hostage-taking revealed a level of precivilization barbarism rarely seen in the modern era.

Israel was simultaneously targeted by rockets from Hamas and Hezbollah that would eventually number more than 20,000.

It did not respond to the bloodbath with a full-scale invasion of Gaza until Oct. 27, some three weeks after the slaughtering.

During that interim, for most of the Muslim world and both U.S. Muslim communities and on American campuses, there was rejoicing at the news of slaughtered Jews.

For over three years, the Biden administration had signaled Israel's enemies that it no longer acted like a close ally of the past.

After it all, Biden-Harris lifted sanctions on a hostile Iran, giving it $100 billion in oil windfalls. It begged Iran to reenter the disastrous Iran deal. It abandoned the Abraham Accords. It lifted the terrorist designation from the terrorist Houthis. It restored fungible aid to the Hamas tunnel builders. It gave new aid to Hezbollah-controlled Lebanon.

Israel's enemies got the Biden message: Attack the Jewish state, and perhaps Americans for the first time in a half-century may not really mind that much.

And so they did, in unison.

Rather than admitting their own role in igniting the Middle East, Biden and Harris now blame the victims of their own incendiary foreign policy.

The final irony?

Israel has concluded that Biden-Harris foolhardiness can be toxic and endanger its very survival—and so, will not agree to its own suicide.

Instead, Israel seeks to finish a multifaceted war it did not seek. And one of whose beneficiaries from Israeli blood and treasure will be the U.S. itself, given Israel is now systematically weakening America's own existential enemies.

1.2.13 The Media Are the Scum of the Earth (2024-10-24 17:01)

However much you hate the progressive corporate media, double it. Then double it again. After that, triple it and you're getting close to where you should start hating these people.

There isn't a good person among the lot of them, there really isn't, as they happily dance on the graves of dead loved ones and lie with impunity about Donald Trump under the banner of "truth-tellers Hypocrisy is the wrong word, as it is not strong enough.

It's not that the left has double standards – one for them, another for everyone else. They have standards for everyone else and absolutely none for them. They don't have to change the standards they hold themselves to because they hold themselves to nothing. It is "agenda über alles," written in its original German on purpose. The Atlantic is a prime example of how the left-wing echo chamber operates. They "report" a piece about a upcoming book, working hard to make sure their fellow travelers make some cash, and declare Donald Trump has a history of praising Adolf Hitler and his generals. Weird how this tidbit of information about the most investigate human being on the planet escaped reporting for 4 years, but now someone finally decided to tell it! That person is John Kelly, a retired partisan General who was fired at Trump's Chief of Staff and has been scrambling to worm his way back into the good graces of the establishment left ever since. Kelly started by spreading lies about Trump declaring soldiers who died in the D-Day invasion "suckers" and "losers." He's the only person claiming this, likely the source who "leaked" it to The Atlantic in 2020.

Literally everyone else in the room denied it happened, but The Atlantic is the plaything of Lauren Powell Jobs, unaccomplished widow of Steve Jobs, who uses her inherited wealth to advance the left-wing agenda that gives this otherwise vacationing "philanthropist" meaning in life.

She publicly admitted

she owns the rag for the express purpose of serving her political whims, to create narratives for extremists leftists to use. Anyone with self-respect working there would quit, that none have tells you pretty much everything. Worried that Democrats might lose, Kelly returned to The Atlantic with another story - something he seemingly just remembered, though the Democrat Party Press insists he's told the story privately to them in the past. We all know how shy Kelly is about being publicly critical of Trump over the last 4 years, and we know how the media would never, ever report something critical of the former President they'd only heard in private, as that would be a lot like reporting something from an anonymous source with an axe to grind. Oh yeah, that's exactly what this is. The choices are actually pretty simple: A) John Kelly is lying because he's a Democrat working to elect Democrats, or B) John Kelly, only 2 weeks before an election, was so overwhelmed with feelings that he decided to publicly tell a story he'd been blabbing all over town for years that – even in a town where second-hand rumors about Trump are treated as gospel truth and lead the nightly news – has been held as closely as the identity of Deep Throat was by those very same rumormongers. Which seems more likely? A causal mention about Doug Emhoff, husband of Kamala Harris, being credibly accused of smacking an ex-girlfriend across the face because he was upset she was talking to another man shut down the network, but a story with less proof about something, again, everyone else in the room denies ON THE RECORD, leads the day.

same Atlantic story claims Trump smeared a murdered soldier, Private Vanessa Guillen, swore about her and complained about the cost of her funeral. This, once again, is something everyone involved openly denies on the record, including the family of the slain soldier. The soldier's sister even publicly called on Democrats to stop exploiting her sister's murder. They won't. They're scum. The Atlantic lied about this, too. They don't care. There are no standards there, only narratives, according to beneficiary Jobs. The family of Amber Thurman, the Georgia woman Democrats pretend died from an abortion ban who actually got her abortion and died from medical malpractice as a resulting infection went untreated, has asked Democrats to stop dancing on their loved one's grave and exploiting their tragedy. They have not and will not. Scum. They will dance on any grave they think will give them an advantage, no matter how painful it is to the family or how big the lie is they have to tell. These are not the actions of good people. Scum of the Earth is too kind for these people, but like "hypocrisy" not accurately capturing how Democrats function, it will have to do until new words are created to fill the gap. Or maybe we could just use old ones, words Democrats have either abandoned or changed to fit their political needs. Maybe "women" will work, since the true victims of most of the policies of the left are women and Democrats claim complete ignorance as to what one is, it seems to be unused these days. Well, except when it comes to abortion, when they all suddenly become gynecologists. Maybe not. Advertisement

Oh well, scum of the Earth will do, at least for now.

1.2.14 For Kamala Harris, Abortion Isn't About Freedom; It's About Force (2024-10-24 17:02)

Democratic Party presidential candidate Kamala Harris has struggled to articulate issues that resonate with voters in the campaign's final days. Other than bland assurances about "an opportunity economy" and growing up "a middle-class kid," the only issue Harris seems both emphatic and explicit about is abortion.

At a recent rally in Wisconsin, Harris was once again promoting the need for a federal law "codifying" Roe v. Wade when [1]two college students shouted out, "Jesus is Lord!" In response, Harris[2] joked, "Oh, you guys are at the wrong rally. ... I think you meant to go to the smaller one down the street."

The "official" line is that this was a jab at former President Donald Trump's upcoming event in Detroit. But the impromptu message was not lost on Americans: People who think Jesus is Lord apparently don't belong at Harris' campaign events and rallies where attendees do believe that Jesus is Lord will be smaller than those where Harris is the keynote.

Mm-kay.

There are other buried messages in Harris' constant drumbeat of abortion, abortion, abortion. She casts it as a matter of personal freedom, arguing that women should have the right to "control their own bodies." But if Harris finds her way into the White House – and certainly if President Harris has a Democrat-controlled Congress willing to do her bidding – abortion will not be a matter of freedom but a matter of force.

Harris was uncharacteristically overt about this during a recent [3]interview with NBC News's Hallie Jackson. When Jackson asked whether Harris would support "religious exemptions" for opponents of abortion, Harris was adamant: "I don't think we should be making concessions when we're talking about a fundamental freedom to make decisions about your own body."

Pressed by Jackson about the limitations that might come with a Republican-controlled Congress, Harris would brook no compromise. "(A) basic freedom has been taken from the women of America: the freedom to make decisions about their own body," Harris insisted. "And that cannot be negotiable."

One need only look at Harris' record as California attorney general to see what she means when she says abortion is non-negotiable.

When California's Reproductive FACT Act became law in 2015, Harris, as AG, issued a [4]statement praising the law and taking credit for its co-sponsorship. The law targeted [5]pro-life pregnancy resource centers, mandating that they[6] promote abortion clinics (on penalty of heavy fines if they refused). It was struck down as unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court in NIFLA v. Becerra in 2018.

Harris also targeted pro-life activist and investigative journalist David Daleiden, who obtained [7]shocking undercover footage of Planned Parenthood abortionists bragging – in public – about selling the organs and body parts of aborted fetuses, some past viability. Harris had Daleiden's home raided, arrested him, [8]charged him with [9]multiple felonies (which even the Los Angeles Times called a [10]"disturbing overreach"), seized the damning footage (which has since been [11]released), and changed the law to make similar recordings illegal.

Harris' disregard for the religious freedoms of medical care professionals will not be limited to abortion. Anything she claims is a "right" will be justification for comparable government coercion, including the chemical castration and physically mutilating surgeries of so-called "gender-affirming care," assisted suicide, and euthanasia. Physicians who refuse to perform these procedures will have their licenses revoked. Nurses who refuse to help will be fired. Hospitals and clinics that object will be shut down.

Advertisement

In this respect, Harris will be following in the footsteps of former President Barack Obama, whose administration forced religious institutions – including orders of Catholic nuns – to offer abortifacient contraception and surgical sterilization as part of the insurance coverage they provided for their employees, a policy that prompted lawsuits by the [12]University of Notre Dame and the Little Sisters of the Poor, among other religiously affiliated organizations.

After years of litigation, the U.S. Supreme Court also [13]struck down the Obama administration's regulations, ruling that they provided inadequate conscience protection.

(Side note: Obama has been dragged out to stump for Harris in an obvious attempt to prop up her flagging poll numbers. At a campaign appearance earlier this week, Obama [14]said, "I don't understand how we got so toxic and just so divided and so bitter." Seriously? Here's a clue: Calling those who disagree with you "bitter" people who "cling to their guns or their religion" and then using government power to force them to violate their religious beliefs is a good recipe for toxicity and division.)

Former Hawai'ian congressional Rep. Tulsi Gabbard, who left the Democratic Party[15] two years ago and endorsed Trump [16]earlier this year, announced that she had officially joined the Republican Party at a Trump rally in Greensboro, North Carolina, this week. In Gabbard's announcement, she called the Republican Party "the party of the people, the party of peace ... the party of equality, the party of common sense." Gabbard lamented the changes in the Democratic Party, describing it as [17]"completely unrecognizable."

She's not alone. Traditional and social media are filled with the personal accounts of former Democrats – politicians like former presidential candidate [18]Robert F. Kennedy Jr. and U.S. Sens.[19] Joe Manchin and [20]Kyrsten Sinema, academics [21]Alan Dershowitz and [22]Bret Weinstein, journalists [23]Matt Taibbi and [24]Ana Kasparian, and countless ordinary people – who are disgusted that the Democratic Party has become the party of corporate power and government abuse: censorship, deliberate disinformation, political persecution, weaponization of law enforcement and constant war.

Harris may have thought it funny to tell two Christian boys they were at "the wrong rally." But if you're a Democrat who's also a practicing Catholic or Christian, a member of any faith tradition that holds life to be sacrosanct, or simply an American who believes strongly in the individual freedoms guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, you're not only at the wrong rally; you're in the wrong party.

1.2.15 Team Harris' Campaign of Condescension Draws Pushback (2024-10-24 17:04)

The election is finally shaping up to be not only liberal Democrat [1]Kamala Harris versus conservative Republican [2]Donald Trump.

Instead, it has become a larger contest between those who talk down to their fellow Americans and those who are increasingly sick and tired of being lectured.

How smart is it, for example, for Harris supporters to claim nonstop that ex-President Trump is a fascist dictator—and thus, by extension, those also who vote for him?

[3]Female voters poll in favor of Harris. Trump enjoys a similar, although likely somewhat smaller, majority margin of male voters.

Yet Harris—along with campaign surrogates [4]Barack Obama and [5]Bill Clinton—has been lecturing both black and white male voters nonstop that they are misled.

Or they supposedly suffer from false consciousness—as if they have no clue that Harris and her progressive agenda are really in their own self-interest.

Such haughtiness reached a zenith when Harris ran ads of actors costumed as supposedly working-class men. They voiced scripted talking points to prove that “real” men are progressive Harris supporters.

But the actors were so patently ridiculous, their canned lines so unreal, that most viewers likely thought the ads were run by Trump himself—to show how arrogant, out-of-touch elites must imagine how the so-called “clingers” and “deplorables” think and talk.

The Trump campaign also tries all sorts of strategies to win over female voters, from promising to rectify the Biden-Harris hyperinflation to reducing spiraling crime in towns and cities.

But one method it avoids is claiming women are ignorant of their real self-interest and deluded by Harris, accurately assuming that a candidate does not win voters by belittling their intelligence.

Harris and Obama both dressed down black men, claiming they are especially culpable for not voting en masse for Harris—even though a far higher percentage of black males will vote for Harris than for Trump.

This hectoring the electorate on its supposed ignorance or moral shortcomings has become a Harris campaign trademark.

To Harris, objecting to 10 million to 12 million foreign nationals entering the country illegally without background checks during the [6]Biden-Harris administration is supposedly a sign of a lack of compassion.

And claiming that a current declining rate of illegal immigration should allay voters’ supposed paranoias utterly ignores the [7]millions of illegal aliens who were all but welcomed in by Biden-Harris before the 2024 election cycle.

Voters are also talked down to ad nauseam that they do not appreciate the Biden-Harris economy, given the rate of [8] inflation is falling.

True. But most voters go shopping in a manner politicians do not.

So, they resent such top-down sermons. They know best that prices for staple foods, fuel, insurance, and housing have spiked by some 20 % to 30 % since 2021—and stayed astronomically high.

Currently, the auto industry is in crisis. Its huge inventory of electric vehicles sits unwanted and unsold. Harris and the Left, remember, mandated all sorts of EV standards in their war against the internal combustion engine.

Then the proverbial people revolted against the comparatively limited range of [9]EVs and the difficulty in finding accessible and quick-charging stations.

So, the free market and consumer demand ignored the increasingly strident lectures.

Likewise, Harris pontificated that crime that had spiked from 2021 to 2023 is now not all that bad.

But voters know all too well that their major cities are now unsafe. They sense one reason this year that [10]crime is not soaring as it was two years ago is because it had gotten so bad that any further commensurate increases would have made life utterly unlivable.

The Harris campaign was further hurt by past videos that keep popping up of Harris lecturing voters about how they either must think correctly or remain cluelessly selfish or ignorant.

So, a recent clip surfaced on Columbus Day 2021 of Harris lecturing America about Western civilization's "shameful" sins in discovering the New World.

Another video reveals Harris warning the country in 2020 on national television that the massive post-George Floyd demonstrations—that had turned violent and deadly—would not and should not stop, as if the country had to pay collective penance for its sins.

This 2024 race may be becoming analogous to an October 1980 teachable moment.

Then a preachy and sanctimonious incumbent President Jimmy Carter—ahead in the final October polls over challenger Ronald Reagan—finally turned off voters for good.

The previously underdog Reagan won in a landslide for a variety of reasons. But certainly, one explanation was that the electorate had finally collectively shrugged off their weariness. They were sick and tired of Carter's downer lectures about how they were wrong and culpable.

Reagan, however, reminded voters that America was better than all of the alternatives, needed not be perfect to be good, and had nothing to apologize for.

The same contrast will likely determine the election of 2024.

1.2.16 Kamala's Insane Talking Points (2024-10-24 23:34)

As Vice President Kamala Harris slips in the polls, the Democratic National Committee/Harris campaign/mainstream media fusion talking points become even more absurd.

Claiming that JD Vance and Donald Trump were "weird" did not work –especially given the genuinely odd behavior of vice presidential candidate Tim Walz and would-be First Gentleman Doug Emhoff.

Nor was the next Harris meme convincing that the frenetic and non-stop Trump was somehow "exhausted," "senile," and "confused." Voters know the workdays of the younger Harris are usually far shorter – or sometimes not workdays at all.

But Harris also falsely claimed the physically and mentally challenged President Joe Biden was, in her words, "absolutely authoritative" and "very bold and vibrant."

Now Harris asserts that Trump is a "fascist," a "dictator," and "unfit" for office. But this new talking point will also not stop the Harris campaign's hemorrhaging – and for a variety of reasons.

First, voters see the election as a conflict of two absolutely antithetical visions.

On the one hand, is the prior Trump 2017-20 concrete record: border security, no major wars abroad, calm in the Middle East, a deterred Russia, Iran, and China, low inflation, low interest rates, lower crime, lower taxes, strong deterrent military – and opposition to mandatory electric vehicle mandates, biological males competing in women's sports, and the woke/DEI agenda.

On the other hand, is the Biden-Harris 2021-2024 record: the unchecked entry of 12-20 million illegal aliens and a destroyed border. People still struggle under Biden-Harris's earlier hyperinflation and high interest rates. The horrific regional wars in Ukraine and the Middle East continue. Biden-Harris embraces the unpopular DEI/Woke agenda.

Harris herself knows that the Biden-Harris years were a failure. That is why she has shed almost all of their hard left-wing agendas – policies she has embraced for much of her adult life.

So suddenly, in the last 90 or so days, Harris has completely flipped and flopped.

Now she is for more of, not defunding, the police. She pivots for a secure border, not 20 million illegal aliens pouring across it. Harris brags about fossil fuel energy, not banning fracking, and for increasing, not cutting, defense.

In fact, several endangered incumbent Democratic senators in swing states are claiming more allegiance to Trump's issues than identifying with Harris and her unpopular record as vice president.

Voters likely conclude that if Trump doubles down on his record, while even Harris and many senators temporarily piggyback on it, then it must be more effective and popular than Harris's own.

Second, Harris now claims Trump is a fascist and insurrectionist.

But mouthing ad nauseam "January 6th" no longer persuades voters that Trump is a danger to anyone. They recall that Harris bragged of the far more violent demonstrations of 2020 – 35 killed, $2 billion in damage, 1,500 law enforcement officers injured, 14,000 arrested – that the unrest would not and "should not" stop, while drumming up support to bail out jailed violent protestors.

Nor does the slur that Trump is a fascist resonate. The Obama and Biden-Harris administrations weaponized the CIA and FBI to interfere in the 2016 and 2020 elections by peddling the fake Steele dossier and suppressing all the embarrassing news about Hunter Biden's incriminating laptop.

Trump certainly did not coordinate, as Biden did, with local, state, and federal prosecutors to wage lawfare prosecutions to destroy his political opponents. He did not use the FBI to partner with social media to suppress the news.

Neither Trump nor his supporters tried to remove Biden from state ballots.

The Republican House majority did not impeach Biden twice despite the Biden family's corruption and Joe Biden's unlawful, decades-long removal of classified papers to several insecure private residences.

Trump and the Republicans never coercively removed the party's primary-winning nominee. They did not nullify the will of 14 million primary voters. And in backroom fashion, they did not anoint a candidate who had never entered a single primary in her life.

Nor did Trump support packing the Supreme Court. He does not seek unconstitutional means of destroying the Electoral College. He is not demanding an end to the Senate filibuster or the creation of two new states to obtain four partisan senate seats.

Third, as for Trump being "unfit" and lacking "decorum," it depends on what were the Biden-Harris standards?

Having a trans activist reveal his breasts on camera at a White House "pride party?"

Biden's reportedly calling Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "a f-ing idiot" and "son of a b-ch?" Bragging about locking Trump up, while waging lawfare against him?

Unleashing son Hunter Biden with impunity to shake down foreign governments?

The election will not be decided on these empty talking points or fake media-generated narratives.

Instead, only two criteria matter: Which candidate's past record and current agenda best appeal to voters? And which candidate seems the most authentic and genuine?

1.2.17 Latest Poll of Young Black and Latino Male Voters Has to Embarrass Dems (2024-10-24 23:36)

That's brutal. No matter how you cut it, the fact that Democrats have lost significant ground with black and Latino male voters must embarrass the Democrats. For many, I'm sure they dismissed the polls as outliers. It can't be ignored in the two-week stretch here. Trump looks like he will have the best performance with black voters since Nixon (via [1]Politico):

Strange voting patterns for Hitler. [2]<https://t.co/S4uPChYQo0>— Glenn Greenwald (@ggreenwald) [3]October 24, 2024

A new poll that includes large oversamples of young voters of color shows Donald Trump has massively increased his support among groups that he previously performed poorly with in 2020.

The GenForward survey, which ran from Sept. 26 to Oct. 6 by the University of Chicago and included 2,359 eligible voters 18 to 40 years old, included some fascinating findings:

- A quarter of young Black men are supporting Trump. (Black men overall backed President Joe Biden nearly nine to one in 2020.)
- 44 percent of young Latino men said they'd back Trump, an improvement over the roughly 38 percent who backed him in 2020.
- For her part, Harris is at 58 percent with Black men, 37 percent with Latinos and 57 percent with Asian American and Pacific Islander men.
- Kamala Harris is doing incredibly well among women of color. A majority of Black (63 percent), Asian American and Pacific Islander (60 percent) and Latina (55 percent) women say they will vote for Harris.
- White women are nearly evenly split between Harris (44 percent) and Trump (40 percent).

Yet, Harris remains underwater with black women compared to Biden's 2020 numbers.

Nate Cohn at The New York Times [4] offered five reasons why we're seeing a shift with these key Democratic voter groups:

1. They don't mind the alleged dog whistles
2. Hope and Change is dead
3. They're concerned about the economy
4. They're not offended; they're entertained
5. Trump is 'normal' to these voters now

1.2.18 Harris: The First Amendment Must Take a Back Seat to This 'Fundamental Freedom' for her Banana Republic madness (2024-10-24 23:37)

In an interview with NBC News on Tuesday, Vice President [1]Kamala Harris lamented America's divisive politics, arguing that her desire to 'turn the page' is really about "closing the page" – whatever that means – on "an era that suggests Americans are divided." It's true that Americans are divided. Figures in both major political parties and across the political spectrum bear some responsibility for that reality, including both her and her opponent. Part of the polarization and acrimony is stoked and fueled for cynical purposes. But a lot of it is simply a reflection of profound differences on policies and values. Voters have divergent views on what they want the country to look like, what sort of leaders they want to wield power, and what our priorities should be. Part of the genius of our founding is that America's system of government was designed to push many important decisions on such matters down to the state and local level, allowing people to shape their communities in alignment with their values. This allows those disaffected by what's happening around them to either seek and make change close to home, or have an option to resettle in a community that may be a better fit.

Kamala Harris holds a top-down, command-and-control worldview. She is a California leftist whose vision for the country, as [2]repeatedly articulated and illustrated during her start-from-scratch presidential campaign in the 2020 cycle, is to impose California's hardcore brand of identity-driven leftism upon the rest of the country. She was a zealous advocate for bans, mandates, and all manner of state coercion – as long as such blunt instruments served her ideological agenda. During her current, truncated, election-nullifying, plug-and-play presidential campaign, she is trying to pretend the previous version of herself doesn't exist, or is temporarily irrelevant. She doesn't believe any of those things anymore, or won't pursue them in office, anonymous aids assure us through journalists. When given opportunities to explain – really explain – any of these supposed flip-flops, however, Harris has steadfastly declined. Her answers are either vague and non-responsive, or simply non-existent. She would very much like middle-of-the-road voters to believe that she's not the extremist she ran as last time (and the Senator she governed as). She's more of a pragmatic Democrat who just wants to bring us all together, you see. Kind of like Joe Biden promised to be. But not quite like him, per se. Let's not talk or think about him, please.

She would also prefer to opt out of any insight into what she actually believes, or why, or why that has (ostensibly) changed so dramatically in such short order. She does not appreciate your questions about it, thank you very much. But amid her jarring policy makeover, and her phony hand-wringing about unity and "closing the page" on divisiveness, there's one issue on which she is truly passionate. She is a fanatical enthusiast on unlimited abortion-on-demand, at any stage of pregnancy, funded by taxpayers. She has occasionally been asked if she could name a single limitation or restriction on abortion that she might support. She has deflected away from this challenge because the ghastly truth, based on [3]legislation she has championed, is that she emphatically opposes any conceivable limitation. Thus, in the very same interview in which she bemoaned our tragic divisions, she promptly rejected a modest abortion olive branch floated by the NBC journalist. Might she be comfortable with 'religious exemptions' on abortion, Hallie Jackson asked, referring to allowing religious practitioners and institutions like Catholic hospitals to decline to provide, finance, or otherwise participate in abortions? Answer:

Wow.

Kamala Harris says that she does not believe in any religious exemptions for abortion.[4]pic.twitter.com/oOijJ0i6Ib— Greg Price (@greg_price11) [5]October 22, 2024

As many people [6]have observed, Harris frames unlimited abortion as a "fundamental freedom," but not religious freedom. Her [7]worldview, as [8]modeled in her state, are deeply hostile to a core tenet of [9]the First Amendment. She and her fellow leftists eagerly would, and have, trample on actual fundamental American freedoms, in the name of unfettered abortion. She is so, ahem, pro-"choice" that she believes all of us should pay for other people's elective abortions, without any restrictions, and that religious and other conscientious objectors to abortion, which literally stops a human heart, within the healthcare space must be forced to participate in abortions. No exceptions. No exemptions. She even selected a running mate who [10]repealed protections for infants born alive during failed abortions, and who eliminated laws barring coercing women into abortions. "Choice," you see.

The Supreme Court, at least as it's currently composed, would likely have something to say about this radical, disturbing vision if or when Harris tried to crush the First Amendment in service of her abortion fanaticism. But Harris has also embraced Supreme Court "reform," [11]including expressing an openness to the Banana Republic madness of packing the Court by adding additional seats. Her running mate recently confessed to leftist donors in California that they all know the Electoral College should be done away with, too. Among many other reasons, when the 2024 Democratic ticket tries to pose as the guardians of institutions and "our democracy," they do not deserve to be believed or taken seriously. It's also why when Trump-skeptical conservatives and independents are lectured about how 'important' it is to support Harris in this election, supposedly for the security of those cherished institutions and norms, rejecting those insulting sermons is an easy, principled, rational call.

1.2.19 For Kamala Harris, Abortion Isn't About Freedom; It's About Force (2024-10-24 23:38)

Democratic Party presidential candidate Kamala Harris has struggled to articulate issues that resonate with voters in the campaign's final days. Other than bland assurances about "an opportunity economy" and growing up "a middle-class kid," the only issue Harris seems both emphatic and explicit about is abortion.

At a recent rally in Wisconsin, Harris was once again promoting the need for a federal law "codifying" Roe v. Wade when [1]two college students shouted out, "Jesus is Lord!" In response, Harris[2] joked, "Oh, you guys are at the wrong rally. ... I think you meant to go to the smaller one down the street."

The "official" line is that this was a jab at former President Donald Trump's upcoming event in Detroit. But the impromptu message was not lost on Americans: People who think Jesus is Lord apparently don't belong at Harris' campaign events and rallies where attendees do believe that Jesus is Lord will be smaller than those where Harris is the keynote.

Mm-kay.

There are other buried messages in Harris' constant drumbeat of abortion, abortion, abortion. She casts it as a matter of personal freedom, arguing that women should have the right to "control their own bodies." But if Harris finds her way into the White House — and certainly if President Harris has a Democrat-controlled Congress willing to do her bidding — abortion will not be a matter of freedom but a matter of force.

Harris was uncharacteristically overt about this during a recent [3]interview with NBC News's Hallie Jackson. When Jackson asked whether Harris would support "religious exemptions" for opponents of abortion, Harris was adamant: "I don't think we should be making concessions when we're talking about a fundamental freedom to make decisions about your own body."

Pressed by Jackson about the limitations that might come with a Republican-controlled Congress, Harris would brook no compromise. "(A) basic freedom has been taken from the women of America: the freedom to make decisions about their own body,” Harris insisted. “And that cannot be negotiable.”

One need only look at Harris’ record as California attorney general to see what she means when she says abortion is non-negotiable.

When California’s Reproductive FACT Act became law in 2015, Harris, as AG, issued a [4]statement praising the law and taking credit for its co-sponsorship. The law targeted [5]pro-life pregnancy resource centers, mandating that they[6] promote abortion clinics (on penalty of heavy fines if they refused). It was struck down as unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court in NIFLA v. Becerra in 2018.

Harris also targeted pro-life activist and investigative journalist David Daleiden, who obtained [7]shocking undercover footage of Planned Parenthood abortionists bragging — in public — about selling the organs and body parts of aborted fetuses, some past viability. Harris had Daleiden’s home raided, arrested him, [8]charged him with [9]multiple felonies (which even the Los Angeles Times called a [10]“disturbing overreach”), seized the damning footage (which has since been [11]released), and changed the law to make similar recordings illegal.

Harris’ disregard for the religious freedoms of medical care professionals will not be limited to abortion. Anything she claims is a “right” will be justification for comparable government coercion, including the chemical castration and physically mutilating surgeries of so-called “gender-affirming care,” assisted suicide, and euthanasia. Physicians who refuse to perform these procedures will have their licenses revoked. Nurses who refuse to help will be fired. Hospitals and clinics that object will be shut down.

In this respect, Harris will be following in the footsteps of former President Barack Obama, whose administration forced religious institutions — including orders of Catholic nuns — to offer abortifacient contraception and surgical sterilization as part of the insurance coverage they provided for their employees, a policy that prompted lawsuits by the [12]University of Notre Dame and the Little Sisters of the Poor, among other religiously affiliated organizations.

After years of litigation, the U.S. Supreme Court also [13]struck down the Obama administration’s regulations, ruling that they provided inadequate conscience protection.

(Side note: Obama has been dragged out to stump for Harris in an obvious attempt to prop up her flagging poll numbers. At a campaign appearance earlier this week, Obama [14]said, “I don’t understand how we got so toxic and just so divided and so bitter.” Seriously? Here’s a clue: Calling those who disagree with you “bitter” people who “cling to their guns or their religion” and then using government power to force them to violate their religious beliefs is a good recipe for toxicity and division.)

Former Hawai’ian congressional Rep. Tulsi Gabbard, who left the Democratic Party[15] two years ago and endorsed Trump [16]earlier this year, announced that she had officially joined the Republican Party at a Trump rally in Greensboro, North Carolina, this week. In Gabbard’s announcement, she called the Republican Party “the party of the people, the party of peace ... the party of equality, the party of common sense.” Gabbard lamented the changes in the Democratic Party, describing it as [17]“completely unrecognizable.”

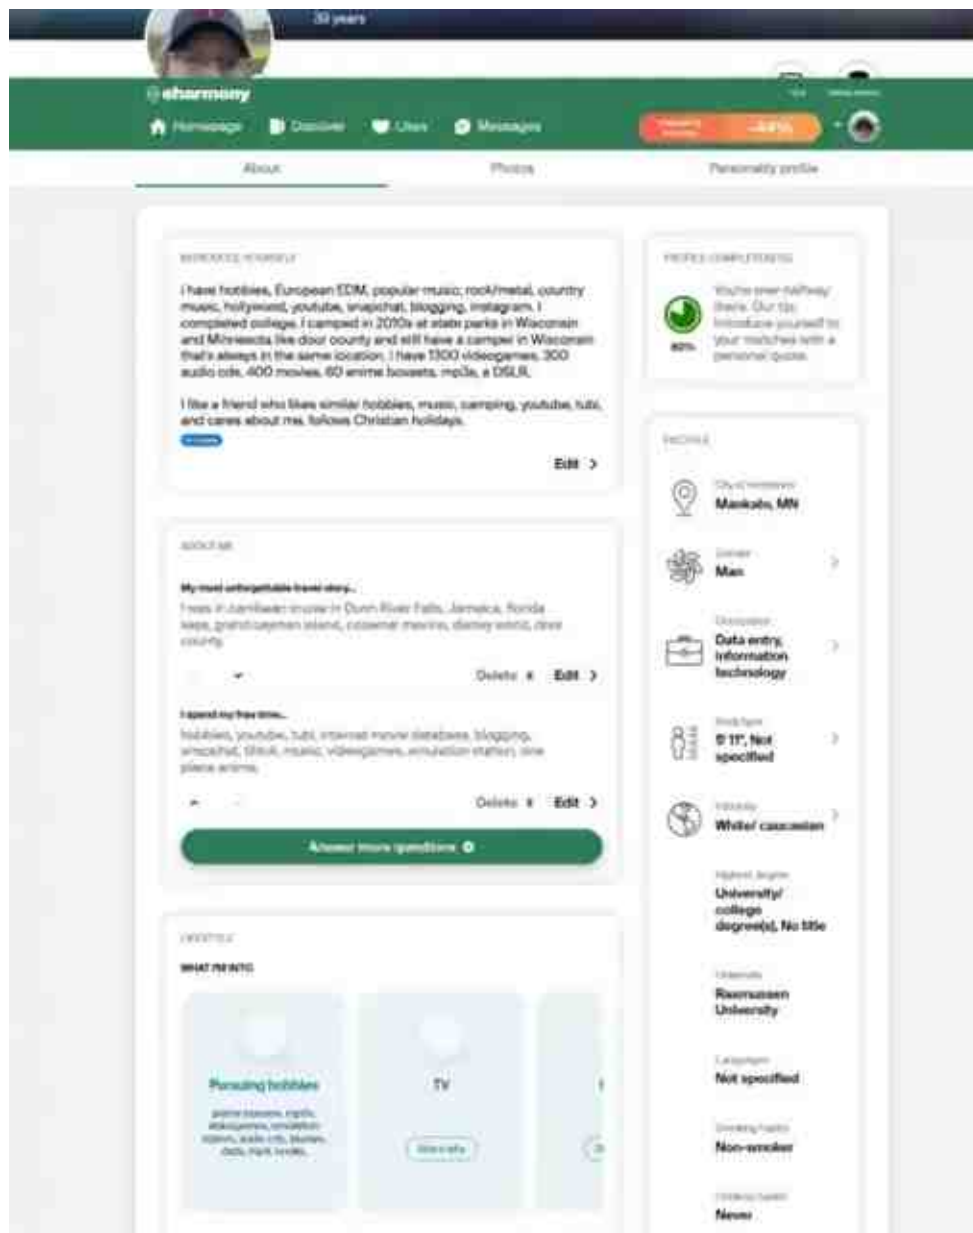

She’s not alone. Traditional and social media are filled with the personal accounts of former Democrats — politicians like former presidential candidate [18]Robert F. Kennedy Jr. and U.S. Sens.[19] Joe Manchin and [20]Kyrsten Sinema, academics [21]Alan Dershowitz and [22]Bret Weinstein, journalists [23]Matt Taibbi and [24]Ana Kasparian, and countless ordinary people — who are disgusted that the Democratic Party has become the party of corporate power and government abuse: censorship, deliberate disinformation, political persecution, weaponization of law enforcement and constant war.

Harris may have thought it funny to tell two Christian boys they were at “the wrong rally.” But if you’re a Democrat who’s also a practicing Catholic or Christian, a member of any faith tradition that holds life to be sacrosanct, or simply an American who believes strongly in the individual freedoms guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, you’re not only at the wrong rally; you’re in the wrong party.

1.2.20 nobody on eharmony too (2024-10-29 22:05)

I was on eharmony for couple of months, and its similar to okcupid where no woman wants to date. Apparently women don't like my G rated introduction. I see women of every education and sexual orientation on here. I was looking at Taylor the fiend and Better Bachelor on youtube where women from the city (liberal Twin Cities and subbergs have high body counts and go to clubs/bars.

My cousin Uli had a black girlfriend for 5 months who he met at a Roberts, Wisconsin bar and they were distancing from one another. He had her over at his house. He was a part of the Lions club and bowled. He lived in an apartment and had a painter job and played Diablo 4 and watched Hulu.

1.2.21 Why Kamala Struggles to Be Credible (2024-10-30 22:40)

As Vice President Kamala Harris slips in the polls, the [1]Democratic National Committee/Harris campaign/mainstream media fusion talking points become even more absurd.

Claiming that [2]JD Vance and Donald Trump were “weird” did not work—especially given the genuinely odd behavior of vice presidential candidate Tim Walz and would-be first gentleman Doug Emhoff.

Nor was the next Harris meme convincing: that the frenetic and nonstop Trump was somehow “exhausted,” “senile,” and “confused.” Voters know the workdays of the younger Harris are usually far shorter—or sometimes not workdays at all.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [3]Donate now

But Harris also falsely claimed the physically and mentally challenged President Joe Biden was, in her words, “absolutely authoritative” and “very bold and vibrant.”

Now Harris asserts that Trump is a “fascist,” [4]a “dictator,” and “unfit” for office. But this new talking point will also not stop the Harris campaign’s hemorrhaging—and for a variety of reasons.

First, voters see the election as a conflict of two absolutely antithetical visions.

On the one hand is the prior, concrete Trump 2017-20 record: border security; no major wars abroad; calm in the Middle East; a deterred Russia, Iran, and China; low inflation; low interest rates; lower crime; lower taxes; strong deterrent military—and opposition to mandatory electric vehicle mandates, biological males competing in women’s sports, and the woke/diversity, equity, and inclusion agenda.

On the other hand is the Biden-Harris 2021-2024 record: the unchecked entry of 12 million to 20 million illegal aliens and a destroyed border. People still struggle under Biden-Harris' earlier hyperinflation and high interest rates. The horrific regional wars in Ukraine and the Middle East continue. Biden-Harris embraces the unpopular woke/DEI agenda.

Harris herself knows that the Biden-Harris years were a failure. That is why she has shed almost all of the administration's hard left-wing agendas—policies she has embraced for much of her adult life.

So suddenly, in the last 90 or so days, Harris has completely flipped and flopped.

Now she is for more funding of, not defunding, [5]the police. She pivots for a secure border, not 20 million illegal aliens pouring across it. Harris brags about fossil fuel energy, not banning fracking; she's for increasing, not cutting, defense.

In fact, several endangered incumbent Democratic senators in swing states are claiming more allegiance to Trump's issues than identifying with Harris and her unpopular record as vice president.

Voters likely conclude that if Trump doubles down on his record, while even Harris and many senators temporarily piggyback on it, then it must be more effective and popular than Harris' own.

Second, Harris now claims Trump is a fascist and insurrectionist.

But mouthing "Jan. 6" ad nauseam no longer persuades voters that Trump is a danger to anyone. They recall that Harris bragged of the far more violent demonstrations of 2020—five killed, $2 billion in damage, 1,500 law enforcement officers injured, 14,000 arrested—and said that the unrest would not and "should not" stop, while drumming up support to bail out jailed violent protesters.

Nor does the slur [6]that Trump is a fascist resonate. The Obama-Biden and Biden-Harris administrations weaponized the CIA and FBI to interfere in the 2016 and 2020 elections by peddling the fake "Steele dossier" and suppressing all the embarrassing news about Hunter Biden's incriminating laptop.

Trump certainly didn't coordinate, as Biden did, with local, state, and federal prosecutors to wage lawfare prosecutions to destroy his political opponents. He didn't use the FBI to partner with social media to suppress the news.

Neither Trump nor his supporters tried to remove Biden from state ballots.

The House's Republican majority didn't impeach Biden twice despite the Biden family's corruption and Joe Biden's unlawful, decadeslong removal of classified papers to several insecure private residences.

Trump and the Republicans never coercively removed the party's primary-winning nominee. They didn't nullify the will of 14 million primary voters. And in backroom fashion, they didn't anoint a candidate who had never entered a single primary in her life.

Nor did Trump support packing the Supreme Court. He doesn't seek unconstitutional means of destroying the Electoral College. He isn't demanding an end to the Senate filibuster or the creation of two new states to obtain four partisan Senate seats.

Third, as for Trump being "unfit" and lacking "decorum"? It depends on what the Biden-Harris standards were.

Having a trans activist reveal his breasts on camera at a White House "pride party"?

Biden's reportedly calling Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu "a f—ing idiot" and "son of a b—ch?" Bragging about locking Trump up, while waging lawfare against him?

Unleashing son Hunter Biden with impunity to shake down foreign governments?

The Nov. 5 election will not be decided on these empty talking points or fake, media-generated narratives.

Instead, only two criteria matter: Which candidate's past record and current agenda best appeal to voters? And which candidate seems the most authentic and genuine?

1.2.22 How the Biden-Harris Admin Diverted Billions From Scientific Research Funds to Promote DEI (2024-10-30 22:45)

A damning new report found that the Biden-Harris Administration may have illegally diverted billions of dollars from scientific research funds to promote woke diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) initiatives.

American First Legal launched an investigation into the politicization of billions of dollars in federal research funds by President Joe Biden and Vice President Kamala Harris to promote their dangerous DEI initiatives after Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation Ranking Member Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) released a bombshell[1] report.

The legal group [2]filed a lawsuit against the National Science Foundation (NSF) for illegally obscuring the employment records of its agency officials who approved the grants. The lawsuit claims the Biden-Harris Administration used more than a quarter of NSF's funding to financially support left-wing ideological agenda items described under the guise of "academic research."

Immediately upon taking power, the Biden-Harris White House [3]created a task force on "scientific integrity" to provide "a review of the impact on [the] scientific integrity of diversity, equity, and inclusion practices" at all science-related agencies. Later, the White House and NSF [4]ordered agencies to "[i]ncorporate DEIA [Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Accessibility] considerations into all aspects of science planning, execution, and communication."

The Biden-Harris Administration has hijacked billions in federal taxpayer funds meant for important scientific research to promote anti-intellectual, anti-science, and anti-American DEI and leftist ideology. Awarding taxpayer dollars to radical initiatives in the name of "science" is the height of government weaponization, waste, fraud, and abuse. AFL will keep fighting to expose the Biden-Harris Administration's racism, to stop the misuse of taxpayer funds, and to protect the integrity of our taxpayer-funded research enterprise.

Earlier this month, Cruz revealed that NSF gave more than $2.05 billion in federal funding to thousands of scientific research projects that push DEI initiatives, or as Cruz described, “neo-Marxist perspectives about enduring class struggle.” Between January 2021 and April 2024, more than 32,000 Prime Award grants were approved, and by 2024, 27 percent of all new grants that promoted DEI initiatives totaled $2.05 billion. The report noted that “social justice”-related grants amounted to $1.6 billion.

Corruption of science [5]<https://t.co/x9RVMnUKbO>— Elon Musk (@elonmusk) [6]October 30, 2024

Cruz’s report pointed out that most of the “extreme research proposals were led by principal investigators who also promote radical perspectives through on-campus activism and in their classrooms.”

Some examples from the report are listed below:

In 2023, NSF awarded Georgia Institute of Technology’s (Georgia Tech) Kelly Cross $99,791 to “disrupt[] racialized privilege in the STEM classroom” by acknowledging “Whiteness and White Supremacy” are “deeply ingrained in the past, present and future of U.S. Higher education.”

In 2022, NSF awarded San Jose State University $401,744 for an ongoing project to “transform[] science teaching and learning through empowering teachers and students as climate justice action researchers and change agents.” The project is meant to foster the “development of a hub for justice-centered science education and will produce school-based materials and professional development activities that examine the interwoven nature of climate justice and racial justice.

1.2.23 Take 2 Million Immigrants and Call Me in the Morning (2024-10-30 22:54)

At this point, the only thing we know for sure about the presidential election is that if Donald Trump loses, it will be because of his [1]personality, and if he [2]wins, it will be because of [3]immigration.

I know this because the media are publishing almost as many stories about the wonders of immigration as they are about Trump being Adolf Hitler. The New York Times, The Washington Post, NPR, MSNBC, the lickspittles at Cato – you can't open your computer or turn on the TV without encountering a tidal wave of lies about our beloved immigrants. (Former Washington Post readers, you'll just have to take my word for it.)

In the Times, Linda Qiu produced a [4]whopper of an article purporting to refute Trump's malicious nonsense about immigration, and as an immigrant herself, she must be completely unbiased, so I'll use that as my template.

Qiu begins with the silly claim that Trump and his vice-presidential nominee, JD Vance, blame everything on illegal immigrants. (Her article is already hanging in my Museum of Straw Man Arguments.)

"Be it gun violence, high [5]housing costs, [6]long wait times at [7]emergency rooms or an impending depletion of [8]disaster relief funding," she writes, "Mr. Trump and Senator JD Vance have offered the same diagnosis: All are because of unauthorized immigration."

Well, maybe not exclusively because of illegal immigration. (Only RACISM can be blamed for everything.) But while immigration is not 100 % responsible for these problems, it's hard to think of anything that's been made easier to solve by dumping millions of uneducated, poverty-stricken, non-English-speaking people on our country.

Nevertheless, Qiu claims Trump and Vance are not merely overstating the case, but are completely wrong. You see, she has "experts."

One "expert," Ieva Jusionyte, a professor at Brown University, said, "Vance is not correct that there is an influx of illegal guns from Mexico ... It is simply not a thing."

I totally trust someone who says, "it is simply not a thing." If she threw in "not on my bingo card" or "saying the quiet part out loud," she'd have sold me right there.

Except Jusionyte's claim is absurd. Where do liberals imagine [9]criminals get their guns? According to the Department of Justice, the guns used in crimes mainly come from [10]illegal sources, to wit: people involved in the sale of illegal drugs, markets for stolen goods and other criminals or criminal enterprises. (How about the much-maligned gun shows? A grand total of about [11]0.8 % of guns used in crimes come from gun shows. Ninety percent of guns used in crimes do not come from any retail source at all.)

As it happens, Mexican cartels are a gigantic criminal enterprise right on our border. They move enough fentanyl, synthetic methamphetamine and other drugs into our country [12]to kill about 100,000 Americans every year. But, according to Jusionyte, not [13]guns – no sir! Perhaps [14]cartel enforcers protect their "multibillion-dollar [15]narco empire" (New York Times) with complaints to the HR department.

The Times' Qiu cites other "government data and experts" who claim we're the ones sending guns to the cartels. (NYT rule: Always blame Americans.)

Liberals have been pushing this lie for 20 years. They finally got so desperate that Barack Obama's attorney general, Eric Holder, had to start putting U.S. guns directly into the [16]hands of Mexican drug cartels so that Democrats could [17]blame innocent American gun dealers. (For my younger readers, look up "[18]Operation Fast and Furious.")

Except Holder got caught, so the Democrats' next idea was to dummy up a phony study that's been [19]refuted a million times, but was bought hook, line and sinker by the crack Times reporter.

Citing "U.S. and Mexican governments and independent researchers" – I just hope the independent researchers use phrases like "that's not a thing" – Qiu somberly reported that "about 70 percent of firearms recovered at crime scenes in Mexico came from the United States."

That is precisely the opposite of the truth – also my idea for the Times’ new motto.

Mexico doesn’t send all guns retrieved from crime scenes to the U.S. for tracing, only the ones with serial numbers, indicating they came from the U.S. About 70 % of guns used by Mexican criminals have no serial numbers and no conceivable connection to the U.S., and, therefore, were [20]never sent to the U.S. for tracing.

It’s only among the roughly [21]30 % that were sent to the U.S. that a majority were traced to the U.S. That’s the Democrats’ big gotcha: Guns from the U.S. were traced to the U.S.! It’s a miracle! On the other hand, more than 80 % of all guns found at Mexican crime scenes were not from the U.S.

This is the sort of stupid game liberals play to try to convince us that all guns are bad and all Mexicans are good – definitely better than Americans, with their nasty gun culture.

As for housing, anyone with the intellect of a parakeet ought to be able to grasp that more people in need of housing will inevitably drive up the price of housing. It’s called the Law of Supply and Demand. If Qiu has figured out a way to repeal that law, she should publish immediately. Not only will she win a Nobel Prize in economics, but everyone in the world can have beachfront property and a classic six on Park Avenue.

Advertisement

On the other hand, if she hasn’t repealed the law of supply and demand, Qiu is, in fact, dumber than a parakeet.

Finally, of course mass third world immigration harms our [22]schools, [23]hospitals, Social Security, disaster relief and every other service meant for the American people. First, there are the gobs of money required to accommodate millions of non-English speakers – like [24]bilingual teachers, doctors, nurses, law enforcement officers, court translators, etc. All mandated by law.

But also, since 1970, we have been deliberately bringing in the poorest, least-educated people in the world. They don’t come close to making enough money to pay for the [25]massive amounts of services they consume. Every additional schoolbook, teacher, bus driver, janitor, hospital bed, catheter, liver transplant – that’s on you, taxpayer. (If Kamala Harris is elected, you’ll be on the hook for illegals’ [26]transgender operations, too.)

Not surprisingly, [27]a majority, 54 %, of immigrant-headed households are on welfare, compared to only 39 % of U.S.-born households – i.e., the people government assistance was intended to help. For illegal immigrants, the figure is [28]59 %. It might be time to update liberals' favorite cliché to, "We're a nation of immigrants on public assistance."

What happened to the claim that immigrants, especially illegals, aren't allowed to collect welfare? Oh, yeah, that's a lie.

Among other [29]free stuff, illegals get free school breakfasts and lunch, as well as women, infants and children (WIC) benefits, plus emergency room care for all their medical needs. Some states give illegals [30]Medicaid and SNAP. Most important, illegals simply need to drop [31]a baby, and they can [32]immediately start collecting full welfare on behalf of their allegedly, but [33]not really, "American citizen" kid.

Since the left will not stop bringing in the third world until our country is the same as every other country and there's no reason for anyone to come here, we don't have much of a choice on Tuesday.

1.3.1 Harris Is Ending Her Campaign With Lies and Smears (2024-11-03 22:24)

In the last two weeks, [1]Vice President Kamala Harris has been trying to revive her stagnant campaign by smearing [2]former President Donald Trump as being Hitlerian and a fascist. She claims Trump is planning to put his enemies in encampments.

Yet in the modern era, it was not Trump who put large numbers of U.S. residents and citizens into “relocation camps,” but liberal Democrat President Franklin D. Roosevelt who sent Japanese-American citizens and residents into them.

If Harris refers to Trump’s supposed fascist policies during his prior four-year tenure, there is no such evidence.

Nonetheless, the once “joyful” Harris is ending her campaign by trafficking in lies and smears reminiscent of the Joe McCarthy era.

Recall that fascists hijack law enforcement and the military to suspend constitutional rights and punish enemies. But Trump did neither.

Instead, in 2016, a corrupt FBI went after Trump himself during the Obama administration with the bogus Steele dossier.

The FBI, which in 2016 had hired the faker Steele, in 2020, fused with social media to suppress accurate news reporting of the embarrassing [3]Hunter Biden laptop scandal.

A number of FBI directors and intelligence officials—John Brennan, James Clapper, James Comey, Andrew McCabe—who openly sought to destroy Trump had a long history of either lying or feigning amnesia under oath.

Fascists try to warp the legal system. But Trump's own [4]Justice Department selected an independent special counsel to investigate the invented Russian collusion accusations against him.

In vast contrast, the Biden Justice Department coordinated with Georgia prosecutors Fani Willis and Nathan Wade, special counsel Jack Smith, Manhattan prosecutor Alvin Bragg, and New York Attorney General Letitia James to prosecute Trump, bankrupt him, and keep off the campaign trail.

Fascists use their governments to destroy their enemies.

During Trump's term, for the first time in history, the House of Representatives impeached a first-term president twice. And in another first, the Senate tried Trump as a private citizen.

A self-styled "anonymous" federal official bragged openly of deliberately, and likely unlawfully, leading a bureaucratic cabal to sabotage Trump's lawful executive orders.

Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, in collusion with other bureaucrats, deliberately leaked a classified presidential phone call in an effort to ensure that Trump was impeached.

Fascists seek to change existing laws to destroy opponents and illegally consolidate power.

Currently, it is only the Democrats who seek to pack the court, destroy the Electoral College, end the Senate filibuster, and create two new states and thus gain four left-wing senators.

In key states, they radically changed voting laws.

As a result, roughly 70 % of voters in 2020 did not cast their ballots in person on Election Day—even as the traditional rejection rates for fraudulent ballots mysteriously dived amid the influx.

Fascists arbitrarily nullify any laws they feel do not aid their agendas. Biden-Harris destroyed immigration law in order to bring in more than 12 million [5]illegal aliens and gain new constituencies.

They also protected sanctuary cities, as some 600 such jurisdictions illegally and with impunity nullified federal immigration laws in neo-Confederate fashion.

Fascists seek to politicize the military.

But in Trump's case, his former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Mark Milley, brazenly violated the Uniform Code of Military Justice by libeling Trump as a fascist.

Worse still, Milley sabotaged the chain of command by ordering theater commanders to report directly to him in times of serious crises.

And in near-treasonous fashion, Milley contacted his Chinese communist counterpart in the People's Liberation Army to assure him that he would warn the Chinese military before carrying out any Trump order he felt existentially dangerous.

Some of the most prominent retired four-star military officers—again in violation of the Uniform Code of Military Justice—publicly smeared Trump as a coward, liar, fascist, Hitler-like, a Mussolini, a creator of Auschwitz-like death camps, and worthy of being removed “the sooner the better.”

Fascists seek to control and weaponize the media. So, Facebook and Twitter both conspired with the FBI to censor news accounts favorable to Trump. The major newspapers, social media corporations, television networks, and public broadcasting systematically and continually attacked Trump, censured his supporters, and fused with his opponents.

Why then the charges of Trump the fascist and Hitler reincarnation?

Simple. Harris' personal negatives are rising, her polls inert. Her Marxist-Leninist-Maoist views.

She has abandoned her prior run-out-the-clock avoidance of the media, her smiley "joy" campaign, and instead now embraces the big lie, while President Joe Biden writes off Trump supporters as "garbage."

Harris is now confirming to voters that she really can neither think nor speak well and has no consistent agenda that appeals to the middle class.

So, in final desperation, Harris is smearing Trump as a fascist, even though, ironically, he has been the target of fascist machinations from her own party and supporters for nearly a decade.

1.3.2 One Big Thing Biden Will Leave Behind (2024-11-06 22:13)

The 1972 presidential election – which pitted incumbent President Richard Nixon against Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota – was an absolute wipeout.

Nixon won 49 of the 50 states, losing only Massachusetts

In Delaware that year, Nixon took 59.6 % of the popular vote and McGovern took only 39.2 %. But the incumbent Republican senator running for reelection there that year suffered a surprising defeat.

"President Nixon, a conservative, won handily in Delaware," reported the Wilmington News Journal the day after that election. "Yet, Democrat Joseph R. Biden, a moderate-to-liberal Democrat, defeated the more conservative Sen. J. Caleb Boggs despite Boggs' longevity in the Senate."

Age was a key issue in this race between Boggs and Biden – with Biden running ads that suggested Boggs was too old and local newspapers celebrating the then-29-year-old Biden's youth.

"Biden finally shifted into an oblique attack on Boggs' age, 63, in a series of ads implying that Boggs would have been good for the job in the 1950s but Biden was more in tune with the '70s," the Wilmington Morning News reported the day after Biden defeated Boggs.

The Wilmington Evening Journal carried this headline that day: "State Elects The Youngest U.S. Senator."

"Democrat Joseph R. Biden Jr. squeaked past two-term Republican incumbent J. Caleb Boggs yesterday to become the nation's youngest U.S. senator and score one of the nation's biggest political upsets," the paper reported.

"Biden, who will not be eligible for the Senate until he turns 30 on Nov. 20, upset Boggs by 2,986 votes," the paper said.

Biden was sworn in as a senator on Jan. 3, 1973.

What was the federal government like when Biden started his career in federal office 51 years ago?

In fiscal 1974 – the first full fiscal year that Biden served in the Senate – the federal government took in $263.224 billion in taxes and spent $269.359 billion, running a deficit of $6.135 billion, according to data published by the White House Office of Management and Budget.

Where did the federal government spend that $269.359 billion in fiscal 1974?

The largest spending category in that fiscal year when Biden was beginning his career in Washington was the Department of Defense – Military Programs. It consumed $77.864 billion in fiscal 1974

The second largest was the Social Security Administration, which spent $58.123 billion. The third largest was the Department of Treasury, which manages the federal debt and spent $35.369 billion. The fourth largest was the Department of Health and Human Services, which spent $28.062 billion.

As Biden approaches the end of his single term in the White House, we are now in fiscal year 2025 – more than half a century past the first full fiscal year of Biden’s time in the Senate. In that more-than-half a century, Biden has had some responsibility for federal spending except during the time when President Donald Trump had responsibility for signing federal spending bills. From January 1973 to January 2009, Biden served in the Senate. From January 2009 to January 2017, he served as vice president; and from January 2021 until now, he has served as president.

What was federal spending like in fiscal 2024, the last full year Biden has overseen?

Biden’s OMB estimates that the federal government collected approximately $5.0815 trillion in taxes in fiscal 2024 and spent approximately $6.9409 trillion, while running a deficit of approximately $1.8593 trillion.

The single largest spending category in fiscal 2024, according to the OMB estimates, was the Department of Health and Human Services, which spent approximately $1.6693 trillion. The second was the Social Security Administration, which spent approximately $1.5171 trillion. The third was the Department of the Treasury, which spent approximately $1.3456 trillion.

The OMB has also published a table that shows federal revenues, spending and deficits for every year going back to 1940 converted into constant fiscal year 2017 dollars. This table shows that in fiscal 1974, when Biden was serving his first full fiscal year in the Senate, the federal government spent approximately $1.2413 trillion in constant 2017 dollars. In fiscal 2024, it spent approximately $5.5876 trillion in constant 2017 dollars.

Thus, in this era when Biden has served all but four years in federal office, real federal spending has increased more than fourfold.

At the same time, according to the Congressional Research Service, the federal debt was $450.068 billion at the end of January 1973, the month Biden was sworn into the Senate. This Monday, according to the Treasury Department, it was $35.884 trillion.

When Biden released his last federal budget proposal in March, he declared his commitment to fiscal responsibility.

"Well, the budget I'm releasing today sends a clear message to the American people that we - what we value," he said. "First, fiscal responsibility."

"The first value," he repeated, "is fiscal responsibility."

History will not remember Biden that way.

1.3.3 TB - The Silent Killer Crossing Our Border (2024-11-06 22:34)

Open borders allow deadly narcotics and criminal gangs to invade our country. But there's a silent killer also making its way across the border: tuberculosis.

America's woke public health authorities are more concerned with equity - redistributing health resources among racial groups - than with keeping a disease the U.S. once nearly eradicated from becoming a threat again.

Reported cases of TB shot up 34 % from 2020 to 2023, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and continue to rise. More than three quarters of the cases are foreign-born people who picked up the disease in their home countries or traveling through countries with high TB rates. The TB incidence rate is 60 times higher in Haiti than in the U.S.

In New York City - the No. 1 destination for migrants - the incidence of TB is two and a half times the national average and still rising.

A staggering 89 % of TB patients in the Big Apple are foreign-born. The Flushing/Clearview areas of Queens, Sunset Park, Brooklyn and the Lower East Side of Manhattan are the neighborhoods most affected. The single largest national group with reported TB cases is from China, according to the city's most recent Annual Tuberculosis Summary.

TB is no laughing matter. Globally it has just overtaken COVID-19 as the biggest infectious disease killer on earth. There is no effective vaccine for it, but most cases – except severely drug-resistant ones – can be treated with antibiotics, provided they're taken daily without interruption for several months or longer. Not easy.

Western Europe, Scandinavia and North America are all reporting rising TB rates as migrants from poorer countries – where TB is common – arrive. UK health authorities are alerting the public to the distinctive cough that comes with TB.

In Europe, public health authorities are engaged in a lively debate about how to affordably screen TB carriers and keep them from infecting the local population. Someone can carry latent TB for years, then suddenly, after resettling in a new country, develop active – and highly contagious – TB and spread it by coughing and sneezing.

But in the U.S., the mission-confused CDC is stressing health equity and rushing resources to the "disproportionately affected" groups. That's fine, but how about also shielding Americans from the reemergence of a disease they've largely eliminated? In all the agency's reports, not a word about what's causing the surge in TB: an open border.

Immigrants who enter the country legally and apply for green cards are screened for TB with the interferon-gamma release assay test. Latent carriers are allowed into the country and referred to a local health department for follow-up treatment. It's voluntary and hit-or-miss but better than no screening at all.

Migrants flooding across the border illegally or entering with Biden's new parole app get no screening. Zip.

The CDC is MIA about screening and isolating the infected before they bring the disease to cities and towns across the country. The agency is forgetting its "Control and Prevention" mission.

Take the case of a Chinese migrant with active drug-resistant TB who crossed the border illegally in April. When her symptoms worsened and she was diagnosed on July 23 as "highly positive," nothing was done to isolate her. Instead, she was shuffled between immigration processing facilities in California and Louisiana, exposing hundreds.

Now Louisiana is suing federal authorities to keep the exposed migrants detained until they are medically cleared. State Attorney General Liz Murrill warns about illegals who are "untested for diseases that can threaten the lives of Louisiana and American citizens."

Thousands of unaccompanied minors with latent TB are being released into communities across the country, rather than being kept in Health and Human Services shelter facilities for the many months it would take to treat them with a course of antibiotics.

CDC data show a whopping 42 % increase in incidence of TB among children ages 5-14 in one year.

On Nov. 1, Sen. Mike Lee (R-Utah) demanded that Homeland Security head Alejandro Mayorkas erect precautions against a disease invasion, warning that TB "is rapidly spreading through the millions of unscreened illegal immigrants released into the interior of the United States."

The number of reported cases this year – just under 10,000 – is small but the trend is worrisome. The U.S. waged a war against TB in the 20th century and won. Americans shouldn't have to surrender to this disease now because of open borders.

1.3.4 Trump Gains Another Win With Arizona (2024-11-06 22:37)

On Wednesday evening, Decision Desk HQ officially called Arizona's 11 electoral votes in favor of President Elect Donald Trump. The race was called just before 9pm EST on Wednesday evening, approximately 24 hours after the polls closed. Officials from the state had previously warned [1]that it could take days or even weeks for the results to come in, [2]especially due to Maricopa County.

Decision Desk HQ projects Donald J. Trump wins the Presidential election in Arizona.[3] #DecisionMade: 8:59 PM EDT

While such a win was nevertheless expected given the polling trends, it still represents a flip from 2020, when President Joe Biden won the state.

Trump addressed supporters early on Wednesday morning, referencing not only his win in Pennsylvania and thus the presidential election, but also that he was leading in states such as Michigan and Arizona. RealClearPolling had Trump leading Arizona [7]by +2.8, making it one of his best battleground states. Nate Silver's [8]final forecast showed Trump winning by +2.4 in Arizona, though the poll trends had been favoring Harris for the past week.

Trump has indeed won the state, though the U.S. Senate race out of Arizona has still not yet been called. Democratic Rep. Ruben Gallego is considered to have the edge in his race against Republican Kari Lake to see who will replace retiring Sen. Kyrsten Sinema, who switched from the Democratic Party to becoming an Independent in late 2022. That being said, Lake does look to potentially be closing the gap.

With such a win, Trump has not only increased his electoral vote to 312 votes, and flipped a state from 2020, but he has won all seven swing states, thanks to wins in North Carolina, Georgia, Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and Nevada.

My College degrees were $33,000 from 2003 - 2015 of education at WITC New Richmond, Chippewa Valley Technical College and Rasmussen University. The Rasmussen University had a mascot, but no sports, no dorms, and mostly online education off message boards, and 10-12 pages of APA papers weekly. WITC and Chippewa Valley were on campus. There was no cameras on campus except they didn't enforce that totally. There were only class pictures by staff and events or holidays on the colleges instagram and facebook page unless someone snuck phone camera inside it.

1.3.6 It's Happening: Trump Tasks Elon Musk and Vivek Ramaswamy to Lead Department of Government Efficiency (2024-11-12 21:21)

This piece has been updated to include another post from Vivek Ramaswamy about other political endeavors.

During the 202 election, President-elect Donald Trump had the enthusiastic support from Elon Musk and Vivek Ramaswamy, the latter who had once been a primary opponent. After Musk's frequent references to being involved in a department to do with government efficiency, which our own Kurt Schlichter [1]predicted, the Trump-Vance transition team [2]made it official with a statement on Tuesday night.

According to the statement, Musk, in conjunction with his American Patriot PAC, and Ramaswamy, will lead the Department of Government Efficiency, also known as "DOGE." The statement also included a quote from Musk himself, who declared that "This will send shockwaves through the system, and anyone involved in Government waste, which is a lot of people!"

As the full statement read:

I am pleased to announce that the Great Elon Musk, working in conjunction with American Patriot Vivek Ramaswamy, will lead the Department of Government Efficiency ("DOGE"). Together, these two wonderful Americans will pave the way for my Administration to dismantle Government Bureaucracy, slash excess regulations, cut wasteful expenditures, and restructure Federal Agencies - Essential to the "Save America" Movement. "This will send shockwaves through the system, and anyone involved in Government waste, which is a lot of people!" stated Mr. Musk.

It will become, potentially, "The Manhattan Project" of our time. Republican politicians have dreamed about the objectives of "DOGE" for a very long time. To drive this kind of drastic change, the Department of Government Efficiency will provide advice and guidance from outside of Government, and will partner with the White House and Office of Management & Budget to drive large scale structural reform, and create an entrepreneurial approach to Government never seen before.

I look forward to Elon and Vivek making changes to the Federal Bureaucracy with an eye on efficiency and, at the same time, making life better for all Americans. Importantly, we will drive out the massive waste and fraud which exists throughout our annual $6.5 Trillion Dollars of Government Spending. They will work together to liberate our Economy, and make the U.S. Government accountable to "WE THE PEOPLE." Their work will conclude no later than July 4, 2026 - A smaller Government, with more efficiency and less bureaucracy, will be the perfect gift to America on the 250th Anniversary of The Declaration of Independence. I am confident they will succeed!

The statement also made reference to America's 250th birthday celebrating, noting that Ramaswamy and Musk will have concluded their work by July 4, 2026, on that 250th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

Musk was a frequent guest for the Trump-Vance rallies in the final weeks of the campaign, appearing in places such as Butler, Pennsylvania, as well as at Trump's October 27 rally at Madison Square Garden.

Ramaswamy shared the statement over his X account, also noting, "We will not go quietly," complete with a tag of Musk and the American flag.

We will not go gently, [3]@elonmusk. [4]<https://t.co/sbVka2vTiW>— Vivek Ramaswamy (@VivekGRamaswamy) [5]November 13, 2024

Later in the evening, Ramaswamy also posted that such a role means he is removing his name from consideration to replace Vice President-Elect JD Vance, who currently serves as a U.S. Senator representing Ohio. He was elected to the role in 2022.

"And yes, this means I'm withdrawing myself from consideration for the pending Senate appointment in Ohio. Whoever Governor DeWine appoints to JD's seat has some big shoes to fill. I will help them however I can," Ramaswamy posted, still signaling a willingness to help.

1.3.7 So, That's Who Trump Wants to Run the Pentagon (2024-11-12 21:24)

President-elect Donald J. Trump has announced his nominee to run the Pentagon: Fox and Friends co-host and decorated veteran Pete Hegseth. Hegseth, who continues to serve in the US Army, was seen as a frontrunner to run Veterans Affairs during the first Trump presidency and also served with various veterans' advocacy groups like Concerned Veterans for America and Vets for Freedom.

Mr. Trump had this statement regarding his nominee:

I am honored to announce that I have nominated Pete Hegseth to serve in my Cabinet as The Secretary of Defense. Pete has spent his entire life as a Warrior for the Troops, and for the Country. Pete is tough, smart and a true believer in America First. With Pete at the helm, America's enemies are on notice - Our Military will be Great Again, and America will Never Back Down. Pete is a graduate of Princeton University, and has a Graduate Degree from Harvard University. He is an Army Combat Veteran who did tours in Guantanamo Bay, Iraq, and Afghanistan. For his actions on the battlefield, he was decorated with two Bronze Stars, as well as a Combat Infantryman's Badge. Pete has been a host at FOX News for eight years, where he used that platform to fight for our Military and Veterans. Pete's recent book, "The War on Warriors," spent nine weeks on the New York Times best-sellers list, including two weeks at NUMBER ONE. The book reveals the leftwing betrayal of our Warriors, and how we must return our Military to meritocracy, lethality, accountability, and excellence. Pete has also led two Veterans Advocacy organizations, leading the fight for our Warriors, and our great Veterans. Nobody fights harder for the Troops, and Pete will be a courageous and patriotic champion of our "Peace through Strength" policy.

1.3.8 Pentagon Has Two Years to Prevent World War III (2024-11-13 22:39)

Xi Jinping has ordered the People's Liberation Army to be ready to seize Taiwan by 2027. Whether he launches an invasion may depend on President Trump's defense secretary. If confirmed by the Senate, Army National Guard veteran and Fox News host Pete Hegseth, Mr. Trump's [1]nominee, will have to confront the collapse of deterrence in Europe and the Middle East, resource constraints on Capitol Hill, recruitment challenges, and a deteriorating balance of power in the Indo-Pacific. The only way to promote peace is to go to war on day one—not with China, Russia or Iran but with the Pentagon bureaucracy.

The first task is to fix the U.S. Navy. America needs a maritime industrial base that can counter China's. Pentagon requirements for building maritime assets involve too many uncoordinated stakeholders. The Pentagon establishes war-fighting requirements—such as the number of missiles on a ship—without regard to interdependent technical specifications such as that ship's center of gravity. When those technical specifications aren't tightly linked to war-fighting requirements, the mismatch can cause underperformance or unplanned costs and time. The Defense Department should return to the board model that served the Navy well until the 1960s. The Navy would have a forum of senior stakeholders with a chairman empowered to decide both requirements and specifications, ensuring that these work in harmony.

The Navy should also create an office focused on expediting the development and deployment of certain war-fighting technologies, similar to the Rapid Capabilities Office at the U.S. Air Force and U.S. Space Force. The next secretary should insist on more flexible processes to deliver unmanned surface, aerial and underwater vehicles with speed and at scale. He must also work with Congress to help shipyards attract and retain talent. Rebuilding the maritime industrial base can also help save Aukus—the security partnership between Australia, the U.K. and the U.S.—which is in danger of stalling. Under the Aukus agreement, the U.S. Navy intends to sell Australia at least three Virginia-class attack submarines by the early 2030s. To realize this goal, the Navy needs to build more than today's 1.2 hulls a year and shrink maintenance backlogs that have sidelined nearly 40 % of the fleet. Addressing these challenges will demand consistent funding, which will come only if t etired four-star General Jack Keane has said "World War III is in the future" while discussing the U.S. election's impact on global stability.

Donald Trump [1]won last week's election at a time when the western world is grappling with a war in the Middle East, Russia's invasion of Ukraine and tensions with North Korea and China.

General Keane has said that while Trump's victory will force U.S. adversaries to "reassess," the world is headed for "global war."

He told [2]Fox News' Life, Liberty & Levin that the global security challenges that we are facing, "are the most serious, the most dangerous and the most challenging we have had since World War II.

He added: "And I do believe that we're in a pre-war era leading to global war - that is the status that we're facing."

General Keane went on to add that "all of these adversaries - China, Russia, Iran, North Korea, who are cooperating, collaborating coordinating together in a degree that exceeded the expectations of all of our intelligence agencies, by the way, and they have been honest about that appraisal" will have to "reassess, based on this election that's taken place."

"Because they have been acting so aggressively, so assertively, because they believe that our leadership in the United States is weak, that we've lost the political will to confront them, much less go and fight them," he added.

Later on in the interview, General Keane said: "This election has been a seminal event. And I'm convinced that President Trump knows that World War III is in the future.

"And we have got to take action to restore deterrence in dealing with our adversaries. And one of those is rebuilding a military - it has to be done. And we have to fix how the [3]Pentagon does its business, or we're going to be throwing taxpayers' money away."

General Keane went on to say: "And we absolutely have to support our allies who are fighting these adversaries. Israel is fighting a major adversary - give them everything they need to finish it as soon as possible.

He added: "Ukraine is fighting Russia - give them everything they need and finish it as soon as possible. These are investments in our security when our allies are fighting our adversaries."

A major theme in Trump's campaign message was his promise to end wars in the Middle East and Ukraine, often claiming that they would never have started if he was in office.

The President-elect has reportedly [4]spoken with Russian President Vladimir Putin in a post-election phone call, according to The Washington Post, which said Trump reminded Putin about "Washington's sizeable military presence in Europe" and said he would look for a follow-up conversation to discuss a "resolution of Ukraine's war."

Steven Cheung, Trump's communications director, told Newsweek in an emailed response to a request for comment that "we do not comment on private calls between President Trump and other world leaders."

Meanwhile, a senior [5] Hamas official has called for an immediate end to Israel's war against the group in the Gaza Strip in [6]a statement shared with Newsweek in the wake of Trump's victory.

In regards to North Korea, Pyongyang responded to [7]Donald Trump's claim that the nation's leader [8]Kim Jong Un misses him, saying [9]it does "not care" about his re-election.

Chinese President [10]Xi Jinping called President-elect Donald Trump [11]to congratulate him on his win, in a statement that also said he hopes China and the U.S. will strengthen communication, "properly manage differences" and "find a correct way for China and the United States to get along in the new era, so as to benefit both countries and the world."

Iran's foreign minister, [12]Abbas Araghchi, said that "Iran respects (the American people's) right to elect the President of their choice" and called for "respect," insisting that Iran is "NOT after nuclear weapons" and denying accusations that an Iranian man was involved in a [13]murder-for-hire scheme to kill Trump.

1.3.10 Melania Trump Sets the Record Straight About Not Meeting With Jill Biden (2024-11-13 22:41)

Future First Lady Melania Trump did not join her husband, President-elect Donald Trump, at a White House meeting on Wednesday with President Joe Biden.

In a statement, the Office of Melania Trump wished her husband “great success” in the transition process, but slammed “several unnamed sources in the media” for providing “false, misleading, and inaccurate information” about the ordeal.

Mrs. Trump will not be attending today’s meeting at the White House. Her husband’s return to the Oval Office to commence the transition process is encouraging, and she wishes him great success.

This week, the Daily Mail reported that Trump was “snubbing” Jill Biden by skipping the visit to the White House (via [2]Daily Mail):

Traditionally, when the outgoing president hosts the incoming president-elect in the Oval Office, the first lady hosts her successor for tea in the residence.

Michelle Obama hosted Melania Trump for tea in the Yellow Room after the 2016 election. However, Melania Trump did not meet with Jill Biden after the contentious 2020 race as Donald Trump falsely and repeatedly claimed he was the true win

A source told Daily Mail that the two women have not spoken since Donald Trump defeated Harris in the election.

Daily Mail claimed that Jill Biden’s office “extended congratulations and a joint invite to the Trumps to meet at the White House.”

Reportedly, the Trumps have not been back to the White House since they left the morning of Biden's inauguration in 2021.

1.3.11 Thanks to Tim Walz, Kamala Lost This Key State (2024-11-13 22:42)

Vice President Kamala Harris' first significant campaign decision backfired almost immediately, costing her and the Democratic Party the keys to the White House.

Harris's choice to pick Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz (D) over Jewish Gov. Josh Shapiro (D-PA) had a lasting effect that, according to a report, is among the top reasons she lost to President-elect Donald Trump. Exit polls reveal that in addition to Harris struggling to unify the Democratic base, her running mate, Walz, also had trouble rounding up Americans from a critical group: Jewish voters.

Although the Harris-Walz ticket won Pennsylvania Jewish voters 48 to 41 percent against Trump and Vice President-elect JD Vance, leaving Shapiro off the ticket was a significant failure for Democrats. A survey conducted by Honan Strategy Group for the Teach Coalition, a branch of the Jewish Orthodox Union, found that 53 percent of Jewish voters would have preferred Shapiro as vice president over Walz.

If 53 percent had voted for Harris and had Shapiro been her running mate, support for Trump would have decreased to 38 percent.

Ultimately, Trump and Vance [1] won Pennsylvania by securing the state's 19 electoral votes, 50.4 percent to Harris' 48.6 percent.

Meanwhile, 43 percent of Pennsylvania voters suggested that the increase in antisemitism influenced how they voted in the 2024 election. Ironically, Shapiro was reportedly targeted by an "ugly, antisemitic campaign." As a result, Harris failed to secure the majority among a group traditionally favored by Democrats.

"The far-left has made anti-Israel activity a cornerstone. They have sway in the Democratic Party," the founder and CEO of the Teach Coalition, Maury Litwack, said. "This is a wake-up call for the Democratic Party in New York."

Republican Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) accused the Democratic Party of being antisemitic.

"You oughta ask yourself why didn't she pick Josh Shapiro as her VP?" Texas Cruz said during an interview on Fox News. "The answer is, in today's Democrat Party, they could not stomach a candidate who was Jewish."

1.3.12 Kamala Harris Was Always Doomed (2024-11-13 22:43)

The Republicans had made massive gains in voter registration since 2020, when [2]Donald Trump lost the Electoral College by only a few thousand strategically placed votes.

[3]Republicans began to master the transition to non-Election Day balloting—first engineered by the Left in 2020 under the pretext of COVID-19. Republicans not only vastly exceeded their early or mail-in voting totals of 2020, but by Election Day they often outpaced Democrats.

For months, it was widely reported, albeit grudgingly, that there were large defections in Hispanic and African American voters from [4]Vice President Kamala Harris.

The betting odds over the past three weeks usually favored Trump.

Harris simply could not run on anything she had so emphatically promoted in the past—given these left-wing, unpopular, and failed policies had no majority support.

So, the chameleon Harris renounced her prior 30 years of earlier radical advocacy that, along with her race and gender, had forced [5]Joe Biden in 2020 to select her as vice president.

There was no way Harris could still support banning fracking, defunding police, opposing border security and the wall, or calling for mass amnesties and an end to the Border Patrol.

Nor could Harris still promote racial reparations, ending private health care insurance, or advocating higher income and capital gains taxes as well as a wealth tax.

Much less could Harris still boast of wanting mandatory “buyback” or confiscation of some semi-automatic weapons—including entering private homes to seize them.

So given all that, Harris simply flipped—and serially lied about who she was, renouncing her entire political career.

Indeed, Harris began to copycat Trump’s own positions. And so, she never convinced the electorate that she would not flip back to her earlier radicalism once elected or even in defeat finishing out her vice-presidential term.

There were three damning realities that even if Harris had been a gifted politician and an adept speaker, she could never have changed.

One, Harris was preposterously running as a turn-the-page, new-generation candidate.

But why had she not sought to implement such a “new chapter” for the prior 45 months as an incumbent vice president, especially while in office during the campaign itself?

Voters knew the answer: The entire Biden-Harris tenure was an utter, far left-wing disaster, one for which the radical Harris 1.0 had for three-plus years claimed co-ownership.

Two, why did Harris avoid all impromptu interviews and the media for most of the campaign—only to reverse course and seek out reporters when her polls eroded?

Did it hurt Harris more to avoid the media—or meet with reporters and thus confirm her inanity to millions of viewers and listeners?

Three, why did Harris serially lie to America that Biden was hale and vigorous as president—until hours before his senility prompted leftist donors and party insiders to force him off the ticket?

And why could she not declare her independence from the historically unpopular Biden?

Harris instead chose to terrify voters to vote against a demonized and “fascist” Trump rather than to vote for Harris and her make-believe agendas.

But even in demonizing Trump, the maladroitness Harris hit a wall.

By campaign’s end, Trump’s favorables were often higher than her own.

His prior four years as president polled higher than the current Biden-Harris train wreck.

Trump, the purported “racist,” won more Hispanic and [6]black voters than past “moderate” Republicans such as Bob Dole, John McCain, or Mitt Romney.

It was hard to damn Trump as a crazy fascist when iconic liberal figures, like Robert Kennedy Jr. or Tulsi Gabbard, were campaigning for him.

Trump had reinvented the Republican Party by substituting ecumenical, middle-class solidarity for polarizing racial tribalism. Elitist Democrats were left to cater to the interests of their well-off and very rich donors as well as the subsidized poor.

Finally, workaholic Trump campaigned nonstop for two years, won all the Republican primaries, and was endorsed by his two chief primary rivals.

In contrast, the Harris “nomination” was the product of a coup that, in 48 hours, removed from the ticket an incumbent president, nullified the will of his 14 million primary voters, and coronated Harris, who had neither won nor ever entered a primary.

That late July forced abdication of Biden lent an air of illegitimacy to Harris’s candidacy, as well as truncating the time available to campaign.

Finally, Harris’ first major decision was to nominate as her vice president the buffoonish and inept [7]Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz. His radicalism, serial lying, and herky-jerky “weirdness” proved a force multiplier of her own mediocrity.

In contrast, the calm, empathetic, and astute Sen. [8]JD Vance of Ohio, Trump’s running mate, eviscerated Walz in their sole debate and did the same to the media.

Add it all up—and Harris and her star-crossed candidacy were simply and rightly doomed.

1.3.13 Celebrate Diversity (Or Else)! (2024-11-21 10:04)

Somewhere along the line the Democratic Party went from “celebrate diversity” to “CELEBRATE DIVERSITY OR ELSE, YOU BIGOT!” They lost the American public – that was perfectly happy to acknowledge firsts and applaud people who achieved them – once they demanded conformity and the bastardizing of reality. And now we find ourselves fighting to keep reality in our public spaces and men out of the ladies’ room.

If you could travel back in time just a few years and tell your younger self that one political party would be fighting tooth and nail to make sure a man in a dress is treated like they were your mother, you’d have your older-self committed. Yet, that’s where the Democrats have led society.

When Delaware elected the first “trans-woman” to Congress, a man named Tim McBride who now goes by Sarah, you knew a conflict was coming between Democrats and reality. See, McBride is one of those leftists who want to be celebrated for existing in a way the left deems important. We normal people are not worthy of celebration for our existence, and most of our accomplishments are diminished because of our skin color, our sexuality or political beliefs – the same reason Democrats celebrate their chosen groups.

As a “trans woman,” the left insists, McBride is a “real woman.” Every bit as real a woman as your sister, your wife, your mother – you can tell by the way a hyphenate is required to explain the penis.

It’s insanity, of course, but people can live insanely if they so choose. What they don’t have is the right to force everyone else to live in crazyland with them.

I’m not saying be rude – Tim changed his name to Sarah, so I’d call him Sarah – but I’m not going to pretend he’s a woman or use whatever pronouns he decrees as the only acceptable ones to use in reference to him.

I would mostly rectify this situation by avoiding him; live and let live doesn’t mean I have to live with anyone or anyone has to live with me. If we worked together, I’d deal with him as little as possible (a feeling that would probably be mutual), but any required interactions would be respectful. Outside of work, we wouldn’t interact at all. I’m too old to play these game or to allow reality to be perverted in order to protect the fragile psyche of anyone – grow the hell up and be more than superficial and we can talk, till then...pass.

That being said, the outrage over Congresswoman Nancy Mace’s desire to keep men out of women’s bathrooms and locker rooms is everything wrong with the left, why they lost the election and why they should continue to lose in perpetuity.

I have no interest in the people who created the concept of “safe spaces” and “trigger warnings” for adults uncomfortable with having someone who disagrees with their politics appearing somewhere on campus having a role in my life at all. If you bring in puppies and Play-Doh for snowflakes to play with after shouting down conservatives or in their post-throwing Molotov cocktails at police, your indifference toward a genuine rape survivor being uncomfortable having men, in a dress or not, in a women-only space speaks louder than you ever could with Metallica’s sound system.

Many on the left are pretending to be outraged that so many conservatives, especially women, are trying to make one little old person feel uncomfortable; that they have no right to do that. Why does one man have the right to make so many other people (and it’s not just Republicans who feel it, they’re just the only ones who won’t be destroyed for admitting it) uncomfortable; to make a rape survivor uncomfortable?

It's free for female Democrat Members of Congress to pretend to be angry at Mace, "Believe all women" hypocrisy aside, each Member has a private bathroom in their office, so they can make sure it's never an issue for them, if they're careful.

But the ultimate simple fact is if it weren't for the demands of Democrats to "celebrate" this, rather than just exist and ignore it, this whole issue would likely never have risen to this level. McBride has been all over leftist media, with multiple interviews on CNN and MSNBC, for the express reason that he's a "trans woman." There is literally no other reason to even acknowledge the existence of a backbench Freshman Congressman from Delaware or anywhere else.

Live by raising a stink, die by raising a stink.

The odds are about even that you've been in a public bathroom with someone in drag, either direction, or just someone of the opposite gender. As the father of 2 girls, I've been a part of it. Most people don't notice because you don't do anything to draw attention to yourself – the business gets done, hands get washed and you get the hell out – no one goes into a bathroom to make friends or put on a show.

But if your existence is continually validated through external forces and attention, positive or negative, you can't just go about your business. It's the mentality that asks, "Did I really eat a meal if I didn't post a picture of it on Instagram?"

That's not a healthy way to live, but if an adult wants to live that way, who cares? The problem comes in when others insist you live that way too, or else. There's a difference between not caring what an adult does, as long as what they do it with is of age and willing, and being forced to applaud it. Democrats don't care as much about the first part; they demand conformity through the second. To hell with that.

1.3.14 John Oliver Defended Transgender Athletes Competing in Women's Sports. JK Rowling Responded. (2024-11-21 10:07)

This week, best-selling author J.K. Rowling ripped into HBO's John Oliver for one of his recent monologues defending transgender athletes in women's sports.

"There are vanishingly few trans girls competing in high schools anywhere, even if there were more, trans kids like all kids vary in terms of athletic ability, and there is no evidence they pose any threat to safety or fairness," Oliver said on Friday.

Rowling responded in a lengthy post shared on X.

"An undoubtedly intelligent person spouts absolute bullshit to support something he wants to be true, but isn't," Rowling wrote, before delving into the fact that a recent report from the UN showed that women have lost nearly 900 medals to men.

"Again and again I've come up against men who argue exactly what Oliver does here, using the very same talking points. With a straight face, the 'believe the science' guys will say 'actually, we don't yet have enough data to say whether men and boys are stronger and faster than women and girls'. The 'be kind' crew can't see what the issue is. 'Why are you bothered, it only affects a tiny minority of females?'" she added.

"They'll stare unabashedly into a camera and insist that their audiences' eyeballs are incapable of seeing what's plain as day, and that there's something wrong with the great unwashed for believing that girls are being robbed of opportunities and put at physical risk. If you want to tell the world you're happy to watch females suffer injury, humiliation and the loss of sporting opportunities to bolster an elitist post-modern ideology embraced by a minute fraction of the world's population, fair enough; you're allowed your opinion. But if you've just told girls they don't deserve fair sport, maybe rethink using all too real and common sexual predation against young women as a punchline for your 'edgy' closing joke," she concluded.

Nothing about this feels good, because John Oliver generously gave his time for my charity Lumos and I liked him very much when I met him, but God knows, if you ever need an example of motivated reasoning and confirmation bias, this video's for you. An undoubtedly intelligent... [1]<https://t.co/3IS4onzXq0>— J.K. Rowling (@jk_rowling) [2]November 17, 2024

Rowling has long been outspoken about transgenders competing in women's sports. In May, Townhall [3]covered how she was accused of "bullying" after she called a transgender soccer manager a "straight, white, middle-aged bloke" on social media. Rowling's statement came after a new law was enacted in Scotland making "misgendering" someone a crime.

That's not all. In recent months, Townhall has [4]covered how Rowling fired back at a news outlet that referred to a so-called "transgender" killer as a woman. In addition, the United Kingdom's first "transgender" news anchor [5]reported Rowling to the police for intentionally "misgendering" "her" as a "man" on social media.

1.3.15 Restoring Deterrence Will Prevent Endless Wars (2024-11-21 10:10)

On Jan. 3, 2020, the Trump administration conducted a drone strike near Baghdad International Airport, killing Iranian Maj. Gen. [1]Qassem Soleimani.

Soleimani had a long record of waging surrogate wars against Americans, especially during the Iraq conflict and its aftermath.

After the Trump cancellation of the Iran Deal, followed by U.S. sanctions, Soleimani reportedly stepped up violence against regional American bases—most of which [2]President Donald Trump himself ironically wished to remove.

A few days later, Iran staged a performance-art retaliatory strike against Americans in Iraq and Syria, assuming Trump had no desire for a wider Middle East war.

So, Iran launched 12 missiles that hit two U.S. airbases in Iraq. Supposedly, Tehran had warned the Trump administration of the impending attacks that killed no Americans. Later reports, however, suggested that some Americans suffered concussions, while more damage was done to the bases than was initially disclosed.

Nonetheless, this Iranian interlude seemed to reflect Trump’s agenda of avoiding “endless wars” in the Middle East while restoring deterrence that prevented, not prompted, full-scale conflicts.

Yet in a second Trump administration, rethreading the deterrence needle without getting into major wars may become far more challenging. The world of today is far more dangerous than when Trump left in 2021.

An inept Biden administration has utterly destroyed U.S. deterrence abroad through both actual and symbolic disasters: the Chinese dressing down of U.S. diplomats in Anchorage; the humiliating skedaddle from Afghanistan; the brazen flight of a Chinese spy balloon across the U.S.; the invasion of Ukraine by Russia; the Oct. 7, 2023 massacre of 1,200 Israelis; the serial Houthi attacks on international shipping in the Red Sea; the visible restraint of Israel from fully replying to Iranian missile attacks on its homeland; and renewed bellicosity on the part of both North Korea and China toward American allies such as Japan, South Korea, and Taiwan.

Of course, a second-term Trump must radically reform the [3]Pentagon and beef up the military while warning enemies of the consequences to follow from any unwise aggression.

But if opponents believe such admonitions remain only vocal threats, then empty verbiage surely will erode deterrence further—such as [4]President Joe Biden’s serial and empty brag-gadocio, “Don’t!”

Biden’s past theatrical finger-shaking translated into aggressors like Russian President Vladimir Putin going into Ukraine, Iran sending missiles into Israel, and the Houthis serially hitting shipping in the Red Sea.

Given the past messes of the Iraqi, Libyan, and Syrian interventions, and the catastrophic Biden humiliation in Afghanistan, Trump in 2024 is much more emphatic about the need to avoid such overseas dead-end entanglements or even the gratuitous use of force that historically can sometimes lead to tit-for-tat entanglements.

Still, Trump’s selection of [5]JD Vance as vice president, along with Tulsi Gabbard, RFK Jr., and Tucker Carlson as close advisers, coupled with the announcements that former Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and prior U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley will not be in the administration, may be misinterpreted by scheming foreign adversaries as proof of Trump neo-isolationism.

Moreover, the U.S. is battered by an unsustainable $37 trillion national debt and a nonexistent southern border that saw 12 million illegal aliens enter with impunity.

So, the use of force abroad is now often seen in a zero-sum fashion as coming at the expense of unaddressed American needs at home.

Moreover, a woke, manpower-short military has not achieved strategic advantages from wars abroad, while disparaging and alienating the very working-class recruits who disproportionately fight and die in them.

Recently, even as President-elect Trump's inner circle emphasized an end to endless conflicts, Trump warned Putin not to escalate his attacks against Ukraine. Yet that advice was followed by a Russian massive drone onslaught against civilian Ukrainian targets.

Putin no doubt wishes to encourage American enemies to test Trump's deterrent rhetoric against his campaign's domestic promises to mind America's own business at home.

Is there a way to square the deterrence circle?

Trump will have to speak clearly and softly while carrying a club. And for the first few months of his administration, he will be tested as never before to make it clear to Iran and its terrorist surrogates, China, North Korea, and Russia, that aggression against U.S. interests will be swiftly and quietly met with disproportionate and overwhelming repercussions.

Yet Trump will likely have to rely on drones, missiles, and airstrikes and not on major engagements, to deter enemies from aggression—and his domestic critics from claiming he turned into a globalist interventionist.

He is not.

Trump remains a Jacksonian. But such deterrence entails warning from time to time the reckless and adventurous abroad that our allies have no better friend than America and our adversaries no worse enemy.

In other words, Trump must remind Americans only by periodically deterring enemies can he prevent endless wars.

1.3.16 Remembering Why the U.S. Navy Was Formed: To Combat Islamic Terror (2024-11-21 11:27)

uring a recent mosque sermon at the North Hudson Islamic Center in New Jersey, a [1]CAIR official, Ayman Aishat, made a seemingly startling claim:

We live in America, the United States of America. Brothers and sisters, those who do not know history, not too long ago, the USA was paying the jizya to the Ottoman Caliph.

Could this be?

First, let us define jizya. In brief (full discussion [2]here), it is the monetary tribute that conquered or cowed infidels pay their Islamic overlords in exchange for peace, according to Koran 9:29:

Fight those among the People of the Book [Christians and Jews] who do not believe in Allah, nor the Last Day, nor forbid what Allah and his Messenger have forbidden, nor embrace the religion of truth [Islam], until they pay the jizya with willing submission and feel themselves subdued.

And yes, Aishat is correct: once upon a time, in its fledgling youth, the United States succumbed to paying jizya to appease Muslim terrorists. That story is instructive — not least as it includes the genesis of the U.S. Navy.

Between the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries, the Muslims of North Africa (“Barbary”) thrived on enslaving Europeans. According to the conservative estimate of American professor Robert Davis, “between 1530 and 1780 there were almost certainly a million and quite possibly as many as a million and a quarter white, European Christians enslaved by the Muslims of the Barbary Coast.” (With countless European women selling for the price of an onion, little wonder by the late 1700s, European observers noted how “the inhabitants of Algiers have a rather white complexion.”)

As Barbary slaving was a seafaring venture, nearly no part of Europe was untouched. From 1627 to 1633, Lundy, an island off the west coast of Britain, was actually occupied by the pirates, whence they pillaged England at will. In 1627 they raided Denmark and even far-off Iceland, hauling a total of some 800 slaves.

Such raids were accompanied by the trademark hate. One English captive writing around 1614 noted that the Muslim pirates “abhor the ringing of the [church] bells being contrary to their Prophet’s command,” and so destroyed them whenever they could. In 1631, nearly the entire fishing village of Baltimore in Ireland was raided, and “237 persons, men, women, and children, even those in the cradle” were seized.

By the late eighteenth century, Barbary’s strength relative to Europe had plummeted, and the Muslims could no longer raid the European coastline for slaves — certainly not on the scale of previous centuries — so its full energy was spent on raiding non-Muslim merchant vessels. European powers responded by buying peace through tribute, which the Muslims accepted as jizya.

Fresh and fair meat appeared on the horizon once the newly born United States broke free of Great Britain and was therefore no longer protected by the latter’s jizya payments. In 1785, Muslim pirates from Algiers captured two American vessels, the Maria and Dauphin. They enslaved and paraded the sailors through the streets to jeers and whistles. Considering the horrific ways Christian slaves were treated in Barbary — sadistically tortured, pressured to convert, and sodomized, as described in the writings of missionaries, redeemers, and others (e.g., John Foxe, Fr. Dan, Fr. Jerome Maurand, Robert Playfair; see [3]pp. 279-283) — when the Dauphin’s Captain O’Brian later wrote to Thomas Jefferson that “our sufferings are beyond our expression or your conception,” he was not exaggerating.

Jefferson and John Adams, then ambassadors to France and England respectively, met with Tripoli’s ambassador to Britain, Abdul Rahman Adja, in an effort to ransom the enslaved Americans and establish peaceful relations. In a letter to Congress dated March 28, 1786, the hitherto puzzled American ambassadors laid out the source of the Barbary’s unprovoked animosity:

We took the liberty to make some inquiries concerning the grounds of their pretensions to make war upon nations who had done them no injury, and observed that we considered all mankind as our friends who had done us no wrong, nor had given us any provocation. The ambassador answered us that it was founded on the laws of their Prophet, that it was written in their Koran, that all nations who should not have acknowledged their authority were sinners, that it was their right and duty to make war upon them wherever they could be found, and to make slaves of all they could take as prisoners, and that every Musselman who should be slain in battle was sure to go to Paradise.

This, of course, was a paraphrase of Islam's so-called "Sword Verse" (Koran 9:5), which ISIS [4]invoked earlier this year.

At any rate, the ransom demanded to release the American sailors was over fifteen times greater than what Congress had approved, and little came of the meeting.

Back in Congress, some agreed with Jefferson that "it will be more easy to raise ships and men to fight these pirates into reason, than money to bribe them." In a letter to a friend, George Washington wondered:

In such an enlightened, in such a liberal age, how is it possible that the great maritime powers of Europe should submit to pay an annual tribute to the little piratical States of Barbary? Would to Heaven we had a navy able to reform those enemies to mankind, or crush them into nonexistence.

But the majority of Congress agreed with John Adams: "We ought not to fight them at all unless we determine to fight them forever." Considering the perpetual, existential nature of Islamic hostility, Adams was probably more right than he knew.

Congress settled on emulating the Europeans and paying off the terrorists, though it would take years to raise the demanded ransom. In 1794 Algerian pirates captured eleven more American merchant vessels.

Two things resulted: the Naval Act of 1794 was passed, and a permanent standing U.S. naval force was established. But because the first war vessels would not be ready until 1800, American jizya payments — which took up 16 % of the entire federal budget — began to be made to Algeria in 1795. In return, some 115 American sailors were released, and the Islamic sea raids formally ceased.

American jizya and "gifts" over the following years caused the increasingly emboldened pirates to respond with increasingly capricious demands.

One of the more ignoble instances occurred in 1800, when Captain William Bainbridge of the George Washington sailed to the Dey of Algiers (an Ottoman honorific for the pirate lords of Barbary) with what the latter deemed insufficient tribute. Referring to the American crew as “my slaves,” Dey Mustapha proceeded to order Bainbridge to transport the Muslim’s own annual tribute — hundreds of black slaves and exotic animals — to the Ottoman sultan in Constantinople (Istanbul).

Adding insult to insult, the Dey commanded the U.S. flag taken down from the George Washington and the Islamic flag hoisted in its place; and, no matter how rough the seas might be during the long voyage, Bainbridge was ordered to make sure the vessel faced Mecca five times a day for the prayers of Mustapha’s ambassador and entourage. Bainbridge condescended to being the Muslim pirate’s delivery boy.

Soon after Jefferson became president in 1801, Tripoli demanded another, especially exorbitant payment, followed by an increase in annual payments — or else. “I know,” Jefferson concluded, “that nothing will stop the eternal increase of demand from these pirates but the presence of an armed force.” So he refused the ultimatum, and, on May 10, 1801, the pasha of Tripoli, having not received his timely jizya installment, proclaimed jihad on the United States.

Thus began America’s first war as a nation, the First Barbary War (1801-1805) — and it was with Muslims who think and act just like ISIS.

1.3.17 The Morning Briefing: Are the Lawfare Lunatics Sweating Yet? (2024-11-21 11:28)

Happy Thursday, dear Kruiser Morning Briefing friends. Brezmerick never ceased to be amazed at how well Irish coffee paired with Count Chocula.

The Democrats and their flying monkeys in the mainstream media Spent a good portion of this year insisting that Donald Trump would be a vengeful tyrant if he was elected again, hell-bent on retribution against, well, them. That didn't go over quite like they thought it would, obviously. Heck, it sounded like a strong selling point to some of us.

When Trump returns to office in January, he'll have plenty of work just beginning to undo the overwhelming damage that Joe Biden and the commie cabal running his brain have done. Getting the southern border under control, putting out the international fires that President LOLEightyonemillion has started, and ridding the economy of all of the Dem stink will be time-consuming. It's not likely that Trump will be spending his lunches plotting payback.

The Democrats are going to be alternately relieved and crushed when they realize Trump isn't going to Hitler for them.

There is still a conversation to be had about some of the worst players in the 2024 anti-Trump jihad. People tasked with upholding law and justice became an election interference racket and were fervently hoping that they could get him in jail before the election. It was a truly frightening, un-American spectacle, and a legitimate threat to the Republic.

Article III Project founder and president Mike Davis emphasized that New York authorities' postponing Donald Trump's sentencing illustrates how political the whole case was from the start in exclusive comments to PJ Media.

Davis, a Republican legal expert, has repeatedly called out the judges, DOJ officials, and DAs involved in the many and various lawfare cases against Trump. Now, corrupt Judge Juan Merchan and [1]Soros-backed Manhattan DA Alvin Bragg admitted that Trump's sentencing in the case involving alleged "hush money" payouts and records falsification has been [2]indefinitely delayed. Davis sees this as a vindication not only of Trump but of all those who consistently exposed the corrupt lawfare.

Davis stated, "The postponement of the sentencing in New York proves that this case was always about Democrat lawfare and election interference." If the case were legitimate, why keep delaying the sentencing?

It is difficult to figure out who the most egregious Trump-hating perverters of the law were in this tawdry assault on justice, but Alvin Bragg and Juan Merchan would probably get my vote. Bragg is a daddy issues-laden freak show who doesn't hide his creepy obsession with Trump. He's a typical Soros hack who is more interested in protecting criminals than law-abiding citizens.

We know that Trump can deal with the rot at the federal level. Department of Justice employees have been operating as Joe Biden's personal goon squad since Biden got into office, and they know what's coming. Their days of arresting family men for singing hymns outside abortion clinics are numbered. This is something I shared in a column [3] I wrote the other day:

"This is by far the biggest crisis of morale, and flat-out depression and horror that I've ever seen," former Assistant Deputy Attorney General Harry Litman says of the mood at the Department of Justice after President-elect Donald Trump named former Florida congressman Matt... [4] pic.twitter.com/wYuOuyrFY3— CBS News (@CBSNews) [5] November 15, 2024

Whatever housecleaning Trump ends up doing at the DOJ won't be retribution; it will be a necessary reorganization for the survival of the United States.

I'm not even sure what can be done about the likes of Bragg, Merchan, and the rest of the lawless people in the legal profession who targeted Donald Trump. The mood of the electorate is hopefully giving them some cause for concern. As we just saw in Los Angeles with the defeat of the criminal-friendly DA George Gascón, the Soros operatives aren't safe even in the bluest of cities.

Some kind of message has to be sent that what we witnessed this year can never happen again. The Democrats can't come away thinking that lawfare is an option in every election, which they will if Bragg & Co. emerge from this unscathed.

1.3.18 Kyiv Reports Russia Fired an ICBM Into Ukraine. A Western Official Denies It. (2024-11-21 11:29)

The Ukrainian military is reporting that Russia fired an intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) along with six other missiles at Dnipro, in Ukraine's southeast. But an unnamed Western official [1]told ABC that the missile was not a long-range weapon, but rather a shorter-range ballistic missile.

The Russian missile was launched from the Astrahan region, in Russia's southwest. According to Google Maps, the distance from Astrahan oblast to the city of Dnipro is [2]more than 1,200 miles. The other missiles fired at Dnipro were KH-101 missiles with a range of about 2,100 miles.

If true, this is a major and troubling escalation by Russian President Vladimir Putin, after Biden did some escalating of his own, giving the green light for Ukraine to launch American ATACMS into Russian territory for the first time. This kind of tit-for-tat escalation could get out of control. Previously, Putin said he changed Russia's nuclear doctrine to make any attack on Russian territory by Ukraine with Western missiles an attack that would require a nuclear response.

I'm not trying to be an alarmist. But once the escalation game starts, someone is going to have to climb down off the ledge or the world will be in big trouble. I don't see Putin backing down. And the real scary thing is that Biden is allowing Ukraine to unleash the full panoply of U.S. weapons on Russia proper because he thinks that his "Ukraine Project" won't last much into Donald Trump's term of office.

Obviously, Putin was sending a message with the ICBM launch. Washington and the West probably see this "message" in the same context as other Putin warnings about red lines in giving Ukraine Abrams tanks, fighter jets, and long-range missiles.

[3]Associated Press:

The developments come as the war has taken on a growing international dimension with the arrival of North Korean troops to help Russia on the battlefield — a development that U.S. officials said prompted U.S. President Joe Biden's policy shift on allowing Ukraine to fire longer-range U.S. missiles into Russia. The Kremlin responded with threats to escalate further.

Putin has previously warned the U.S. and other NATO allies that allowing Ukraine to use Western-supplied longer-range weapons to hit Russian territory would mean that Russia and NATO are at war.

Biden keeps stepping across Putin's red lines, confident that the Russian president won't act on his threats. What if Biden is wrong? I'm sure Biden and his advisors have gamed out dozens of scenarios, and the psyche folks at CIA have analyzed Putin's words and actions and are assuring Biden that Putin isn't serious, just as he wasn't serious about enforcing all his other "red lines" during the war.

I needn't remind anyone that if Biden and his advisors are wrong, there are no do-overs, no second chances. And that's a huge problem.

If you've never read it, you should read Robert F. Kennedy's "Thirteen Days," a book about the Cuban missile crisis. The movie doesn't do the book justice. It was a harrowing time, as you can imagine. President Kennedy struggled not to put Krushchev in a corner while trying to keep the U.S. from surrendering.

In the aftermath, the myth arose that "We were eyeball to eyeball and I think the other fellow just blinked." In fact, Kennedy gave up some strategically valuable Jupiter ICBM's stationed in Turkey, so who "blinked" is a matter of perspective.

I don't trust Joe Biden to manage the situation. At this point, presidents are concerned about their "legacy." How that plays out in Ukraine and with Russia will determine whether Biden and we will even have a legacy to examine.

1.3.19 Play Stupid Games, Win Stupid Prizes: Business Receives Backlash After Refusing to Serve Trump Supporters (2024-11-21 11:30)

At times, it can feel like the country is only concerned about all things red and blue, but if you're a business owner, you're typically only worried about another color: green ([1]despite what Whoopi Goldberg says). However, [2]one woman in Tennessee broke that unspoken rule and decided she only wanted to work with people who supported her own political views. The backlash came so fast and furiously that she had to shut down her business.

49-year-old Kristin Wolter of Memphis is the owner of the florist shop Everbloom Designs in Memphis, Tenn. In a video posted on social media, she announced after Election Day that she was changing her business policies. "I won't do business with people who support the president-elect, and it is because I need to create a safe place for me, my staff, and my family," Wolter said.

Everbloom Design in Memphis says they will no longer do business with Trump voters. We certainly appreciate the heads up! [3]pic.twitter.com/poPRC97tic— KWAM News Radio 990 AM Memphis (@Mighty990KWAM) [4]November 14, 2024

According to NewsMax's Todd Starnes, Wolter also said she was "triggered" by the election results and couldn't believe her "community chose financial concerns and economy over human rights and decency."

Everbloom Design, a Memphis flower shop, announced they will no longer do business with any Trump supporters.

"I won't do business with people who support the president-elect and it is because I need to create a safe space for me, my staff and my family," owner Kristin Wolter... [5]pic.twitter.com/1cOdS96ajP— toddstarnes (@toddstarnes) [6]November 15, 2024

Apparently, Wolter received such harsh backlash online and in person that she made her social media accounts private and shut down her shop temporarily. According to KWAM News Radio 900, she posted a note on the shop door that stated, "I knew standing up for what I believe in would have consequences. I am so grateful to those of you that have supported me in this. They are showing their true colors and lack of decency and humanity."

The owner of Everbloom Design now claims she is the victim. This is the Memphis flower shop that announced a ban on customers who support President Trump.

The owner went out of her way to post multiple statements condemning Trump supporters. Such intolerance is disheartening.... [7]pic.twitter.com/H8FfGjiT7u— KWAM News Radio 990 AM Memphis (@Mighty990KWAM) [8]November 17, 2024

Look, we all have strong political views. But as of the time this article is published, [9]Decision Desk HQ reports that 76,837,044 people have voted for Donald Trump and 74,313,883 people voted for Kamala Harris. Why would you want to risk alienating any of those people? As a small business owner myself, I have strong political views, too, but I'm also a capitalist who enjoys earning as much money as I can. I don't stop and ask people who they voted for when they request my services. Then again, I gave up trying to figure out liberal reasoning years ago. The other thing that I'm absolutely tired of hearing from the left is how Trump supporters "lack decency and humanity." I don't know, but to me, telling people they're not welcome in your business when they haven't really done anything to you sort of lacks decency and humanity in itself. Maybe instead of showing contempt for people who vote differently than you do, reach out and ask for a conversation and ask them why they do what they do so you can maybe understand them better.

1.3.20 And This Is Why the Public Doesn't Trust the DOJ (2024-11-26 21:46)

The U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ)'s Office of the Inspector General (OIG) has [1]released its annual report identifying the top management and performance challenges currently facing the federal agency.

Among the OIG's findings, [2]a lack of public trust in the DOJ remains a "longstanding" problem, Inspector General Michael E. Horowitz [3]announced Monday, and strengthening such trust poses "a significant challenge."

However, in its [4]59-page report highlighting incidents that have contributed to the department's confidence crisis, the DOJ watchdog largely overlooked transgressions under the Biden-Harris administration, which still reigns. Instead, the OIG looked farther back to Trump's time in office, his first term, as we head into the president-elect's second.

Today we released the 2024 Top Management and Performance Challenges Facing the DOJ. The challenges are identified based on our oversight work and are meant to help the DOJ improve its operations.

Learn more about this report and explore the challenges:
[5]<https://t.co/HoENPob5Em> [6]pic.twitter.com/eHiiZxOWbC— DOJ Inspector General (@JusticeOIG) [7]November 25, 2024

Based on the OIG's oversight work, the inspector general's office blames a medley of Trump-era episodes as reasons why public trust in the institution has eroded over time.

First, the OIG report points to public statements that former federal prosecutor David Freed, a Trump-nominated U.S. attorney, made about an ongoing criminal probe into alleged ballot tampering during the 2020 presidential election.

Freed had said several mail-in military ballots, mostly cast for Donald Trump, were [8]discarded (tossed into the trash) at a Pennsylvania election office in pro-Trump Luzerne County.

Ultimately, the OIG [9]concluded that Freed's comments "unnecessarily inserted partisanship into the investigation" and "created a false impression" that the incident was "much more serious than DOJ leadership knew it to be."

The report also calls attention to another [10]OIG inquiry into claims that senior DOJ appointees placed "political pressure" on the trial team [11]prosecuting Roger Stone, a close confidant of Trump, so that they lowered their sentencing recommendations.

While the OIG did not find evidence that the prosecution's revision was the result of "improper political considerations," the report chastises the "unusual substantive involvement," though not prohibited by law or policy, of then-Attorney General Bill Barr and other high-level DOJ officials in the second sentencing recommendation's preparation and filing.

Their embroilment in the case against the president's political ally "affected the public's perception of the Department's integrity, independence, and objectivity," the OIG says.

The report then cites an old [12]OIG review blasting the DOJ's response to the George Floyd riots in Washington, D.C., specifically the clearing of Lafayette Park when Trump walked through shortly afterward to [13]visit St. John's Church, which was set ablaze the night before, on June 1, 2020. Joined by Barr and other DOJ officials, Trump posed for a photograph in front of the church while holding up a Bible and promising to uphold the rule of law.

"In doing so, Department leaders placed the safety of the Department's personnel and members of the public at risk, thereby jeopardizing the public's perception and confidence in the Department," the OIG report says.

This despite the fact that [14]a separate U.S. Department of the Interior inspector general's report debunked the false narrative that federal authorities had forcibly cleared peaceful Black Lives Matter protestors to make way for Trump's photo-op.

Advertisement

The bombshell Interior Department report, vindicating Trump, determined that U.S. Park Police were given permission to carry out the park's clearing long before anyone knew Trump was walking over.

In fact, the operational plan in place allowed for the safe installation of anti-scale fencing to ward off property destruction and injury to officers that occurred days prior.

Of course, the OIG report makes no mention of the [15]now-failed federal prosecutions of President-elect Donald Trump or the discriminatory use of the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances (FACE) Act [16]overwhelmingly against pro-life defendants for peacefully protesting at abortion clinics.

Although the report did mention the [17]sprawling January 6 cases, in which over 1,424 defendants were federally charged following the event and [18]hundreds ultimately convicted, the subject was [19]categorized under combatting the threat of "Domestic Terrorism and Domestic Violence Extremism."

"The riot at the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021, serves as an indication that the charged political climate magnifies the domestic terrorism threat," the OIG report says.

However, the report acknowledges that [20]the OIG is reviewing the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI)'s direction and handling of its confidential human sources (CHS) in the lead-up to and on January 6, 2021, as well as whether the agency exploited its CHSs to obtain incriminating information. "Implementing the remaining recommendations from the OIG and the U.S. Government Accountability Office reports would ensure the Department is better coordinated and able to meet the DVE [domestic violence extremism] threat while at the same time safeguarding civil liberties."

To ensure that the agency is free from political influence, DOJ officials ought to strictly adhere to [21]policies and procedures designed to protect the department from accusations of political influence or politically motivated application of the law, the OIG report recommends. Political appointees should "exercise discretion and judgment when considering whether to personally involve themselves in DOJ criminal prosecutions."

Under the Biden-Harris White House, public trust in the federal government has hovered near record lows. According to [22]Pew Research, in June 2023, fewer than two-in-10 Americans said they trust the government in Washington to do what is right "just about always" (1 percent) or "most of the time" (15 percent). Those figures were among the lowest trust measures in nearly seven decades of polling.

Election Day was three weeks ago, resulting in a win for President-elect Donald Trump, with Republicans also taking control of the Senate and keeping control of the House. Although Trump was declared the winner in the early morning hours following the election, Vice President Kamala Harris [1]didn't address her sniffling supporters until Wednesday afternoon, [2]a move she was strongly criticized for. On Tuesday night, Harris delivered another message, shared over X.

In a clip that's less than 30 seconds long, Harris declares, "I just have to remind you, don't you ever let anybody take your power from you. You have the same power that you did before November 5, and you have the same purpose that you did. And you have the same ability to engage and inspire! So don't ever let anybody or any circumstance take your power from you," she concludes, after sounding as if she were slurring her words at moments. Intoxicated or not, her tone and demeanor also did not match the message Harris was trying to send.

Another clip, where Harris still seems to be slurring her words, shows Harris offering, "again, I'll say, you know, the election didn't turn out like we wanted it to, certainly not as we planned for it to, but, understand that the work we put into it was about empowering people, that was the spirit with work we did." It became trickier to decipher her words at the end of such a clip.

Harris' remarks [8]have become a trending topic over X for Tuesday, with many taking to brutally savaging the vice president and failed Democratic nominee for how such brief remarks come off. Many of the quoted reposts and the close to 4,000 replies have pointed out it looks like Harris has been drinking.

The vice president hasn't been seen around much at the White House, [9]and still looks to be on less than friendly terms [10]with First Lady Jill Biden, given how much they avoided each other for Veterans' Day. 1.3.22 Trump Announces List of New Picks to Serve in His Administration (2024-11-26 22:07)

Last Friday, President-elect Donald Trump [1]announced several nominees he selected to serve in his Cabinet, and he’s now announced a list of several other names of those who will serve in his administration. Many of the picks have served with him previously, as are mentioned in Trump’s statements.

Among those announced on Tuesday night include Vince Haley who has been tasked with serving as for Director of the Domestic Policy Council. He had served as the Director of Policy and Speechwriting for his campaign. In his statement in praise of Haley, Trump took the opportunity to reference his 2024 win:

The 2024 Presidential Election was won by an unprecedented margin, which many in the Mainstream Media and Washington, D.C. did not expect, because the size and magnitude of our MAGA Movement was greatly underestimated. The American People gave us a Mandate to deliver on our Promises, and put AMERICA FIRST. As Director of the Domestic Policy Council, Vince will help make life better for ALL Americans, and unify our Country through SUCCESS. Together, we will defeat Inflation, rapidly bring down Prices, secure the Southern Border, cut Taxes and Regulations, reignite Growth, build the Greatest Economy in History and, MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN!

From there, other names announced included:

- Jamieson Greer, who has been nominated to serve as the United States Trade Representative (USTR). Greer is lauded in Trump's statement for having replaced NAFTA with USMCA.
- Dr. Kevin A. Hassett, of Massachusetts will serve as the Director of the White House National Economic Council, who, as the chair of Trump's Council of Economic Advisers, "played a crucial role in helping to design and pass the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017," Trump noted. Trump also spoke about putting Hassett to use in recovering "from the Inflation that was unleashed by the Biden Administration," Tax Cuts, and Fair trade.
- John Phelan as our next United States Secretary of the Navy

The last two names to be announced on Tuesday night both have to be confirmed, and will work with Robert F. Kennedy Jr., who was nominated by Trump earlier this month [2]to serve as his Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Jay Bhattacharya, MD, PhD has been nominated to serve as Director of the National Institutes of Health (NIH), while Jim O'Neil has been nominated to serve as Kennedy's deputy. O'Neil is no stranger to the department, as Trump's statement noted that "Jim previously served as the Principal Associate Deputy Secretary of HHS. He led reforms at FDA to overhaul Food Safety Regulations, and implemented the FDA Amendments Act, which improved Drug and Medical Device Safety, and ensured greater protection for Public Health."

[3]While Matt has highlighted concerns about one of Trump's picks from last week, Dr. Janette Nesheiwat as the United States Surgeon General, over her support for masking, lockdowns, and vaccines, this pick of Bhattacharya may put such concerns to rest, as it looks like he may provide a balanced approach.

Bhattacharya was particularly critical of the federal government's response to COVID. [4]As Katie covered at the time in December 2022, [5]he was blacklisted on X, then known as Twitter, for daring to speak out.

"Jay is a co-author of the Great Barrington Declaration, an alternative to lockdowns proposed in October 2020. His peer-reviewed research has been published in Economics, Statistics, Legal, Medical, Public Health, and Health Policy Journals. He holds an MD and PhD in Economics from Stanford University," Trump's statement about Bhattacharya noted in part.

1.4.2 The Trump Counterrevolution Is a Return to Sanity (2024-12-03 19:12)

We are witnessing a historic counterrevolution after President Donald [1]Trump's victory, far different from his first election in 2016.

The orthodox and the supposed scripted future are now suspect. And they are likely to be dethroned—from the trivial to the existential.

Critics claim Trump has no mandate to stage such a counterrevolution. They argue that he did not win 51 % of the popular vote or achieve a Reaganesque landslide in the [2]Electoral College.

Yet all the initiatives he advanced and won on polled landslide public approval.

Despite being the target of Democrat lawfare for years, a defiant Trump promised to end an open border, massive [3]illegal immigration, rising crime, and soaring prices. He pledged to slash government and its administrative state, terminate racial and gender identity politics, and restore deterrence abroad.

The people overwhelmingly wanted those messages but were waiting for an unorthodox messenger who would actually deliver them.

The Trump messenger reassured weary citizens that they were not crazy.

Instead, they had good cause to be sick of being talked down to by a media, academic, bureaucratic, and political elite that never earned nor deserved such self-appointed status.

The FBI, the CIA, and the Justice Department, not the massive crowds at rallies, were the ones truly out of control.

Criminals with weapons are as deleterious to society as law-abiding citizens deprived of them.

It is not a thought crime to believe there are two sexes—not three or four or more. No one should be forced to buy an electric vehicle, disconnect their natural gas stove, or submit to racial or gender indoctrination sessions.

Americans should speak their minds and write what they wish without worry of being censored, blacklisted, ostracized, doxxed, or shadow-banned—or jailed.

Campuses are not oases of tolerance, disinterested inquiry, and free expression. They instead increasingly became overpriced indoctrination centers that shred the Constitution and graduate indebted students who know less—but are far more biased—than when they enrolled.

[5]Trump and his MAGA appointees promise to slash over a trillion dollars from the annual federal budget, disbanding entire agencies.

Is the objection that an ever-expanding government— $37 trillion in debt, running nearly $2 trillion in annual deficits—should keep growing?

Trump pledges to reform [6]the Pentagon—ending DEI Pentagon commissars and revolving-door corporate generalship.

He vows to hold the 4-star class responsible for the catastrophe in Afghanistan and to reenlist soldiers who were driven out due to draconian vaccination mandates or woke intolerance. Trump envisions changing the entire system of military procurement.

Does the status quo object on the grounds that our military leadership has been winning our wars abroad?

Is the Pentagon currently awash in eager recruits?

Has it stockpiled a huge surplus of shells, bombs, and rockets?

Trump promises historic deportations of the 12 million who destroyed the southern border and surged in without health or criminal audits.

Trump vows to rescue swamped social services and stop crimes by illegal alien felons.

Is that really worse than the Biden administration's original massive importation of millions of illegal aliens, empowered by drug-importing and sex-trafficking cartels?

Who are the culpable? Those flagrantly mocking and breaking the law, or those vowing to enforce it?

Trump says he will deter enemies without bogging America down in “endless wars”—and did just that in his first four years as president.

Is the current alternative preferable to convincing enemies that there are few consequences to their aggression, sandbagging allies like Israel, or feeding the war in Ukraine without any plan of either winning or ending it?

The Trump revolution is also cultural and social. Shared class interests have replaced race, ethnicity, and gender chauvinism.

Athletes of all races are no longer taking a knee in protest of America’s supposed systemic racism during the national anthem. Sometimes they celebrate their scoring by doing honorific Trump YMCA/golf-swing dances on national television.

Enlistments to help craft the Trump counterrevolution are not always predicated on degrees, conventional resumes, or past lengthy government service. Race and gender do not determine qualifications alone. Nor does class.

Common sense, successful lives outside of government, and a desire to end the current nonsense count instead as better prerequisites.

For Trump, party identification, titles, and traditional prestige matter less as he is surrounded by an ideologically diverse cadre, including Elon Musk, Robert Kennedy, Jr., Dana White, Tulsi Gabbard, and Joe Rogan.

The country no longer must apologize incessantly for its past or present but can move on—content that it need not be perfect to be better than all the alternatives.

The age of flashing pronouns, renaming iconic landmarks, statue toppling, trashing the dead, vandalizing with impunity the campus library, or spouting antisemitic venom is passing.

So, another name for the Trump counterrevolution is a simple return to sanity.

1.4.3 Universities Have a 2025 Rendezvous With Reality (2024-12-03 19:13)

Universities have suffered a cataclysmic decline in public approval and support.

A Gallup poll taken this year found that only 36 % of Americans polled either expressed “a great deal” or “quite a lot” of confidence in higher education—once the agreed-on touchstone to upward mobility.

Gifting to most universities has been down for two consecutive years.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [1]Donate now

There is zero intellectual diversity on most university campuses.

Speakers with conservative viewpoints are often either disinvited or shouted down—and worse.

The federally guaranteed student loan program is in shambles. Some $1.7 trillion in outstanding loans were taken out by half of all college students.

Nearly one-fifth are now not being paid back.

Marriage, child-rearing, and home ownership are all delayed by some 40 million indebted graduates, who can take decades to pay loans back.

The Biden administration demagogued the issue by illegally granting rolling student loan amnesties—to win votes just before both the midterm and general elections. That proposed debt relief would be covered by taxpayers, over half of whom never went to college.

The expansion of student loan debt roughly correlates with universities raising their annual costs higher than the rate of inflation—largely due to administrative bloat.

Although the U.S. Supreme Court recently struck down the practice of using race and gender to adjudicate applications and hiring, universities are already seeking ways to circumvent the ruling.

Asian and white Americans for decades have been systematically, overtly, and supposedly with justification, discriminated against by ignoring or not requiring test scores and downplaying grade point averages.

In the 2020 election, 94 % of Stanford faculty voted for the Joe Biden-Kamala Harris ticket. Four years later, some 96 % of all Stanford-affiliated donations went to Democrats during the 2024 election season.

Former Stanford law professors Joseph Bankman and Barbara Fried—parents of mega-Democratic donor and now [3]imprisoned Sam Bankman-Fried, and recipients of millions in gifts from their felonious son—were reportedly heavily involved in either bundling large left-wing campaign donations or offering legal advice to their son’s bankrupt and Ponzi-like business.

In 2023, a federal judge was shouted down at [4]Stanford Law School, his lecture aborted and then hijacked—by a Stanford diversity, equity, and inclusion administrator!

Former Donald Trump health advisor and Hoover Institution scholar [5]Scott Atlas in 2020 was censured by the Stanford faculty.

Yet subsequent events supported Atlas’s prescient warning that a complete lockdown of the country and the shutdown of K-12 schools would not only not retard the COVID-19 epidemic, but would cause far greater economic, social, cultural, and health damage than the virus itself.

Two recent attempts to lift that censure failed—in part because some faculty claimed—that to do so would empower the Trump reelection bid!

In contrast, Stanford professor Jeff Hancock, who founded the “Stanford Social Media Lab,” boasts he researches ‘how people use deception with technology.’ Yet when liberal Minnesota officials wanted such “experts” to support their new law banning “deep fake” technology at election time, they called in the expert deception-detector Hancock.

However, the references Hancock provided to prove his support for the law allegedly never existed.

In fact, the lawyers who challenged his online expertise argued his sources apparently were invented by artificial intelligence software like ChatGPT.

Who will police the deception police?

Last academic year, anti-Israel Stanford students with impunity violated university rules and camped out for months in the free speech area, shouting and disrupting passersby.

A small group of students occupied and trashed the president's office, and another vandalized historic campus architecture.

After Oct. 7, a Stanford lecturer was suspended for singling out and targeting Jewish students in his classroom.

A Stanford faculty committee on antisemitism recently concluded, "The most existential problem at Stanford is the emergence of a general atmosphere in which Jewish and Israeli members of the Stanford community are denied dignity and respect based on their Jewish identities, denied treatment and protection afforded to other minority groups, and afforded equal respect and inclusion only if they denounce Israel in various ways and forms."

Can out-of-control universities reform?

The incoming Trump administration has floated a variety of tough-love remedies.

They include predicating hundreds of billions of dollars in federal grants on campuses' adherence to the Bill of Rights, taxing the income on universities multibillion-dollar endowments, and removing the federal government from the student loan business.

Recently, there have been a few hopeful signs that campuses are aware of the need to change.

At Stanford, a new president was hired, widely respected for his singular commitment to disinterested education and freedom of expression.

The SAT entrance exam is returning to many campuses and is still appreciated as crucial to most universities' applications.

A number of partisan elite college presidents have [6]resigned in disgrace.

So, hope springs eternal, even if it may be too little, too late.

1.4.4 After Biden Pardons Hunter, Trump Moves to Dismiss Hush Money Case (2024-12-03 19:17)

After President Joe Biden pardoned his son, Hunter, [1]on Sunday, the legal team for President-elect Donald Trump made a request for Judge Juan Merchan to dismiss the hush money case. On May 30, Trump was found "guilty" on 34 felony counts in a sham trial held in New York City on hush money charges brought by Manhattan DA Alvin Bragg. What's particularly noteworthy about the motion, from Monday, is that the second paragraph makes reference to the pardon of Hunter Biden.

Trump has filed his motion to dismiss the hush money case in Manhattan. It's a 72-page document and the first mention of Hunter Biden's pardon appears in paragraph #2.— erica orden (@eorden) [2]December 3, 2024

The motion from Trump's attorneys, Todd Blanche and Emil Bove, who have also been tasked for key roles in the Trump administration's Department of Justice (DOJ), uses the pardoning of Hunter to further argue that the case be dismissed.

As [3]that motion read early on:

Yesterday, in issuing a 10-year pardon to Hunter Biden that covers any and all crimes whether charged or uncharged, President Biden asserted that his son was "selectively, and unfairly, prosecuted," and "treated differently." Ex. 81.1 President Biden argued that "raw politics has infected this process and it led to a miscarriage of justice." Id. These comments amounted to an extraordinary condemnation of President Biden's own DOJ. This is the same DOJ that coordinated and oversaw the politically-motivated, election-interference witch hunts targeting President Trump by disgraced Special Counsel Jack Smith, the other biased prosecutors in Smith's Special Counsel's Office ("SCO"), and others. This is the same DOJ that sent Matthew Colangelo to DA Bragg to help unfairly target President Trump in this empty and lawless case.

Since DA Bragg took office, he has engaged in "precisely the type of political theater" that President Biden condemned. Bragg v. Jordan, 669 F. Supp. 3d 257, 271 (S.D.N.Y. 2023). This case is based on a contrived, defective, and unprecedented legal theory relating to 2017 entries in documents that were maintained hundreds of miles away from the White House where President Trump was running the country. There are no "aggravating factors" here, other than those arising from DANY's misconduct. Ex. 81. Thus, this case should never have been brought, particularly during a period when DA Bragg's failure to protect this City from pervasive violent crime frightens, threatens, and harms New Yorkers on a daily basis. And this case would never have been brought were it not for President Trump's political views, the transformative national movement established under his leadership, and the political threat that he poses to entrenched, corrupt politicians in Washington, D.C. and beyond.

Wrongly continuing proceedings in this failed lawfare case disrupts President Trump's transition efforts and his preparations to wield the full Article II executive power authorized by the Constitution pursuant to the overwhelming national mandate granted to him by the American people on November 5, 2024. Under Trump v. United States, 603 U.S. 593 (2024) and related caselaw, DANY's disruptions to the institution of the Presidency violate the Presidential immunity doctrine because they threaten the functioning of the federal government. Local elected officials such as DA Bragg have no valid basis to cause such disruptions, which also violate the Supremacy Clause. Consequently, the federal Constitution is an absolute "legal impediment" to further proceedings, CPL § 210.20(1)(h), and the case must be immediately dismissed.

There were plenty of concerns about the case that Bragg's office brought against Trump from the start, including when it comes to the role of politicized DOJ that the motion mentioned above, [4]with Matthew Colangelo, formerly a top employee at the Biden-Harris DOJ, leaving to work for Bragg's office and prosecute Trump.

While Judge Merchan has moved to indefinitely delay sentencing, [5]as Townhall has been covering, Bragg's office still stubbornly looks to hold onto the conviction by merely agreeing to a pause, [6]as CNN noted in their reporting of such a motion to dismiss.

Reporting [7]from The Hill also includes a statement from Steven Cheung, who served as communications director for the Trump-Vance campaign and will have such a role in the incoming administration. Trump's lawyers also laid out other arguments in favor of dismissing the case:

[8]Steven Cheung, Trump's spokesperson and incoming White House communications director, in a statement called the new brief a "powerhouse motion" that "provides every possible chance for Judge Merchan to do the right thing and end what remains of this charade immediately."

"Wrongly continuing proceedings in this failed lawfare case disrupts President Trump's transition efforts and his preparations to wield the full Article II executive power authorized by the Constitution pursuant to the overwhelming national mandate granted to him by the American people on November 5, 2024," Trump's attorneys wrote in the filing.

When it comes to the suggestion that Bragg's office focus on a "renewed opportunity to put an end to deteriorating conditions in the City and to protect its residents from violent crime," it's worth reminding that there's been a serious mishandling of priorities. In addition to the rise of hate crimes in New York State, [9]especially New York City, Bragg's office meanwhile prioritizes targeting political opponents like Trump and heroic figures [10]like Daniel Penny, who has been charged for the death of Jordan Neely, a homeless man who was terrorizing people on the subway.

The legal cases against Trump have been failing, though those who brought such charges against him still look to be holding on in many ways. Special Counsel Jack Smith [11]has dropped all of his cases against Trump, though he did so without prejudice so that they may still be theoretically brought back. He [12]is also looking to finalize a report for Attorney General Merrick Garland to release.

OK, he's actually a doddering old fool who can't remember his own name half the time, but we know he has moments of lucidity here and there. We also know that he wanted a second term and his fellow Democrats pushed him to the side. Why he would be shocked that the party that uses "old white men" as a pejorative wouldn't really be behind an old white man is beyond me, yet he apparently was.

From the moment he stepped aside, though, Biden seemed bound and determined to scuttle Kamala Harris's nomination.

Sure, it may have been gaffe after gaffe – or, such as when he said Harris had been intimately involved in economic discussions just as she was trying to distance herself from Biden's economic policies, he might have actually thought it would help – but over a month ago, I commented how it looked just like he was trying to sabotage her.

I'm not saying that Biden is actively trying to sabotage Harris's campaign without looking like he was.

I'm just saying I can't think of that much he'd do differently if he were actively trying to sabotage her campaign without looking like he was.— Tom Knighton (@TheTomKnighton) [1]October 30, 2024

Plus, despite everyone calling Trump "literally Hitler," what did Biden do immediately after the election? Have Trump come on over and have a nice sit-down chat with him, something you don't do with someone who is considered the most evil man to ever live reincarnated.

Then we have the Hunter Biden pardon.

You've heard all about it by now. You know what was said, what Biden's "reasoning" was, and how he'd repeatedly claimed that he would do no such thing, only to turn out that he lied yet again.

But in that same moment, he set a precedent that President-elect Donald Trump can now use as he wants. The problem was that the prosecution was political? That can be said about pretty much every January 6 defendant. Trump could pardon them all, and over a broad period to make sure they couldn't be prosecuted for anything else later on.

Others have been prosecuted because of their affiliation with Trump. Steve Bannon, for example, or Roger Stone. While Bannon has done his time and it was only a misdemeanor, it would send a signal how he's running things. Trump held off in pardoning Stone last go-around because it would be a political liability, but that's not as true today as it was in 2020.

Honestly, from the moment when he left the campaign trail, Joe Biden has done so much that has benefitted Trump that it's hard for me not to look at some of it and wonder if he was really just trying to hurt the Democrats.

I wouldn't be surprised if he did. He'd been a good Democrat for decades, working his way up the food chain and finally making it to the top, only to have his party turn on him. If that were me, and I were actually lucid enough of the time, I'd probably think about ways to get back at them without being too obvious.

Of course, that all assumes there's enough of Biden left to actually be that calculating. I can't rule out that his handlers are resentful of being ousted with the old goat, so it might be them working through Biden, but that feels a little too tin-foil hat for me.

Then again, the difference between "established fact" and "conspiracy theory" seems to be about six weeks, so anything's possible.

1.4.6 Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal Hands Trump Some Good News (2024-12-03 19:38)

In a move that's sure to be good news for the incoming Trump administration, a three-judge panel on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the federal government does in fact have the authority to carry out deportations, even if local officials object. The case actually comes from the first Trump administration, [1]as The Center Square reported on Monday.

As the report explained:

At issue is an April 2019 executive order issued by King County Executive Dow Constantine, which directed county officials to prohibit fixed base operators on a county airfield near Seattle from servicing U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement charter flights used to deport illegal foreign nationals.

Constantine's order prohibited King County International Airport from supporting "the transportation and deportation of immigration detainees in the custody of Immigration and Customs Enforcement, either traveling within or arriving or departing the United States or its territories."

The airport is located next to a major ICE-Seattle base of operations.

The Trump administration at the time sued, arguing Constantine's order violated the Supremacy Clause's intergovernmental immunity doctrine and a World War II-era Instrument of Transfer agreement allowing the federal government to use the airport in King County.

A district court agreed, ruling in favor of the federal government. King County next appealed to the Ninth Circuit.

The Ninth Circuit panel affirmed the district court's summary judgment that the order violated the Supremacy Clause and the Instrument of Transfer agreement.

The panel also held that the federal government had Article III standing to sue and "had two related concrete and individualized injuries." The first is "the inability to conduct the charter flights - which has increased ICE's operational costs - constituted a de facto injury that affected the United States in a particularized, individual way" and "an imminent risk of future injury from the Executive Order."

The second is the federal government's injuries "were fairly traceable" and "are likely, as opposed to merely speculative," as a result of the order. Were there no order, "an FBO would resume servicing ICE charter flights," the court notes.

Constantine's order violated the intergovernmental immunity doctrine because it "improperly regulated the way in which the federal government transported noncitizen detainees by preventing ICE from using private FBO contractors at Boeing Field, and on its face discriminated against the United States by singling out the federal government and its contractors for unfavorable treatment," the court held.

Reporting from The Seattle Times [2]also noted that Kings County will not further appeal the decision, with a spokesperson mentioning in part that the county "will of course follow the court's dictates."

King County is one of those described as a "sanctuary city," but the days of sanctuary cities being able to get away with covering for illegal immigrants are likely coming to an end. Even better news for the incoming Trump administration is that, as The Seattle Times also mentioned, a district-level federal court issued a similar ruling last year.

The Ninth Circuit covers the more western states in the country, which are also among some of the most liberal and include many sanctuary cities when it comes to immigration.

Not only will King County be "follow[ing] the court's dictates," but it looks like they'll be eating plenty of crow as well, given that they hoped to be "leading the way," as The Seattle Times noted:

In 2019, under the first Trump administration, Constantine [3]issued an executive order seeking to block the federal government from using King County International Airport (the formal name for Boeing Field) for flights deporting immigrants.

The order targeted private companies that fuel and maintain planes at the airport, ordering that future leases between the county and the companies would prohibit deportation flights.

At the time, county officials said it was likely the first attempt anywhere in the country by local officials to block ICE deportation flights, and they hoped to be "leading the way."

"Deportations raise deeply troubling human rights concerns which are inconsistent with the values of King County, including separations of families, increases of racial disproportionality in policing, deportations of people into unsafe situations in other countries, and constitutional concerns of due process," Constantine's 2019 executive order said.

Tom Homan, [4]named last month to be President-elect Donald Trump's border czar, has made clear that there will be mass deportations of illegal immigrants. He has also [5]repeatedly made clear that local officials are not to stand in his way, as was recently the case with Denver Mayor Mike Johnston (D), who threatened to stop deportations.

"He's willing to go to jail. I'm willing to put him in jail," [6]Homan said, which led Johnston to soon after [7]admit that he regretted his remarks.

Polling from CBS News, [8]including before and [9]after the November election, shows that a majority of Americans favor plans for mass deportations. [10]Last week's poll from The Economist/YouGov [11]also showed that a majority or plurality of Americans across several demographics approve of Trump's plan to build a border wall along the U.S.-Mexican border and that they believe he'll actually carry through with such plans.

1.4.7 Why the Left Is Going Insane Over Trump's Cabinet Nominees (2024-12-08 22:32)

Deflated by the resounding November defeat, [1]the Left now believes it can magically rebound by destroying President-elect Donald Trump's Cabinet nominees.

Many of [2]Trump's picks are well outside the usual Washington, D.C./New York political, media, and corporate nexus.

But that is precisely the point—to insert reformers into a bloated, incompetent, and weaponized government who are not part of it.

Trump's nominee for FBI director, [4]Kash Patel, is already drawing severe criticism.

Patel's furious enemies cannot go after his resume, since he has spent a lifetime in private, congressional, and executive billets, both in investigations and intelligence.

Instead, they claim he is too vindictive and does not reflect the ethos of [5]the FBI.

But what will Patel not do as the new director?

He will not serially lie under oath to federal investigators, as did interim FBI Director Andrew McCabe, a current Patel critic.

He will not forge an FBI court affidavit, as did convicted felon and agency lawyer Kevin Clinesmith.

He will not claim amnesia 245 times under congressional oath to evade embarrassing admissions, as did former FBI Director James Comey.

He will not partner with a foreign national to collect dirt and subvert a presidential campaign as the FBI did with Christopher Steele in 2016.

He will not use the FBI to draft social media to suppress news unfavorable to a presidential candidate on the eve of an election.

He would not have suppressed FBI knowledge that [6]Hunter Biden's laptop was genuine—to allow the lie to spread that it was “Russian disinformation” on the eve of the 2020 election.

He will not raid the home of an ex-president with SWAT teams, surveil Catholics, monitor parents at school board meetings, or go after peaceful, pro-life protesters.

Decorated combat veteran [7]Pete Hegseth is another controversial nominee for secretary of defense.

What will Hegseth likely not do?

Go AWOL without notifying the president of a serious medical procedure as did current Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin?

Install race and gender criteria for promotion and mandate training in diversity, equity, and inclusion, [8]or DEI?

Insinuate falsely that cabals of white supremacists had infiltrated the military—only to alienate that entire demographic and thus ensure the Pentagon came up 40,000 recruits short?

Oversee the scramble from Kabul, Afghanistan, that saw $50 billion in U.S. military equipment abandoned to Taliban terrorists?

Watch passively as a Chinese spy balloon traversed the continental United States for a week?

Allow the chairman of the Joint Chiefs to promise his Chinese communist counterpart that the People's Liberation Army would first be informed if the president of the United States was felt to issue a dangerous order?

Rotate into [9]the Pentagon from a defense contractor boardship and then leave office to rotate back there to leverage procurement decisions?

Oversee the Pentagon's serial flunking of fiscal audits?

[10]Robert F. Kennedy Jr., Trump's nominee to head the Department of Health and Human Services, is certainly a maverick. He may earn the most Democratic hits, given his former liberal credentials.

But what will RFK also not do as HHS secretary?

Oversee his agencies' circumventing of U.S. law by transferring money to [11]Communist China to help it produce lethal gain-of-function viruses of the COVID-19 sort—in the manner of Dr. Anthony Fauci?

Organize scientists to go after critics of mandatory masking and defame them?

Give pharmaceutical companies near-lifetime exemptions from legal jeopardy for rushing into production mRNA vaccines not traditionally vetted and tested?

Leave office to monetize his HHS expertise and thus make millions from the pharmaceutical companies?

Trump's nominee for national intelligence director, former House member and military veteran [12]Tulsi Gabbard, will soon be defamed in congressional hearings.

But what has Gabbard not done?

Joined "51 former intelligence authorities" to lie on the eve of the 2020 election that the Hunter Biden laptop "had all the hallmarks" of a Russian information/disinformation operation—in an effort to swing the election to Joe Biden?

Lied under congressional oath like former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper, who claimed he gave only the "least untruthful answer" in congressional testimony?

Encourage the FBI to monitor a presidential campaign in efforts to discredit it—in the manner of former CIA Director John Brennan, who lied not once but twice under oath?

Fail to foresee the American meltdown in Kabul, the Russian invasion of Ukraine, the Hamas terrorist attacks on Israel, or the Houthis' takeover of the Red Sea?

We are going to hear some outrageous things in the upcoming congressional confirmation hearings.

But one thing we will not hear about are the crimes, deceptions, and utter incompetence of prior and current government grandees.

The current Biden-Harris crew, not their proposed Trump replacements, prompted the sick and tired American people to demand different people.

Voters want novel approaches to reform a government that they not only no longer trust but also now deeply fear.

1.4.8 We Need to Ritually Sacrifice a Squish GOP Senator to Encourage the Others (2024-12-09 11:09)

There is a wonderful and salutatory effect to publicly posting a head on a pike for all to see. Now, after the hideous leftist celebration of the murder of that executive from an unpopular industry, it's necessary – for the benefit of dumb and disingenuous people who will cry about this imagery – to make clear that this is not to be taken literally. It is to be taken figuratively. That is, we in the America First movement must figuratively post the head of at least one hack GOP establishment senator at the summit of Capitol Hill during the 2026 cycle. The real question is who we're going to make an example of.

Now, I'm old enough to remember when there were a whole bunch of soft Republicans in the Senate. There are far fewer today than they used to be, believe it or not. About 16 years ago – how time flies when you are reforming the Republican Party – the Tea Party movement started up and shook up Washington. It was a direct response to the continued failure of the business-as-usual, managed-decline Republican Party. The establishment told us that we couldn't ever change things. We had to vote Republican, no matter how bad the Republicans were, and keep our mouths shut. All we were were mere voters; it wasn't like we mattered. But you know what? We did matter. We mattered hard. And we posted some heads on pikes.

Rand Paul didn't just show up. Mike Lee didn't just show up. Ted Cruz didn't just show up. No, that was us. We changed things in the Senate. We beat unbeatable incumbents. We won unwinnable primaries. And we made it known that we expect conservatism from our alleged conservatives.

Did we also lose some races? Yeah, and as adults, we understand that you don't win them all. Some of our candidates were subpar – remember that woman who had to go on TV explaining how she wasn't a witch? That went poorly, but no one bats a thousand. We don't have to be perfect to course correct back to conservatism. We just have to scare the living daylights out of the spineless invertebrate Republican senators who want to talk red back at home and vote blue in DC. They need to know they'll be held to account. They need to understand that the head on the pike in 2026 could be theirs.

The current resistance to Donald Trump's nominees—especially Pete Hegseth, but not only to him—demonstrates that some of these Republican senators have forgotten what happened nearly a generation ago. They have forgotten that sometimes primaries succeed. We are constantly told that it's a terrible idea to primary Republican senators who are firmly entrenched in Washington. Why spend all that money on a primary? Why take the risk that we could lose the seat in the general? Why not just stick with the status quo?

Well, the reason is simple. Politicians need to know fear. It is said that the beginning of wisdom is the fear of God. Fear is important. A healthy fear of the consequences of one's action incentivizes better actions. The fact is that some of these Republicans don't think they will ever be held accountable. If we listen to the sages and wise men – who are largely happy with the status quo, by the way – these senators will never be held accountable for their heresies and betrayals.

By taking primary challenges off the table, we effectively tolerate collaboration with the enemy by Republican senators. It's time to stop tolerating it. The 2026 election cycle is beginning, and we need to pick someone for the pike.

Yes, at least one GOP senator must be primaried and go down. It's nothing personal. It's only business. The methodology is sound for those who remember the British Navy before it became a ridiculous joke. Back in the day, a British admiral was required to do his utmost to win. That was an ambiguous and hazy standard, but the British admirals got the idea and did their utmost. Why? Because when they didn't do their utmost, the British shot them to encourage the others.

Republican senators must do their utmost to get President Trump's nominees and program passed. But they're not going to if they're not afraid of the consequences of failing to do so. Instead, they're going to focus on the short-term attention of the regime media for being mavericks and rebels. We don't need mavericks or rebels. We need reliable conservative votes to get Trump's agenda through. So, we have to show them the consequences of these stupid games. We have to award them stupid prizes. We have to pick some Republican senator up for election in 2026 to make an example of.

Sure, it will cost the party some money. It could potentially put a seat at risk, although our selection of the target may mitigate that potential downside. But there's no alternative. Too many GOP senators have forgotten that they can be fired. We need to remind them, hard and unpleasantly.

Now, who should it be? Who do we take out? We have several solid targets in the coming cycle. We shouldn't focus on someone who can't be conservative. Susan Collins of Maine is never going to be a hard-core conservative because she comes from a deep blue state. We must say "Yes" to success with her and accept that she needs to do what she needs to do.

Lisa Murkowski in Alaska is just awful. She's a continual pebble in our political shoe. Our challenge is that she's popular in her state, and she's helped impose their ridiculous rank choice voting system to establish herself in power forever. One of our important considerations in selecting the appropriate senatorial sacrifice is that we win – you don't want to strike at the king and miss.

How about Thom Tillis in North Carolina? He's always been terrible. He's genuinely soft. There are harder noodles. The problem is that North Carolina could go blue if we don't get the right candidate. We don't want to risk that if we can help it, and he might be the best candidate to hold it. But we shouldn't take him out of contention. If he knows he's a potential primary target, he may ignore his Romneysque instincts and play ball.

There's the obnoxious John Cornyn of Texas. I may establish residency there just to vote against him, which would be a joy. He's got a ton of money but he's also created a ton of resentment. He really screwed up badly by joining with Democrats on a gun control bill that they spent the 2024 election cycle touting as a bipartisan achievement. What the hell is a Republican thinking signing onto a gun control bill that is not purely a repeal of prior gun control bills? The good thing is that Texas is deep red, and it's got a deep bench of good conservative candidates who can win a primary and almost certainly win the general. The loss of John Cornyn is no loss at all. We haven't yet seen him take the lead in fighting Donald Trump's nominees, something we might expect him to do because the President is not selecting bland, status-quo establishment hacks of the kind that people like Cornyn are comfortable with. Perhaps Cornyn has already gotten the message that he is a prime primary target and adjusted his attitude accordingly.

And then there's Joni Ernst. I would love to give her the benefit of the doubt because she's a fellow colonel, but boy, she sure miscalculated. As many have pointed out (which I noted after I drafted this column), the Iowa timeserver managed to draw unwelcome attention to her hack record by refusing to provide a full-throated endorsement of Pete Hegseth, and for, according to some, acting behind the scenes to stop his nomination. That's a problem for her because, until the spotlight shown down upon her, most of us didn't realize that she backed the terrible [1]Lankford immigration compromise bill, that she supported the Cornyn [2]gun control fiasco, that she is OK with [3]mentally ill trans people in the military, that she [4]voted for a lot of Biden's terrible nominees, and that she was all in for all sorts of [5]other terrible stuff. America First folks dug up her appalling [6]George Floyd suck-up tweets and other examples of her Washington Post-friendly kind of weak Republicanism. None of that's good.

She thought she was going to be a heroine by opposing Hegseth. This was a big mistake. Instead of hosannas for opposing Hegseth's his unrepentant heterosexuality and appreciation of beer, she gave every America First social media pundit reason to trawl through her crappy record, and all because she thought she might get some regime media love by blocking Trump's pick. Hope it was worth it, Joni.

So, is Ernst the right senator to go after in 2026? Well, she was at least savvy enough to finally realize that what she thought would give her a star turn might just lead her to getting turned out of office. By the end of last week, [7]she was explaining that she's not necessarily against Pete, and that she really just wants to see how the hearings work out, and that she doesn't want to be SecDef herself, and blah blah blah blah blah.

At the end of the day, she's going to vote for Pete Hegseth because she knows if she doesn't, she definitely becomes target Number One. After all, Iowa is a pretty red state, and there are some potential challenges there who don't have her baggage. Will capitulating be enough to not make her our electoral target du jour? I don't know, but if I were her – and I would not be because I am not soft – I would try to explain why all this stuff about not backing Pete is just a terrible misunderstanding and then put the “hard” in hard-core for the next couple of years.

A lot of this is going to depend on Donald Trump. At the end of the day, he may be the one to pick the target. He's very good at selecting an enemy and personalizing it. We will soon know who he thinks is the problem, and we will be the solution. This is a good thing. It's necessary. It's been far too long since we launched a primary against an incumbent squish and tossed him/her/them onto the unemployment line. But somebody in the GOP caucus has to go. Somebody has to be the head on the stick. My advice to the soft senators – don't be that guy.

1.4.9 This Recent Development With Dems Only Shows the Extent of Their Sickness (2024-12-09 11:26)

A meeting of state Democratic chairs in Arizona was a whine fest of epic proportion, though no one seemed capable of grasping why Kamala Harris lost in 2024. The liberal bubble, as dense and insane as ever, laughably had liberals thinking that Harris was going to ride into DC with 400 electoral votes. Some of these people had Harris winning Florida. Harris didn't win a single swing state and got handily trounced by President-elect Donald J. Trump. Outside this echo chamber, everyone knew trouble was ahead; spending a billion dollars and being unable to move the needle meant something was wrong. Outgoing Democratic National Committee Chair Jamie Harrison was adamant that the party should do what they ought to do when it comes to voter outreach: dump the 'woke' antics.

I can't believe I'm saying this, but the only person who made any sense was Martin O'Malley—yeah, remember him—who said that the Democratic Party only needs to revert to its pro-working class roots. That's easier said than done—there are no working people within the Democratic Party, at least not in the circles where political strategy is dictated (via [1]Politico):

At a Hilton hotel outside of Phoenix, where Christmas carols piped into the lobby, state Democratic chairs gathered for their annual winter meeting. They weren't frantic like they had been after Trump's first stunning victory. They were exhausted. Even after Trump tapped the likes of Kash Patel and Robert F. Kennedy Jr. to staff his government, they still weren't ready to demonstrate in the streets or tune into liberal networks.

In a fiery speech, Harrison lambasted critics in his party who want to walk away from "identity politics." Democrats began their meeting on Thursday with a "land acknowledgement," a symbolic gesture that grants that the land a person is standing on previously belonged to Native Americans, which conservatives have derided as "woke."

As Democrats tried to figure out a path forward, there was a quiet sense among some here that they wouldn't be out of power for long. It was a stark contrast from people elsewhere in their party who are worried that a realignment could rob them of power for years. After all, these Democrats reasoned, Americans had voted for Trump before — and then quickly grew tired of him, as evidenced by the 2018 midterms and then again in the 2020 presidential election. They took comfort in the fact that voters this year supported liberal ballot initiatives and Democratic Senate candidates in states Trump won.

Native Americans [2]shifted to the right, too.

Democrats now look upon these voters as sewer trash. They've taken a position that they're poor by choice and should suffer the consequences of not being part of their country club of snobbery, derision, and suffocating self-righteousness. These people think they're right about everything because they have a degree. That's not how this works, and most liberals are bonafide idiots. Only these people would bash working people for not being able to soak up the ludicrous price increases brought on by Joe Biden's inflationary agenda. That's like stoning a homeless person for not being able to buy a house. That's how detached these people are. The good news is that the Democrats' systemic dysfunction is the opportunity Trump and the GOP must exploit to get things done, namely on border security and ensuring the Trump tax cuts become permanent.

The Democrats remain blind because they refuse to leave their comfort zone, which is what most voters hate about the Left. Their views make them unlikable, unapproachable, and all-around deplorable.

1.4.10 Is Trump Already Our De Facto President? (2024-12-09 11:29)

The French president – whose government has been [1]buffeted by chaos in recent days – invited President-elect Donald Trump to Paris to help commemorate the reopening of the iconic Notre Dame cathedral, after a damaging fire in 2019. Trump accepted the invitation, [2]meeting with a number of European leaders on the trip, having already huddled with other world leaders at Mar-a-Lago in recent days. During the festivities, [3]as Sarah noted over the weekend, a stream of dignitaries lined up to warmly greet the incoming American president, as cameras rolled. These are striking images, both because of who is depicted in them, but also because of who wasn't there. One might be forgiven for watching this footage and assuming Donald Trump is already President of the United States – as relayed by one of his top State Department nominees:

One by one, world leaders rise to greet President Trump.

This is what respect for our President and country looks like.[4]pic.twitter.com/6YKVjWFnqX— Monica Crowley (@MonicaCrowley) [5]December 7, 2024

Another related clip:

[6]pic.twitter.com/WrElJ4Be2R— America (@america) [7]December 7, 2024

It is impossible to avoid juxtaposing these scenes with the reality that the current, sitting President of the United States [8]was not in attendance at all. These may be harsh comments, but they're also inevitable and reasonably-founded observations:

Combination of Biden being feeble & needing to hide from the press after Hunter pardon with Trump having previously been president makes it very easy for world leaders to just ignore Biden now & go straight to Trump. [9]<https://t.co/G5tIB2gDuT>— Dan McLaughlin (@baseballcrank) [10]December 7, 2024

This is such a weird thing that it almost seems like Trump is already president when Biden still has 6 weeks left as president

Like... this is historically weird. It feels surreal. [11]<https://t.co/gnp2mECci8>— PoliMath (@politicalmath) [12]December 8, 2024

The man who is nominally running the US government was represented in France by his wife and daughter, who even appeared to have [13]gotten a bit chummy with Trump, in spite of everything that has transpired over the last four-plus years. This could have been an awkward seating arrangement, but this isn't an awkward photograph:

The sitting president was elsewhere, having been shuffled off the world stage and hidden away by his team. Perhaps they're shielding him from questions and uncomfortable situations over his outrageous and shameless [16]pardon-related lies and actions. Perhaps he's just literally not able to be in public without risking embarrassment:

Biden's [22]polling numbers are bleak as he approaches the official end of his presidency. As noted above, it already feels like his presidency is over, so much so that some people are already blaming the not-yet-president for current problems:

1.4.11 The Evaporation of the Obama Mystique (2024-12-13 22:38)

Former President Barack Obama had long been rumored as the catalyst for the 2020 Joe Biden nomination – and thereafter played the whispering puppeteer behind the subsequent lost Biden administration years.

Advertisement

As such he and his coterie proved the virtual architects of the Biden administration, one of the most unpopular and failed presidencies in American history.

Recall earlier that after a flailing candidate Biden lost the first three 2020 primaries and caucuses, his inert campaign was headed nowhere.

Obama and fellow Democratic insiders abruptly engineered the withdrawal of his rival 2020 presidential candidates: hard left but likely sure-loser candidates, including Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren, and Pete Buttigieg.

The Obamas ignored or withheld from the public their own firsthand knowledge that Biden was suffering from signs of dementia.

Instead, they found Biden's cognitive decline and his former concocted reputation as working-man's Joe useful as a veneer for a veritable Obama third-term, "phone it in" administration. Or as wistful Obama once conditioned his dream of a third term – "If I could make an arrangement where I had a stand-in, a front man or front woman, and they had an earpiece in."

The Obamaites then got their wish for four years of enacted hard-left directives that they could only have dreamed of while in actual power.

But their radical menu since 2021 had divided and nearly wrecked the nation—hyperinflation, 12 million illegal aliens, a ruined border, spiraling crime, a shattered foreign policy of appeasement, the popular backlash against DEI/Woke/trans chauvinism, partisan lawfare, and weaponization of the government.

And the ruling radicalism beneath the Biden facade eventually cost the Democrats nearly everything – the presidency, the House, and the Senate.

An inert Biden is departing office with a 36 percent favorability rating in a recent Emerson poll. His Democratic nominee replacement, losing presidential candidate Vice President Harris, also has virtually vacated her office with 40 days left of her tenure.

Failed candidate Harris has been roundly faulted by staffers and donors for blowing through some $2 billion in assorted 2024 campaign money.

She ended up doing worse against Trump than Biden himself had in 2020.

Many Democrats believe that they might have done just as well had Biden stayed on the ticket even in his vastly diminished state.

The Obamas were further blasted for nullifying the wishes of 14 million primary voters by forcing Biden off the ticket – ironically in the same backroom, anti-democratic manner they had cleared the way for him in 2020.

Obama emerged from his comfortable retirement to hit the 2024 campaign trail, schooling the country that President-emeritus Donald Trump was a dictator, a fascist, a tyrant, and, of course, a "racist."

The more Trump polled even with, or ahead of, Kamala Harris, the more an exasperated and ignored Obama talked down to supposedly low-information voters.

Advertisement

But by the time Harris lost the election, voters had tuned out a nagging and patronizing Obama – and his stale, now-dated hope-and-change boilerplate speeches.

What Obama did not mention, but what the voters knew, was that the border was more secure under Trump than during either the Obama or Biden tenure.

Russian President Vladimir Putin invaded countries during the Obama and Biden administrations but stayed put on Trump's watch.

Obama's bizarre vision of a new Middle East had sought to empower Iran as a supposed counterweight against moderate Arab nations and our ally Israel.

Years ago, Obama invited the Russians into Syria, empowered dictatorial Syria, berated Israel nonstop, and all but ignored the violence of Iran's surrogate terrorists: Hamas, Hezbollah, and the Houthis.

But after October 7, Israel retaliated to the mass slaughter of Jewish civilians with all-out war against Hamas and Hezbollah – rendering these once feared terrorists nearly impotent.

In an exchange of air attacks with Iran, Israel showed the world that Iran was as militarily weak as its chanting and threats were tiresome and shrill.

Iran is now tottering on the brink, as its terrorist appendages – including most recently the Assad dynasty – are melting away.

Israel and the moderate Arab regimes are in ascendance, as the entire crazy Obama-envisioned Middle East agenda melts away.

Advertisement

The 2024 anemic Democratic campaign and the Trump electoral college and popular vote victories – combined with record defections of Hispanic and African-American voters from the Democratic Party to Trump – proved a resounding rejection of the Obama legacy and his surrogates' left-wing visions.

Yet after the people spoke in the election, the more Obama whined that democracy itself had failed him. Voters, he remonstrated, who disagreed with him were written off as racist and sexist.

Obama again harped that constituents did not know what was good for them.

And then, the disappointed former community organizer suddenly disappeared – pondering to which of his own four mansions his private jet would fly him home to commiserate.

1.4.12 Time Magazine Asked Trump What He Thought Was Kamala's Worst Error in the 2024 Race. His Answer is Epic. (2024-12-13 22:53)

Time Magazine has named Donald J. Trump their 'Person of the Year.' It's not shocking—it leaked hours before it was made official, which didn't sit well with the publication or its readers. Don Lemon was significantly perturbed that Trump was awarded this honor again—he won it in 2016 as well. Of course, MSNBC thinks the award is [1]worthless because Trump won it. The best part is that we don't care what these clowns believe, and neither does Trump. The media has never been more dismissed, mocked, or flat-out wrong since the 2016 election (via [2]WaPo):

Time's editor in chief, Sam Jacobs, wrote that it was not a difficult choice this year: "Since he began running for President in 2015, perhaps no single individual has played a larger role in changing the course of politics and history than Trump. ... On the cusp of his second presidency, all of us — from his most fanatical supporters to his most fervent critics — are living in the Age of Trump."

Trump rang the opening bell of the New York Stock Exchange about two hours after the Time announcement, in an event to celebrate the honor.

NYSE chairman Jeffrey Sprecher said as he introduced Trump that markets had hit record highs since Election Day.

You can read the [8]interview transcript here, but he was asked about Kamala Harris and what mistakes she made during her 2024 run. Trump's response was gold:

America is back. [9]pic.twitter.com/2u2vtC8kzp— johnny maga (@_johnny-maga) [10]December 12, 2024

Speaking of Kamala Harris. What do you think were her worst mistakes in the campaign?

Taking the assignment. Number one, because you have to know what you're good at.

Well, there is no argument there. Kamala's disastrous 2020 run was a preview of what would have happened if she had ever been able to win the Democratic nomination. She obtained it via coup after top Democrats pushed Joe Biden out of the 2024 race. We quickly learned she couldn't do it, and the lack of media interviews was because the woman couldn't string two coherent thoughts together.

1.4.13 Tim Walz Wants Us to Feel Sorry For Him Because He Has to 'Pay Bills' (2024-12-15 22:39)

Failed Democratic Vice Presidential candidate Gov. Tim Walz (D-Minn.) is trying to gain sympathy after a devastating loss by crying about the struggles of managing bills and responsibilities he faces as the country's "poorest" vice president candidate that Americans face daily. Walz shed light on how it felt to be the least richest person to run alongside a presidential candidate despite making over $100,000 annually, while most Americans bring in far less than that.

During an interview, Walz said he thought it was a "flex" that he had to "pay bills" like all Americans and appeal to voters because he is "poor."

"I thought it was a real flex when the Wall Street Journal pointed out that I might have been the least wealthy person to ever run for vice president," he said. "I thought that would be something people say, well, this guy knows where we're coming from. He's had to pay his bills."

According to Time Magazine, Walz had a[1] total income of about $299,000, with $135,000 coming from pensions or annuities. The average American makes only [2] $63,795 a year, which is on the higher end. In some states, it's as low as $50,000. The publication noted that Walz's net worth as of 2024 stands at just over $1 million. But, yes, we should all feel sorry for him.

1.4.14 Kamala Harris for CA Governor? Here's What Her Close Aides Think (2024-12-15 22:41)

In a bold and unprecedented move, failed presidential candidate Kamala Harris is reportedly eyeing California Gov. Gavin Newsom's job. The move would significantly shift her political trajectory after she was largely defeated by President-elect Donald Trump in the 2024 election. However, conservatives argue that her time as California attorney general would mirror her agenda as a governor.

According to a CNN [1]report, several top aides are urging Harris to run for governor in 2026 despite polling as one of the most unliked vice presidents in U.S. history. The report noted that the decision will depend on whether Democrats believe the outgoing vice president has a strong chance of winning the party's presidential nomination in what is expected to be a highly competitive primary in 2028. Half the party appears to be split on whether Harris should try her chance at the White House again or take a different path.

The governor's race, meanwhile, looks like a lay-up: Harris was elected statewide three times and served 10 years combined as state attorney general and US senator, and when asked by CNN, several major candidates made clear either directly or through aides that they would likely step aside if she got in. In CNN's conversation with over a dozen current and former Harris advisers and other top California Democratic players, the only consensus around the vice president is that she likely can't do both, since that would essentially require launching a presidential campaign soon after being sworn in as governor. Harris will need to decide very soon after Trump's inauguration if she will quickly give up on her dream of being president – which she feels got short shrift from the circumstances of this year – and instead go for a job that, while one of the most powerful in American politics, would clearly be a fallback.

The report highlighted the tight timeline Harris would need to follow if she ultimately decides to run for Newsom's seat. It pointed out that, at the latest, she must have a clear agenda for a potential governorship by the summer of 2025.

"What she's been saying to people over the last couple of weeks, donors, other supporters that she's been talking with, is you haven't seen the last of me, I'm not going quietly into the night," CNN's Issac Devore said. "Advisors, people close to her, are debating about what that means. They do not want her final official act ever to be essentially certifying Donald Trump's win over her, especially four years after January 6. And so they look at this governor's race in California in 2026, and it seems to them like a layup, essentially, that she would probably clear the field or mostly clear the field, and she would get to be governor of California."

A former advisor to Harris said that a run for governor would be more like a "capstone" rather than a "stepping stone," adding that "if you're thinking of running for president in 2028, the worst thing you can do is run for governor in 2026."

Meanwhile, another believed that Harris could win the presidential race once Trump was out of office and that the gubernatorial race would be distracting.

1.4.15 Let The WNBA Die Already (2024-12-15 22:54)

It's difficult to think of an analogy to use when trying to illustrate how the media and players are trying to destroy the WNBA without realizing it. Not because it's particularly impossible, but because they're all so outdated. To hear the Democrats say it, racism is everywhere and "white supremacy" controls everything in the country, if not the world. But it's really not. It still exists, but it does so in insignificant ways as to not really matter. Yet, getting back to the WNBA, the press around, and hatred of Caitlin Clark is racist. Just let the league die already.

First off, let me say that I am not the target demographic for the WNBA. Not only am I a man, but I don't enjoy basketball - once you've seen a 7-foot-tall guy slam dunk a basketball one time, you're pretty much seen it every time. I get the skill, and I don't have the skill, but I also don't really want to have the skill. There are far too many timeouts, traveling, fouls (called and missed) and seemingly always comes down to the last 2 minutes, which takes as long as the rest of the game had, for me to be interested. It's like watching an NFL game with a flag-happy referee crew: it's boring.

That being said, people like it. The NBA is wildly popular and very profitable. The WNBA is none of those things.

The league lost $40 million this year and considered that to be a victory because they expected to lose closer to $50 million.

The only reason they didn't lose $10 million more is the rise of Caitlin Clark.

Clark is white, and the media decided she would be "the star" of the league because of that fact. They started hyping her in college – "She's scored more points in college than anyone, including Pete Maravich" was the first I'd heard of her. Never mind the fact that Maravich wasn't allowed to play his freshman year thanks to rules at the time and there was no 3-point shot, Clark was the "greatest ever!!!"

Don't get me wrong, my animosity is not directed toward Clark – she's better than I could ever be at the game, but perspective and reality matter. The left was waiting for some player to hype and they wanted that player to be white. Why? Because they believe America is racist and would only accept a white player as a star.

This is beyond stupid, of course, but it's how the mind of Democrats work. The top player in baseball is from Japan, players in the NFL are majority black and it's the most popular game in sports, while the NHL is full of Canadians and Swedes and isn't even a blip on the radar. If the American public is into "white supremacy," we really suck at it.

Clark got the full court press: magazine covers, TV profiles, more basketball cards selling for a small fortune than established athletes, and games all over TV. When her team came to town, the story was about her going to be there, being there, then having been there. It sold tickets and merchandise. But only hers.

The public bought the sizzle without realizing the steak was just ok.

I don't mean to say she's not a good player, she is. But she was only the 7th in average points. Nothing to sniff at, but I bet no one in the media who'd hyped her could name any of the 6 players ahead of her. I bet not one single panel member on CNN whining about "white supremacy” being why she gotten so much attention could name one either. You’d think they learn them, if only to name drop and seem to be genuine.

But they aren’t genuine, it’s performance art.

None of the energy from the left behind pushing Caitlin Clark was ever put behind a black player; they didn’t even try. That’s not Clark’s fault, it’s the fault of the left. And with literally all of the energy behind her, it only makes sense that there is no residual impact on anyone else and the rest of the league. Games not involving her are about as popular as the league was before her.

Advertisement

Still, even team owners don’t get it and spend their time degrading Clark rather than expanding the case for the whole league. “Caitlin Clark was named Athlete of the year. Why couldn’t they have put the whole WNBA on that cover and said ‘The WNBA is the league of the year’?” asked Washington Mystics owner Sheila Johnson. (Honestly, I had to look up where the Mystics were from, which is a problem for the league that pre-dates Clark.) “Because when you just keep singling out one player it creates hard feelings. And so now you’re starting to hear stories of racism.”

Yes, it is racism. Racism by the left in elevating a rookie as the savior of the league because she is white, then racism of black players toward her rather than directing that animosity toward the people choosing a person to highlight because of their skin color. The only person who hasn’t done anything here is Clark herself, and she’s the one getting bodychecked and her eye gouged by bitter racists.

I say let the league die. I was indifferent about its existence before, but the whining and victimhood by people lucky enough to play a game for a living about the one person bringing in the people necessary to grow the league and all of their salaries is just too much. So many stories about how “little” WNBA players are paid compared to NBA players are stupid – how many of the league’s players could make $100,000 in the non-sports world? The rookie starting wage is $76,535. How many people without an advanced degree make that much right out of college? Not many, and fewer still when you remove rich kids hired by their family’s business.

But they aren’t worth more. Rather than whine about the attention, accolades and endorsements Caitlin Clark is getting, practice and play better. The vast majority of players in the WNBA, Clark included (41.7), shoot well below 50 percent. You have to go to the 40th player on the league leader board for shooting percentage to get below 50 in the NBA. There are only 12 of the top 50 leaders in the WNBA above 50, with most just barely.

In other words, the game itself is boring. I can watch my friends miss shots and I don't have to be lectured about how horrible and racist everything is as I do it.

The league won't die – it's subsidized by the NBA, at least in part, to distract from the womanizing of players – so they aren't about to let it die. It is immune from reality, both economic and political. I guess I'll just keep doing what I've been doing: not giving a damn, no matter how much its hyped or how loud the whining gets.

1.4.16 The Stench of BO: Barack Obama's Mystique a Casualty of the Election (2024-12-22 00:42)

Former President Barack Obama had long been rumored as the catalyst for the 2020 [1]Joe Biden nomination—and thereafter played the whispering puppeteer behind the subsequent lost Biden administration years.

As such, he and his coterie proved to be the virtual architects of the [2]Biden administration, one of the most unpopular and failed presidencies in American history.

Recall earlier that after a flailing candidate Biden lost the first three 2020 primaries and caucuses, his inert campaign was headed nowhere.

Obama and fellow Democratic insiders abruptly engineered the withdrawal of his rival 2020 presidential candidates: hard-left but likely sure-loser candidates, including Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren, and Pete Buttigieg.

The Obamas ignored or withheld from the public their own firsthand knowledge that Biden was suffering from signs of dementia.

Instead, they found Biden's cognitive decline and his former concocted reputation as working-man's Joe useful as a veneer for a veritable Obama third-term, "phone it in" administration. Or as wistful Obama once conditioned his dream of a third term: "If I could make an arrangement where I had a stand-in, a front man or front woman, and they had an earpiece in."

The Obamaites then got their wish for four years of enacted hard-left directives that they could only have dreamed of while in actual power.

But their radical menu since 2021 had divided and nearly wrecked the nation—hyperinflation, 12 million illegal aliens, a ruined border, spiraling crime, a shattered foreign policy of appeasement, the popular backlash against DEI/woke/trans chauvinism, partisan lawfare, and weaponization of the government.

And the ruling radicalism beneath the Biden facade eventually cost [3]the Democrats nearly everything—the presidency, the House, and the Senate.

An inert Biden is departing office with a 36 % favorability rating in a recent Emerson poll. His Democratic nominee replacement, losing presidential candidate Vice President Kamala Harris, also has virtually vacated her office with 40 days left of her tenure.

Failed candidate Harris has been roundly faulted by staffers and donors for blowing through some $2 billion in assorted 2024 campaign money.

She ended up doing worse against Donald Trump than Biden himself had in 2020.

Many Democrats believe that they might have done just as well had Biden stayed on the ticket even in his vastly diminished state.

The Obamas were further blasted for nullifying the wishes of 14 million primary voters by[4] forcing Biden off the ticket—ironically in the same backroom, antidemocratic manner they had cleared the way for him in 2020.

Obama emerged from his comfortable retirement to hit the 2024 campaign trail, schooling the country that President-emeritus Trump was a dictator, a fascist, a tyrant, and, of course, a "racist."

The more Trump polled even with, or ahead of, [5]Harris, the more an exasperated and ignored Obama talked down to supposedly low-information voters.

But by the time Harris lost the election, voters had tuned out a nagging and patronizing Obama—and his stale, now-dated “hope-and-change” boilerplate speeches.

What Obama did not mention, but what the voters knew, was that the border was more secure under Trump than during either the Obama’s or Biden’s tenure.

Russian President Vladimir Putin invaded countries during the Obama and Biden administrations, but stayed put on Trump’s watch.

Obama’s bizarre vision of a new Middle East had sought to empower Iran as a supposed counterweight against moderate Arab nations and our ally Israel.

Years ago, Obama invited the Russians into Syria, empowered dictatorial Syria, berated Israel nonstop, and all but ignored the violence of Iran’s surrogate terrorists: Hamas, Hezbollah, and the Houthis.

But after Oct. 7, 2023, Israel retaliated to the mass slaughter of Jewish civilians with all-out war against Hamas and Hezbollah—rendering these once feared terrorists nearly impotent.

In an exchange of air attacks with Iran, Israel showed the world that Iran was as militarily weak as its chanting and threats were tiresome and shrill.

Iran is now tottering on the brink, as its terrorist appendages—including most recently the Assad dynasty in Syria—are melting away.

Israel and the moderate Arab regimes are in ascendance, as the entire crazy Obama-envisioned Middle East agenda melts away.

The 2024 anemic Democratic campaign and the Trump Electoral College and popular vote victories—combined with record defections of Hispanic and African American voters from the Democratic Party to Trump—proved a resounding rejection of the Obama legacy and his surrogates’ left-wing visions.

Yet after the people spoke in the election, the more Obama whined that democracy itself had failed him. Voters, he remonstrated, who disagreed with him were written off as racist and sexist.

Obama again harped that constituents did not know what was good for them.

And then, the disappointed former community organizer suddenly disappeared—pondering to which of his own four mansions his private jet would fly him home to commiserate.

1.4.17 Blame Biden for Drone Hysteria (2024-12-22 00:44)

New Jersey is now subject to nonstop and often sensational civilian reports of swarms of nocturnal drones crossing city skies and violating the airspace of airports and [1]military bases.

Terrified thousands demand to know what these drones are doing and to whom they belong.

In response, the [2]Biden administration had initially kept mum.

Then, under mounting public pressure, it assured the public to be calm, given that most of the drones were likely launched by hobbyists and private citizens.

When that narrative failed to convince many, spokespeople pivoted to claims of mass hysteria and mistaken identity.

Amateur sightseers, they inferred, were subject to panic and hallucinations—supposedly wrongly confusing normal civilian and airline planes with drones.

Perhaps.

But as the sightings continued, more government narratives followed that the drones were unidentified but assuredly still harmless and certainly not foreign-operated.

And the public's initial curiosity soon turned to fear and finally to anger at their government's silence, subsequent gaslighting, and final mendacity.

In its characteristic stonewalling, the Biden administration has only fueled speculations and occasional conspiracy theories when it could have at least reviewed logical theories and welcomed legitimate questions.

Is a controversial government agency—perhaps the CIA or the Environmental Protection Agency—surveilling installations, areas, or people that would either be too embarrassing to be revealed or otherwise might set off panic? And for the public good or consistent with this administration's weaponization of government?

Or are these drones the work of foreign surveillance in the mode of the 2023 Chinese spy balloon?

A government that long ago lost all its credibility could not reassure the people of the truth even if it wished to.

For nearly four years, Homeland Security Secretary [3]Alejandro Mayorkas assured the American people almost weekly that “the border is secure”—even as a reported 12 million illegal entrants easily crossed it.

White House spokeswoman Karine Jean-Pierre asserted weekly that President Joe Biden was vigorous, in full control of his faculties, and always “sharp.”

In fact, she knew that the American people grimaced as their president slurred his speech, suddenly went mute, tripped, fell, and wandered aimlessly.

In late January and early February 2023, a huge Chinese surveillance balloon traversed across the United States. Public outrage grew as the administration changed its excuses by the day.

It variously assured the public that it was a mere weather balloon, that it would be too dangerous to shoot it down, that it did not transmit any of its photographic capability to China, or that its trajectory did not cross key military installations.

All those excuses were either half-lies or untrue.

In late July and early August 2021, it became clear that the Biden administration planned a massive, previously unannounced, and abrupt withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Rumors circulated that Biden rushed to claim that he alone had ended the messy Afghan war misadventure after 20 years and would celebrate his triumph on the 20th anniversary of the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

To assuage public fears, our top generals assured us that [4]the Taliban was at bay, Kabul was secured, and the withdrawal would be orderly.

But within hours, sheer bedlam broke out.

Thirteen Marines were murdered by terrorists.

There were no audits or background checks on Afghans who were flown to America. Meanwhile, loyal Afghan interpreters and American contractors were ignored and left behind to fend off triumphant terrorists on their own.

Even as Americans watched the disaster on their screens, the Biden administration boasted of a supposedly heroic and Herculean effort to evacuate tens of thousands—in what the public saw instead as the greatest American military humiliation of the last half-century.

So, the American public understandably no longer believes much of anything the waning Biden administration says—not after its other chronic lies about denying the role of the Wuhan lab in the COVID-19 pandemic, only “moderate” inflation, and assurances that [5]Hunter Biden would never be pardoned by his father.

This administration knows that anytime there is a scandal or embarrassment on Team Biden’s watch, it wheels out megaphones that ignore inquiries, gaslights critics by claiming they are hallucinatory, defames them as conspiratorial, or simply flat-out lies and stonewalls.

No one yet knows what, if anything, these drones are, what they are doing in our skies—and much less whether they pose any threat at all.

But almost everyone assumes the Biden administration knows and yet expects that it will likely deceive us that it doesn’t.

1.4.18 Merry Christmas (2024-12-22 19:03)

I have a nice christmas tree, right?

1. <https://iainthegreat.wordpress.com/wp-content/uploads/2024/12/img-4919.jpg>

1.4.19 Why Christmas Remains the Greatest Story of All Time (2024-12-22 19:11)

Across cultures throughout human history, people have sought to flee oppression and escape persecution. A recurring theme in Western classical literature and in modern classics such as Superman and Disney originals, which revolve around the struggle between good and evil, is the need and critical role for a rescuer or savior.

Christmas is the celebration of the birth of the messiah, the ultimate rescuer and savior for mankind who would vanquish evil, oppression and falsehood once and for all. In that sense, Jesus is the most revolutionary figure of human history. No other religion makes the claim that it was founded by a messiah.

Many people assume Christianity is like other religions that require followers to give up bad habits and perform certain works and rituals acceptable to God. Not so. Christ reminds us in Matthew 11:30 that, “My yoke is easy, and My burden is light.” When a learned Jewish Pharisee whose life revolved around living up to stressful “dos and don’ts” of the Mosaic law asked Jesus which was the greatest commandment in the law, Jesus answered simply that if we love God and love our neighbor as ourselves, we will have fulfilled all the laws.

Even non-believers recognize Jesus as the most far-reaching revolutionary. For one thing, Jesus Christ—being God, affected history with such an impact that He split time, dividing all human activities and events into happening before his coming (called B.C.) or after his coming (called A.D.). Christ had to have had a supernatural impact for non-Christians around the world to agree to dividing history in two.

The power of Christ can also be measured by beauty. A full collection of Renaissance Christian art, if it could be assembled, would be worth many times more than all the other art in the world combined.

First, the account of Jesus Christ is more historically verifiable than other renowned figures and their works who lived in that ancient time and era—including literary greats, Virgil and Horace and military-kings like Alexander the Great—because of the number of eye-witness accounts, the short lapse of time between what Jesus said and did and the written account of those events and the number of surviving manuscripts.

No one doubts Virgil and Horace lived and originated great poetic masterpieces, although the written manuscripts of their works were recorded more than 400 years after they had died. There are only two original biographical accounts of Alexander the Great, written by Arrian and Plutarch some 400 years after Alexander died. The eye-witness accounts of Jesus were recorded in writing within a generation of his life. In addition, there are about 1,000 times more manuscripts that preserve the deeds and teachings of Jesus than there are ancient documents preserving other classical ancient works and records of historic figures who lived at approximately the same time.

Second, Christ is the only person in history who was pre-announced starting 1,000 years before he was born—with 18 different prophets from the Old Testament between 10th and the 4th centuries B.C. predicting his coming birth, life, and death. Hundreds of years later, the circumstances of Christ's birth, life and death validated those prophecies in surprisingly accurate detail. This is unique to Jesus Christ—no one else in human history.

Third, Christ not only demonstrated his otherworldly power to heal and perform the ultimate miracle of bringing the dead back to life, but he set the absolute highest standard of love possible—being willing to die to give life to others. As Jesus prophesied, his resurrection confirmed God's power and plan—providing “seeing is believing” evidence by bringing Jesus back from the dead and buried in a tomb to being resurrected and alive, thus providing the people with living proof of who He was.

In fact, Jesus made ten separate appearances to his disciples between the resurrection and his ascension into Heaven—a period of 40 days. Some of those appearances were to individual disciples, some were to several disciples at the same time, and once even to 500 at one time. This was not hearsay, but a matter of record of multiple separate eye-witness accounts recorded in writing.

Fourth, no other religion teaches that God became flesh. In other religions God is too otherworldly and pure to be accessible in terms of having a communion with earthly followers. In Christianity, God had his Son born in the humbleness of a stable and had Him raised in Nazareth, a small and very poor town that was one of the lowest in social status in Israel because He wanted his Son to be approachable by people from all walks of life.

Unlike other religious paths that require certain formalities and good works, the Christian approaches God not by works but by a humble recognition that Christ gave his life for our sins—that he paid the price for us—and that through Christ, we find forgiveness and reconciliation that provide a direct relationship with God.

Christianity is Foundational to the Declaration and the Constitution

As a Christian holiday, Christmas is foundational to America's original character. If Christ had never been born and died the way He did, all of history would have been different. Neither Columbus nor the Pilgrims would have received or have been motivated by the good news of salvation through Christ to explore or establish new communities with a higher moral purpose in the New World.

There would never have been a constitutional government created in the way and time that it was in America, without two necessary conditions:

First, the foundation of recognizing man's unalienable rights of freedom and equality that came out of the teachings of Christ, but not fully recognized until the Protestant Reformation of the 16th century.

Second, the unprecedented collection of Christian human genius that came together—rather amazingly at the same time—people we call the Founding Fathers, who were 95 percent Christian in their beliefs. It was their extraordinary biblical, historical, and classical learning, together with their wisdom, temperament, and practical experience that enabled them to write and frame the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and its Bill of Rights. Equally important, those Christian founders knew the sin and depravity that exists in everyone would lead to abuse of power and tyranny. And so, they structured the government with checks and balances between the three branches of government, and also through the federalist system of division of power between the states and the federal government.

So profound was the accomplishment of the Founding Fathers that it far surpassed achievements of Periclean Athens in Greece, Cicero and the Roman Republic, Florence under the Medicis, England in the period of Elizabeth and Shakespeare, or any other nation. The spiritually-based founding of America was the greatest political and civic event in all human history, which is why evil enemy forces—both domestic and foreign—relentlessly work to destroy the United States.

The constitutional republic formed by the Founders provided for and protected individual rights of freedom and independence such that America achieved material prosperity for more people, more rapidly than any other prior civilization. Additionally, the American constitutional framework enabled people to move closer to the divine image in which all people are created free and equal more than they would have achieved under any prior system.

The Essence and Summary

It is remarkable that Christ had no servants, yet everyone called him master. He had no formal education or degree, yet educated Jews called him rabbi and teacher. Jesus had no medicines, yet he was desperately sought out as a healer. He had no army, yet emperors and kings feared him.

History shows that the greatest advancement of human character—and the accomplishments that followed—was made possible by God who became man, born in the humble circumstances of a dirty stable in the small village of Bethlehem, a speck in the vast Roman Empire. And while that empire would crumble and fall, Jesus, who had neither an army nor won military battles, went on to become the Lord and Savior for people who believe all over the world. While Jesus did say, “My Kingdom is not of this world,” He also implored His disciples and all believers that God’s “will be done on earth, as it is in heaven.” In the end, the Christmas story is about peace and the great joy that good will triumph over evil.

1.4.20 Christmas: Ties to the Past and Hope for the Future (2024-12-22 19:15)

Christmas miracles exist because the miracle of Christmas is true. In a world where mis- and dis-function and information are rampant, Christmas ties us to a peaceful “Silent night” past while proclaiming a promised future: “no more lives torn apart...” No such promise of peace exists in any other setting. While secular DEI initiatives crumble, Christmas and the Bible are more popular than ever.

Circana BookScan figures show that while book sales generally are only up 1 percent, [1]2024 Bible sales are up 22 percent. In May, Gen-Z-ized Bible rephrasings began trending on TikTok. While 18-25-year-olds are frustrated with government, society and life, the Bible, with its Christmas story, parables and music, has been refreshing people and nations for centuries, and Gen-Z is catching on.

In April 2019, my heart sank as I watched the fire at France’s historic Notre Dame Cathedral. Within hours, the spire, which stood for more than 800 years, crashed into a pool of molten lead. Millions worldwide felt the pain. I’m not Catholic but was moved when French President Macron promised to rebuild.

[2]Friends of Notre Dame reported, “Thousands of donors from more than 50 countries... contributed funds....” Money for restorations came from Christians worldwide and nations like Saudi Arabia. The contributions totaled over €846 million; the love was immeasurable.

The world watched in amazement as 1,200 French oak trees and 1,000 construction professionals restored the cathedral. Some called it a “miracle.” It’s not Jesus rising from the dead in three days, but it’s miracle-ish compared to Notre Dame’s original 200-year construction schedule. [3]The French celebrated the feat with President-elect Donald Trump, Ukrainian President Zelenskyy, Prince William, Elon Musk and hundreds of dignitaries.

It's a testimony to the French people, prayers, and I contend, the enduring power and influence of Christianity on the world. While also a UNESCO World Heritage Site, Notre Dame is, first and foremost, a church dedicated to worshiping the Jesus of Christmas

The impact of Christianity on the world is undeniable, especially this time of year. Retail stores play the Bee Gees singing "O Come All Ye Faithful..." In Christmas classic movies, Jimmy Stewart quotes Scripture. Christmas is still changing the world 2000 years after Jesus' birth — other attempts at peace and equity fail faster than Middle Eastern dictators.

Colleges and corporations are abandoning DEI. Why? Because it does not engender cooperation, unity, peace or equity, quite the opposite. [4]Rutgers' NCRI study proved that DEI training made participants more likely to agree with — literally — Hitler. By comparison, Christmas, like its Originator, continues to heal, save, uplift, wed and bless the world.

The historical Jesus is undeniable: Pliny the Younger, Suetonius, Thallus and Jewish historian Josephus record Jesus' family members' names, that His followers were called "Christians," and details about His miracles. [5]Roman historian Tacitus records that He was tried before Pontius Pilate and crucified.

The impact of the Baby of Bethlehem could be correlated without ever opening the Bible. Only two of the top 100 rock songs of all time do not reference Jesus. Art, traditions, names and even athletic teams reflect our connections to Christianity. Because of Christmas, Jesus changed the world. Christians have been changing it ever since.

Quaker Christian Dr. Thomas Bond and Benjamin Franklin founded the first hospital in the colonies, [6]Pennsylvania Hospital. Today, one of the top four U.S. hospitals, its logo still bears the image of a Good Samaritan and the inscription from Jesus' parable, "Take care of him, and I will repay thee"(Luke 10:35).

Advertisement

Award-winning [7]NYT journalist John S. Dickerson notes, "If you have a deadly medical condition, you want to be in a hospital that was founded by Christians or Christian-trained doctors.

In his book, "Miracles," [8]C.S. Lewis observed, "It is a Jewish girl at her prayers upon whom all humankind depended. All humanity (so far as it concerns redemption) has narrowed to that."

If you don't know where you're going, Jesus is still the star of Bethlehem. When it's dark, He's still the Light of the world. If you're searching for God, you don't need to find Him; if you go to His word, He will find you.

Merry Christmas past, present and future.

1.4.21 What Was So Different This Time About Trump's Election? (2024-12-28 23:57)

In the weeks before his 2016 Electoral College victory, [1]Donald Trump was polling between 35 % and 40 %.

He would average only about 41 % approval over his tumultuous four-year tenure.

No one knows what lies ahead over the next four years. But for now, Trump already polls well over 50 % approval.

His inauguration in a few weeks will likely not resemble Trump's 2016 ceremony.

In the 2016-7 transition, Democrat-affiliated interests ran commercials urging electors to become “faithless,” and thus illegally reject their states’ popular votes and instead elect the loser, [2]Hillary Clinton.

Massive demonstrations met Trump on Inauguration Day.

In less than four months after assuming the presidency, special counsel Robert Mueller was appointed to investigate the hoax of Russian collusion.

That wasted 22-month, $40 million investigation found no collusion, but did derail the first two Trump years.

What followed the collusion ruse was a consistent effort to undermine the Trump presidency—two subsequent impeachments, the laptop “disinformation” hoax, the [3]COVID-19 nationwide lockdown, and news suppression of any mention of the Chinese lab origin of the virus or questioning the closing of schools.

In the Trump administration’s last summer of 2020, 120 days of riot, arson, looting, assault, and murder followed, with the denouement of the Jan. 6 turmoil.

In contrast, the current Trump transition has all but assumed the presidency. Over 100 foreign leaders have elbowed each other to be invited to Mar-a-Lago or to phone in their congratulations to the newly elected Trump.

Remember that in 2016 [4]the Left screamed “Logan Act” if a Trump transition appointee even talked with foreign officials.

So why is newly elected Trump a veritable cultural hero in 2024 in a fashion unimaginable eight years ago, when the media had rendered him a near demon?

One, Trump is seen now as a welcome relief.

A departing and unpopular [5]President Joe Biden leaves with about a 36 % approval rating.

The prior Biden years are now seen as abnormal.

The Left's cultural revolution championed fringe policies never quite seen before: destroying the border, welcoming in 12 million illegal aliens, nihilist critical race and legal theories, institutionalizing a third sex, and mandating [6]woke/DEI quotas and indoctrination sessions.

Yet Biden had inherited from Trump a secure border, an economy rebounding after the COVID-19 quarantines, 1.23 % inflation, no wars abroad, and cheap energy.

Four years later, the outgoing [7]Biden administration is widely unpopular. Almost every one of its policies polls below 50 %.

In reaction, Trump promises not just to restore his first-term success, but to expand it.

Two, Trump personally remains transparent and energetic—eager to talk and meet anyone, anytime, and just about anywhere.

His energy offers a sharp contrast with the non-compos-mentis Biden. The change is welcomed by an electorate exhausted by the past four years of presidential stumbling, wandering, incoherence, mind-freezes, and angry, “get-off-my-grass” aged fragility.

Three, Trump is grudgingly admired, now even by some of his enemies who once sought but failed to destroy him.

He endured two impeachments, five civil and criminal court indictments, incessant lawfare, 95 % negative media coverage, attempts to remove him from states' ballots, and two assassination attempts.

Yet all these unprecedented hostile efforts to end Trump may only have made him stronger—and more empathetic when seen as a target of increasingly fanatical enemies.

Four, Trump has expanded his MAGA base and permanently branded it as an ecumenical movement that welcomes shared class interests rather than the tired old tribal racial and ethnic chauvinism.

Trump also brought in disaffected Democrats, independents, and minorities in a way the Democrats could not with the evaporating “Never Trump” dead-enders.

Trump’s veritable campaign menagerie of [8]RFK Jr., Tulsi Gabbard, Elon Musk, Joe Rogan, Dana White, and Kid Rock made it impossible for the Left to demonize MAGA Republicans as right-wing aristocrats or laissez-fair capitalists.

Fifth, the endorsements of the [9]Biden-Harris legacy media, calcified Hollywood endorsers, blowhard university faculties, and tech barons proved vastly overrated.

It was trumped by more popular and dynamic internet influencers, podcasters, bloggers, and maverick entrepreneurs.

Sixth and finally, Trump himself proved more experienced, and more measured and reflective than in 2016. His team too was more disciplined and street smart, led by savvy chief of staff Susan Wiles.

The past year has seen truly pivotal moments of Trump as an everyman—posing for a mug shot after being railroaded by a weaponized lawfare indictment, serving McDonald’s drive-through customers, riding in a garbage truck cab, raising his fist and yelling, “Fight, fight, fight”—and after nearing have his head blown off by a would-be assassin.

Add up all of these once unimaginables, and the people trusted more—and liked better—the Trump reboot than grouchy Biden or inane and inauthentic Vice President [10]Kamala Harris, as well as their shared extremist agendas.

1.4.22 Trump States Where He Stands on H-1B Visas (2024-12-29 00:06)

President-elect Donald Trump has announced his position on the H-1B visa, which imports hundreds of thousands of foreign workers, mainly from India, to work specialty occupations. His statements starkly contrast his first term, where he emphasized the need to prioritize American workers and "America First" policies. His first administration implemented several measures, including stricter eligibility criteria, increased scrutiny of applications, and reduced visa approvals, to ensure that American workers were not displaced or underpaid.

Trump said he has many H-1B visas employed on his properties and believes in the "great" program.

"I've always liked the visas, I have always been in favor of the visas," Trump told the New York Post. "That's why we have them."

Trump, who was previously critical of foreign worker visas during his first administration, agreed with Elon Musk and Vivek Ramaswamy, who argued that the program is crucial for enabling American companies to access highly skilled labor that may be scarce within the U.S. workforce and should be expanded to meet growing demands.

However, critics say the program prioritizes H-1B holders over U.S. citizens for American jobs. According to reports, there are about 650,000 H-1B visa foreign workers in America at any time. U.S. citizens are often laid off and forced to train their foreign replacements.

Musk, however, has doubled down on his support for the program, slamming a social media user who criticized the billionaire's stance on the H-1B visa.

"The reason I'm in America along with so many critical people who built SpaceX, Tesla, and hundreds of other companies that made America strong is because of H1B," Musk wrote on X.

Ramaswamy echoed Musk's sentiments: "American culture has venerated mediocrity over excellence."

Breitbart News [1]reported that in 2015, Trump laid out key visa program reforms, such as increasing the wage for issuing visas to attract Americans to corporate positions rather than foreigners.

1.4.23 Law Professor Explains Why Joe Biden's Picture With Chinese Executives Is Another Blow to the Media (2024-12-29 00:08)

It's another game of catch-up for the media and yet another painful reminder for them why scores of Americans are flocking to other sources for news because they cannot be trusted. It's why some media heads are ranting about the 2024 election, Elon Musk's purchase of Twitter, and the proliferation of streamers and podcasts. They're losing control, and they know it. Even Kamala Harris' operatives admitted that legacy media isn't what it used to be regarding voter reach and influence.

Also, the pervasive lying the media does to cover for Democrats, specifically Joe Biden, has been one of the overt operations in recent memory. They used to hide their bias better, layering it, making it less noticeable, or at the very least debatable regarding their true intentions. There was slightly more nuance, but that's over.

Most CNN and MSNBC segments read like they're coming out of the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee, and law professor Jonathan Turley, who is not a conservative, even noted the legacy media took another broadside hit with the National Archives [1]releasing old photos of Joe Biden and Hunter with their supposed business associates in China. These are the people Joe had never met or even heard of, and we all knew that this was a lie.

Like Sonny Corleone shot up in The Godfather, the media's death was a prolonged and bloody event, a death by a thousand cuts. Yet, the Russian collusion, the burying of Biden's dealings, the Hunter Biden laptop, and the smokescreen concerning the president's mental health might be the four big stories that shredded the media's credibility. The photos obliterated one of the final fake narratives about Biden, so please, establishment press, learn from this because no one cares about your standing anymore (via [2]Jonathan Turley):

...It is not only factually wrong but legally irrelevant. As I stated in my testimony in the Biden impeachment hearing, enriching your family is treated the same under corruption statutes...[3]<https://t.co/1lCpLXuo6p>— Jonathan Turley (@JonathanTurley)

...Phillip appears willing to accept that Hunter and his uncle enriched themselves with influence peddling but somehow believes that that does not implicate the subject of the influence peddling, Joe Biden...— Jonathan Turley (@JonathanTurley) [5]December 28, 2024

America First Legal has been engaged in a prolonged legal fight with the National Archives to get access to the undisclosed evidence. It recently won critical rulings forcing the release. The discovery includes this photo of then-vice president Joe Biden meeting with Hunter and his clients. It adds to an already ample photographic and testimonial record contradicting the President's past denials.

The House has released records showing $27 million in payments from foreign sources to Hunter Biden and his business partners from 2014 to 2019. Hunter used official trips with his father to facilitate some of these associations.

Despite denying meeting with these clients or knowing anything about his son's dealings, it was later revealed that Biden was repeatedly put on a speakerphone with clients, attended dinners, and took pictures with them, including BHR Partners CEO Jonathan Li. A key witness said that he sat down with Joe Biden specifically to discuss these foreign deals with this son.

Joe Biden later wrote college recommendation letters for Li's son and daughter.

In the summer of 2019, Li wired Hunter Biden $250,000 that originated in Beijing and had Joe Biden's Delaware home as the beneficiary address.

There were diamonds as gifts, lavish expense accounts, and a sports car, in addition to massive payments that Hunter claimed were "loans."

After years of ignoring the influence-peddling scandal, the media is not likely to suddenly pursue the story. If you want to see one of the reasons why the public is abandoning the legacy media for new media, just look at this photo.

In the meantime, Democrats have praised or rationalized Biden for pardoning his son despite the fact that it covered possible crimes that might implicate not just Hunter but his father in corruption.

1.4.24 Trump Needs To Be Ready For The Gathering Storm Over H1B Visas (2024-12-29 00:12)

Businesses love cheap labor like a fat kid loves cake. The reason we have so many illegal aliens in the United States is we have so many companies willing and wanting to hire them. They aren't simply hiring them over Americans, they're hiring them over Americans for much cheaper than they can hire Americans – many times for cash, avoiding taxes. It's just a simple fact of economics, made much worse by the failures of Joe Biden and his administration to secure the border. But the fight that is brewing just over the horizon is not about illiterate illegal aliens coming to service the physical labor tasks around the houses of rich Democrats; it is about the fight over the legal immigrants these Democrats will not fire for making eye contact or speaking to the: people coming to the United States on a H1B visa.

The American Immigration Council [1]describes an H1B visa as “a temporary (nonimmigrant) visa category that allows employers to petition for highly educated foreign professionals to work in ‘specialty occupations’ that require at least a bachelor’s degree or the equivalent. Jobs in fields such as mathematics, engineering, technology, and medical sciences often qualify. Typically, the initial duration of an H-1B visa classification is three years, which may be extended for a maximum of six years. Before an employer can file a petition with USCIS, the employer must take steps to ensure that hiring the foreign worker will not harm U.S. workers.”

These visas came into existence to fill the void left by the failing American education system. We were not creating enough educated, skilled workers, instead pumping out gender and race studies grievance drones and sociologists to manufacture studies to keep them feeling self-righteous.

The problem is we never corrected that failure.

Engineering is hard, medicine requires a lot of work and discipline, etc. American popular culture requires immediate gratification – social media influencers only have to wait a few seconds for the likes and “tips” to come rolling in. Planning for when you’re really old – like 30 – is something people with fewer than a million followers do.

Rather than address this rot by disallowing federal student loans and grants to study fields with a 3 percent employment rate – fields like gender or race studies, where the only jobs available are teaching other people dumb enough to take those classes or explain to left-wing corporations why they need to defecate on Martin Luther King’s grave by hiring based on the color of an applicant’s skin and not the content of their resume. There aren’t nearly enough of those jobs to go around, relative to how appealing these universities make the profession seem.

RecommendedChoke off the federal money, and these students can choose a useful field of study or get their fitting for the barista uniform before they pack on the freshman 15. If their parents want to cover the costs, let them. Not everyone can be saved – the world needs cautionary tales too.

Without an effort to create enough high-skilled labor being churned out (and I mean skilled, not simply people with the degree) the H1B will continue to exist.

But to pretend it is not being exploited by tech companies looking to do what those Democrats who don’t want to pay an American to cut their lawn are doing is ignorant.

Foreign labor, even skilled labor, is cheaper. Companies throwing their hands up and whining about how they can’t find enough workers is an old, tested trick to get people for less, who can’t bitch about their low wages or they’ll be let go and shipped back home. The H1B visa worker is tethered, essentially owned, by the company that sponsored them. Get fired and they’re gone.

That incentivizes silence and acceptance of low pay and abuse.

The truth is there are plenty of people with the education to do the job being graduated, but many lack the skills and drive of foreign workers. That's a failure of the education system and no one seems interested in addressing it.

It's being described as "meritocracy," when in reality it is manipulation. Acknowledge the problem, but do not address it because the problem itself is actually beneficial to the businesses.

There is a fight brewing that is just now bubbling over top about H1B visas that will get ugly very quickly, if the Trump administration isn't ready for it. Democrats won't help, they'll try to make things worse because that will help them.

The incoming President has to realize he's already a lame duck. He has a year, at the most, of political capital to push for big changes he campaigned on, then the mid-term campaigning starts. Once that happens, nothing major is going to get done legislatively – that just the nature of the beast. If Republicans hold the House and Senate, or even expand, he gets another year of getting things done before the 2028 cycle starts up.

Time is of the essence here. Someone in the incoming administration needs to step up and break up this gathering storm between Donald Trump, Stephen Miller, Elon Musk and the rest of MAGA before it gets out of control and derails Trump II.

1.4.25 We Can Never Know How Evil These People Were (2024-12-29 00:15)

As those whom the media have protected may finally be exposed for their actions, we might start to get a glimpse of how evil certain people have been both at home and abroad.

Joseph Stalin was a mass murderer. He was also, unfortunately for humanity, a fairly smart guy. He made many observations such as it does not matter who votes but rather who counts the ballots. Or when pressed to get the Pope to come out against the Nazis, he asked how many divisions the Pope had available to fight. One of Stalin's more famous comments was "One death is a tragedy. A million deaths is a statistic." There is absolutely no way to know how many people Joe Stalin, Adolph Hitler or Chairman Mao killed. If one searches for the number, he might find quite a broad range, plus or minus a couple million. There is no way to know how evil these people were. We may know a great deal but we will never have a final accounting.

During Stalin's reign, much of the Western intellectual set and the press warbled on about the wonderful Workers Paradise that was the Soviet Union. They knew of Stalin's brutal actions in Ukraine and the resulting famine, but they would not report it. It was not until Nikita Krushchev denounced his predecessor that a green light was given to the New York Times and other newsrooms to report about the gulags, starvation, show trials, and summary executions. The press was rooting for Stalin and the anti-Capitalistic system for as long as they could. When the jig was up, they decided to try something new: report the news.

As the Trump transition is only a few weeks away, will we have a similar national experience of finding out more about the damage that Joe Biden, Barack Obama, Tony Fauci, Bill Gates and others protected by the press did? There are many things we know, in part due to websites like this one and the newly freed X social media juggernaut. But still, there is a good deal that we don't know—and may never know. I remember that when Obama ran for the presidency for the first time, the LA Times said that it had a video of a younger Obama speaking with a known Israel-hating professor. They said that they would never let the video see the light of day. But isn't it their job to report the news? Aren't they supposed to help us better understand the world in which we live? No. Their sole job is to protect the system that they have bought into. And that system may be going under when Donald Trump raises his right hand and once again swears to uphold the Constitution.

Can we ever know how much money Hillary Clinton directed to the Clinton Foundation in return for favors from the sitting secretary of state? How about the Bidens? We have seen snippets of their corruption through former business partners and of course the Hunter laptop. Can we know how much money they received and from whom? Do we know everything they did for the advancement of their partners' interests at the expense of American needs and advantage? We will never know all of the details, even if there is a special counsel. The same is true for Barack Obama. We know from a hot mic that he promised Vladimir Putin to be more "flexible" after the 2012 election. He sent pallets of money to the mullahs to help them continue their terror activities. But can we ever know how many individuals and companies suffered because of the actions of Obama and his coterie? How many companies fired employees as federal monies were directed to favored green losers? How much of our tax money was wasted on trash companies only because the owners or investors gave a lot of money to the Obama or Biden campaigns? Like with Covid, we will never have an accurate number of those damaged and how many trillions destroyed.

And as for Covid, will we ever have a complete report on the damage caused by Tony Fauci and his chums at the NIH and big pharma? How many young men have heart troubles because we were lied to about the safety of the mRNA vaccines? How many children today are way, way back in their education and development because for the 1 % chance that they might get sick, they needed to stay home and lose their future? Can anyone say how many firms went out of business because of the fake six-foot rule? How many died because available treatments were swept away in order to make way for the mRNA vaccines and mammoth profits? I may not agree with Bobby Kennedy, Jr. on every subject, but one thing that I have found is that he always brings the receipts. He showed that Fauci and company had to get rid of any possible Covid treatment in order to allow for an emergency approval of the experimental treatments. Then, when the pandemic had passed, we started to see that some of those banned treatments actually worked, while the usefulness of the mRNA vaccines has a bigger and bigger question mark after it.

Advertisement

The Pentagon went all in on DEI, and how many soldiers died? How did the failures there lead to the wars in Ukraine and Gaza? How many promising officer candidates stayed out of the armed forces in order not to swear an oath to a guy wearing a dress? Can our fighting forces be brought back up to snuff quickly enough to meet the global challenges of China, Russia and a changing Middle East?

None of what the left did could have taken place without the specific aid of the bureaucracy and the media—including social media. The FBI went from the premier law enforcement agency to a Stasi-like enforcer. Talk about trans surgeries for minors on Facebook and win a visit from two plainclothes agents. The media also had to make Nancy Pelosi's stock riches disappear, for risk that we might notice that she and many others in Congress were becoming fabulously wealthy with their exemption from insider trading laws. Who could forget Twitter closing the account of anyone who dared to share a completely accurate description of Hunter Biden's laptop and its contents? We are currently experiencing the bureaucracy and the media working to convince us that millions of unvetted immigrants and strange drones in the skies are no big deals. Tony Blinken ran out and rented 51 former intelligence hotshots, who had sworn their allegiance to the United States. to lie and say that Hunter's laptop was invented in Putin's living room. They have not apologized for bamboozling the American people, and some of them are proud of what they did. Stalin would give them a kiss on the forehead: never apologize for your more unseemly actions.

The return of Donald Trump and the changing of the guard at the FBI, the Department of Justice, the Pentagon and elsewhere will hopefully have two positive effects. One is to get those bodies once again focused on serving the American people and advancing American (not Democratic) interests. And finally, maybe with new people in place who have the power of investigation and declassification, we will start to get a glimpse of how evil, narrow minded, selfish, and destructive the Obama-Pelosi-Biden-Donors mafia truly was.

There was a story in the early 1990's of a young East German couple who protested against American nuclear weapons in Europe. When the USSR fell and people were allowed to see their state files, the woman was flummoxed to learn that her long-haired hippie husband was a Stasi informant on her. I would not be surprised if we learn of similar acts of betrayal by many of those who ran the country for the past sixteen years.

1.4.26 What the National Archives Just Did Is a Total Scandal (2024-12-29 00:20)

There's no evidence Joe Biden enriched himself, say the liberal media. It's another declaration that quickly got gutted, skinned, and filleted because these people are wrong about everything. It's becoming amusing as hell. Whenever they take a firm stand like this, be prepared for these folks to be run over with a tank because we saw that happen this week.

CNN's Abby Phillip said, "I'm still waiting to see the proof of Joe Biden enriching himself. I take his brother and his son, perhaps." No, ma'am. Rep. Mike Lawler (R-NY) destroyed that narrative in less than a minute, going line-by-line about the layers the Biden crime family goes through via their shell companies where Joe Biden finally gets his cut of the takings. It's an elaborate pipeline, yes, but not one that's a true brainteaser if the media did their job, which they won't because they can't; they're too incompetent, biased, and perhaps a little mentally challenged:

The National Archives finally released photos of Joe palling around with his business partners, who he claims he never met ever (via [3]NY Post):

America First Legal obtained photos from the National Archives & Records Administration showing then-Vice President Joe Biden introducing his son to Chinese leader Xi Jinping in China in 2013 when Hunter Biden was setting up shady business deals with his Chinese partners. [4]pic.twitter.com/x3eZchzeYD— Jerry Dunleavy IV (@JerryDunleavy) [5]December 24, 2024

The National Archives has finally released photos showing then-Vice President Biden meeting with two of first son Hunter Biden's Chinese government-linked business partners — again proving that the president lied about not interacting with his family's foreign patrons.

The cache of photos, released long after their potential political salience and days before Biden retires on Jan. 20, also show Chinese President Xi Jinping grinning as then-Vice President Biden introduced his son during the same December 2013 trip to Beijing.

The Xi-Hunter Biden encounter, which had not previously garnered much attention, appears to have been at a meal Hunter described in an email to his former associate Devon Archer as “pretty amazing” because his dad and China's powerful authoritarian leader “were supposed to spend 2hrs together [but it] stretched to 7hrs. I think they are in love.”

Xi was about two months into his ambitious “Belt and Road” foreign-influence and investment campaign — and a Chinese state-backed company aligned with that vision, BHR Partners, was in the process being co-launched by Hunter.

The newly released photos, which would have been politically explosive if they were released during the now-closed House impeachment inquiry into alleged Biden family corruption, show the elder Biden shaking hands with incoming BHR Partners CEO Jonathan Li and greeting the company's managing director Ming Xue.

A May 2017 email written by Biden family associate James Gilliar penciled in a 10 % cut for the “big guy” in reference to Joe Biden and another former family associate, Tony Bobulinski, said he spoke with Joe Biden the same month about the CEFC venture.

A further $5.1 million flowed directly to entities linked to Hunter and James Biden after Hunter wrote to a CEFC associate in July 2017 that he was “sitting here with my father” and expecting payment.

The CEFC venture focused in part on Chinese attempts to purchase US natural gas.

The fact that Joe Biden met with his son and brother James Biden’s foreign associates throughout his vice presidency and in the years that followed has been established by witness testimony — including Hunter’s own in February — though the president continued to deny it as he sought re-election.

What a crock. Isn't this the real scandal?

1.4.27 Top AG's Words Come Back to Haunt Her After Refusing to Comply With Trump's Deportation Plans (2024-12-29 00:23)

Arizona's Democrat Attorney General Kris Mayes has boldly declared she is unafraid to stand against President-elect Donald Trump's sweeping deportation plans, signaling her commitment to opposing more vigorous border enforcement. This stance reflects a growing divide between leaders prioritizing political correctness over national security and those advocating for stricter immigration policies. Critics argue that such opposition undermines federal efforts to combat illegal immigration and protect American communities, especially in a border state such as Arizona. Her remarks underscore the ongoing battle between state officials and federal immigration policies aimed at upholding the rule of law.

Speaking to the Guardian, Mayes said that any attempts to send Dreamers, beneficiaries of the Obama-era DACA program, back to their home countries would be crossing a “red line” and that she would not tolerate the incoming Trump Administration’s plans to deport them. She threatened to do everything in her power to fight so-called family separation at the southern border legally or what she likes to call the construction of “deportation camps.”

“Not on our soil,” Mayes said, arguing that the Dreamers, or illegal aliens, are “part of the very fabric of our state and we will protect them.”

Supporters of DACA— a controversial Obama-era program that grants temporary legal status and work permits to individuals brought to the U.S. illegally as children argue that it provides opportunities for young people who grew up in the U.S. to contribute to society. However, critics see it as an overreach of executive power that undermines immigration laws and incentivizes illegal immigration. Conservatives often stress that while compassion is essential, DACA bypasses Congress, creating a patchwork solution instead of addressing broader immigration reform or securing the southern border.

“I think the Supreme Court will ultimately see the merits of protecting them,” Mayes said of the program. “We want to give the courts the opportunity to make the right decision here, and we’ll be making very strong arguments on that proposition.”

President-elect Donald Trump opposed DACA during his first term, but the Supreme Court stopped it in DHS v. University of California.

Pro-Trump lawyer Mike Davis [1]accused Mayes of obstructing Trump’s immigration plans and “plotting to overturn the will of American voters.” He threatened to send her to prison and “make political lives Hell” if she refused to comply with Trump’s mandate.

1.4.28 Kevin O’Leary: Half of Canadians Agree With Trump’s Proposal to Join the United States (2024-12-29 00:29)

Canadian businessman and “Shark Tank” investor Kevin O’Leary, 70, said in an interview this week that half of Canadians support President-elect Donald Trump’s idea for Canada to become part of the United States.

Additionally, O’Leary proposed that the United States and Canada eliminate their border and form a united front against China and Russia.

This came after weeks of Trump stating that Canada should become America’s 51st state, including on Christmas Day in a post on Truth Social.

In the post, Trump wished “Merry Christmas” to “Governor Justin Trudeau of Canada, whose Citizens’ Taxes are far too high, but if Canada was to become our 51st State, their Taxes would be cut by more than 60 %, their businesses would immediately double in size, and they would be militarily protected like no other Country anywhere in the World.”

<https://truthsocial.com/@realDonaldTrump/113715171941661598/embed>

“There’s 41 million Canadians, basically the population of California, sitting on the world’s largest amounts of all resources, including the most important, energy and water. Canadians over the holidays the last two days have been talking about this. They want to hear more,” O’Leary said in an interview with Fox Business.

“And so there’s obviously a lot of issues and more details, but what this could be is the beginning of an economic union. Think about the power of combining the two economies, erasing the border between Canada and the United States and putting all that resource up to the northern borders where China and Russia are knocking on the door,” he added.

“So secure that, give a common currency, figure out taxes across the board, get everything trading both ways, create a new, almost EU-like passport. I like this idea and at least half of Canadians are interested. The problem is the government’s collapsing in Canada right now,” he continued.

“Nobody wants [Canadian Prime Minister Justin] Trudeau to negotiate this deal. I don’t want him doing it for me. So I’m going to go to Mar-a-Lago. I’ll start the narrative. The 41 million Canadians, I think most of them would trust me on this deal,” he concluded.

As Townhall [4]covered, Trump previously said that adding Canada to the U.S. would be a “great idea.”

“No one can answer why we subsidize Canada to the tune of over $100,000,000 a year? Makes no sense! Many Canadians want Canada to become the 51st State. They would save massively on taxes and military protection. I think it is a great idea. 51st State!!!” Trump wrote.

<https://truthsocial.com/@realDonaldTrump/113672861551554010/embed>

Before this, he wrote: “It was a pleasure to have dinner the other night with Governor Justin Trudeau of the Great State of Canada. I look forward to seeing the Governor again soon so that we may continue our in depth talks on Tariffs and Trade, the results of which will be truly spectacular for all!”

<https://truthsocial.com/@realDonaldTrump/113626786987358864/embed>

This remark came shortly after reports broke that Trump told Trudeau that if he has an issue with the tariffs that he plans to impose, Canada could [5]join the United States.

2.1.2 The National Nightmare Is Ending (2025-01-03 23:54)

Après Biden, “L’audace, l’audace, encore l’audace, toujours l’audace!”

To paraphrase mixed French 18th-century memorable quotations: After Biden, follows not the deluge, but now daring, and still more daring, and always more daring.

Why?

A combination of two self-evident truths.

[1]Joe Biden’s inept administration proved an ungodly disaster, not just for America but for the West as well, who looked abroad for a stronger America but found it weaker.

And second, Trump Invictus is now liberated—“In the fell clutch of circumstance /I have not winced nor cried aloud, /Under the bludgeonings of chance /My head is bloody, but unbowed.”

He is without worry over another election, or a discredited and defanged media (“so doves do peck the falcon’s piercing talons”), much less a third [2]Nancy Pelosi-contrived impeachment.

Instead, he stalks indomitable, after failed de-balloting capers, failed lawfare vendettas, and failed assassination attempts. To quote Shakespeare of his recent visit to Notre Dame and the once hostile Euro crowd who now mobbed him, “He doth bestride the narrow world /Like a Colossus, and we petty men /Walk under his huge legs and peep about /To find ourselves dishonorable graves.”

In sum, our weakest president is to be followed by our most audacious.

Biden's bumbling arrogance nearly destroyed the [3]American military in Kabul. It ruined Western deterrence. It showered the [4]creepy Taliban with a multibillion-dollar windfall arsenal.

His lies, his incompetence, and, yes, his narcissism demoralized Americans and our allies, but at least ensured he would never reach 50 % approval again.

What immediately followed from the Kabul nightmare was as bad or indeed worse: two theater-wide wars in Ukraine and the Middle East, appeasement of Iran, hammering of Israel, a nonexistent [5]U.S. border, 12 million illegal aliens, the [6]hyperinflation of staples, the weaponization of the executive branch, third-world lawfare, looting and shoplifting legitimized, spiking crime contextualized, and printing trillions of debased dollars normalized.

Biden sought to turn the once-preeminent U.S. military into a cruel cultural woke joke.

The trainwreck of the last four years was force-multiplied by Biden's own feebleness, masked by the most scandalous media-politico conspiracy of suppression of it in U.S. history.

But now there is a giddy sense that restoration and normalization are not just possible but on the horizon.

The truth now is set free, and it smothers the old lying denials about the [7]origins of COVID, about the truth of diversity/equity/inclusion, about the naked greed of the Biden family syndicate, about the dementia of Joe, about the chauvinism of three sexes, and about the joy and momentum of the fracking, gun-toting, McDonald's veteran and border hawk [8]Kamala Harris.

No one fears or listens to the now-defenestrated frauds and tiring dissimulators: the Bidens, a Fauci, Mayorkas, Garland, Milley, Austin, Jean-Pierre, Comey, Brennan, Clapper, or McCabe—and their old lies that Hunter is brilliant, Biden is fit as a field, no gain-in-function viruses, a bat caused COVID, the border is secure, Chinese army generals are more trustworthy than Trump, the laptop was Russian, Trump is a Putin puppet, and always their nauseating “I can't recall,” “I don't remember,” “I have no recollection,” and “I am not at liberty to say.”

Our allies are feeling more confident, our enemies scared.

The idea of an impending deterrent and reliable Trump administration has terrified Iran and helped collapse Syria. Israelis buoyant. Not so Hezbollah, Hamas, and the Houthis.

In anticipation, the dollar reigns, the stock market stays strong.

Even Trump's traditional enemies, whether on Wall Street, Silicon Valley, or in corporate board rooms are whispering that they secretly are delighted with their old nemesis's dream of more and cheaper energy, less government regulation and taxation, and confidence again that everything is now possible when a government says an exhilarant yes to dreams rather than a crabby no to them.

Suddenly the woke bullies are on the run. The porous border really can be closed; illegal alien gangs and criminals will be sent packing.

The Left now invokes no Logan Act. They are instead relieved that the president-elect is now the virtual president—and their guy is gone.

Biden yelps now that his sins were not doubling down on them and sinning even more when he had the chance.

In other words, the recently impossible is not just possible again, but likely!

Each of us, at least for this brief window of opportunity, again feels, "I am the master of my fate, I am the captain of my soul."

2.1.3 Germany's New Morgenthau Plan (2025-01-03 23:57)

Less than a year before the end of World War II, then-U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau drew up a nightmarish plan to punish postwar Germany.

After the serial 1870-1871 Franco-Prussian War, World War I, and World War II—along with the failed Versailles peace treaty of 1919—the Allies in World War II wanted to ensure there would never again be an aggressive Germany powerful enough to invade its neighbors.

When the so-called Morgenthau Plan was leaked to the press in September 1944, at first it was widely praised. After all, it would supposedly render Germany incapable of ever starting another world war in Europe.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [1]Donate now

Morgenthau certainly envisioned a Carthaginian peace, designed to ensure a permanently deindustrialized, unarmed, and pastoral Germany.

Postwar Germany would have resembled something akin to the ancient, pre-civilized frontier that the first-century AD historian Tacitus wrote about in his Germania.

The plan would have ensured that within six months of Germany's surrender, all of its industrial plants and equipment were to be dismantled.

The Ruhr, the renowned center of European industrial strength, was to be permanently neutered, starved of its energy, raw materials, and infrastructure.

After the war, the plan demanded virtual complete disarmament of Germany. Its once-feared armed forces were to be rendered nonexistent.

There were also promised massive reductions in Germany's borders. Various countries, such as the Soviet Union, Poland, and France, were to be given large slices of the old Third Reich.

Future German security would hinge only on the power and goodwill of the victorious United States and its allies.

When the dying Nazi Party got wind of the plan, Adolf Hitler's propaganda minister Joseph Goebbels had a field day. He screamed to Germans that they were all doomed to oblivion if they lost the war, even growing opponents of the Nazi Party.

Even many Americans were aghast at the plan.

Gen. George Marshall, the Army chief of staff, warned that its mere mention had galvanized German troops to fight to the end, increasing American casualties as they closed in on the German homeland.

Ex-President Herbert Hoover blasted the plan as inhumane. He feared mass starvation of the German people if they were reduced to a premodern, rural peasantry.

But once the victorious allies occupied a devastated Germany, witnessed its moonscape ruined by massive bombing and house-to-house fighting, and discovered that their "ally" Russia's Josef Stalin was ruthless and hellbent on turning all of Europe communist, the Harry Truman administration backed off the plan.

There is a tragic footnote to the aborted horrors of the Morgenthau Plan. Currently, Germany is doing to itself almost everything Morgenthau once dreamed of.

Its green delusions have shut down far too many of its nuclear, coal, and gas electrical generation plants.

Erratic solar and wind "sustainable energy" means that power costs are four times higher than on average in the United States.

Once-dominant European giants Volkswagen, BMW, and Mercedes are now bleeding customers and profits. Their own government's green and electric vehicle mandates ensure they will become globally uncompetitive.

The German economy actually shrank in 2023. And the diminished Ruhr can no longer save the German economy from its own utopian politicians.

The German military is all but disarmed and short thousands of recruits.

German industries do not produce enough ammunition, tanks, ships, and aircraft to equip even its diminished army, navy, and air force.

Just a few hundred miles from Germany in Ukraine, more than a million Ukrainians and Russians are dead, wounded, or missing—in the costliest European battle since the horrors of Stalingrad.

Yet the once postwar German dynamo nation now lacks the manpower, munitions, and money to aid Ukraine in any meaningful way against an ascendant Russian invader.

More than 1 million immigrants have entered the country illegally, the vast majority of them from the Middle East. Many of them are hostile to European values and culture, as recent terrorist killings have shown. One-fifth of the population was not born in Germany.

The shrinking German people are growing angry, divided, and depressed. Their 1.4 % fertility rate is one of the lowest in the Western world.

A tragic irony now abounds.

After World War II, the Truman administration rejected the notion of a pastoral, deindustrialized, and insecure Germany as a cruel prescription for poverty, hunger, and depopulation.

But now the German people themselves voted for their own updated version of Morgenthau's plan—as they willingly reduced factory hours, curtailed power and fuel supplies, and struggled with millions of illegal aliens and porous borders.

Germans accept that they have no military to speak of that could protect their insecure borders—without a United States-led NATO.

Eighty years ago, Germany's former conquerors rejected wrecking the defeated nation as too harsh. But now Germany is willfully pastoralizing, disarming, deindustrializing—and destroying—itsself.

2.1.4 Law Professor Nails Why Judge Merchan Is Sentencing Trump on January 10 (2025-01-04 19:46)

President-elect Donald J. Trump will be sentenced on January 10, but there will be no jail time, not that was ever a concern. The laws and statutes got so contorted that even CNN's Elie Honig, the network's chief legal analyst and former assistant US attorney, couldn't defend it, aptly calling it a total disaster of a case. In essence, Trump only got convicted because Manhattan District Attorney Alvin Bragg and his team perverted the rule of law.

CNN Senior Legal Analyst Describes How The Trump Conviction Was A Political Hit Job

1. "The judge donated money... in plain violation of a rule prohibiting New York judges from making political donations—to a pro-Biden, anti-Trump political operation."

2. Alvin Bragg... [1]<https://t.co/PZV5x3EcaB> [2]pic.twitter.com/OMdEEbrCMX—KanekoaTheGreat (@KanekoaTheGreat) [3]January 3, 2025

Law professor Jonathan Turley nailed why Judge Juan Merchan wants to get this wrapped on January 10. It's to give the liberal media the talking point they've salivated over for months: Trump is a convicted felon, and now he's being sworn in as one on Inauguration Day:

...The sentence will finalize the case and allow for an appeal. However, it would also label the President-elect a convicted felon just before he is sworn into office. It is the final cathartic act for lawfare warriors...— Jonathan Turley (@JonathanTurley)

[4]January 3, 2025

...we will also finally be able to see an appeal of his case. While there are low expectations for the New York court system, the sentencing will allow the full array of alleged errors by Merchan to be placed before appellate judges.— Jonathan Turley (@JonathanTurley) [5]January 3, 2025

It's a consolation prize for the anti-Trump lawyers who tried repeatedly and failed to nail Mr. Trump. Bragg's team even tried to postpone sentencing until 2029, which was laughably transparent. That was never going to happen. Then again, Turley added that when an appeal is filed, which is likely, all of Merchan's reported misdeeds will be laid bare. Trump's communication team didn't hold back, with Steven Cheung, incoming White House communications director, taking a blowtorch to the judge:

Today's order by the deeply conflicted, Acting Justice Merchan in the Manhattan DA Witch Hunt is a direct violation of the Supreme Court's Immunity decision and other longstanding jurisprudence. This lawless case should have never been brought and the Constitution demands that it be immediately dismissed. President Trump must be allowed to continue the Presidential Transition process and to execute the vital duties of the presidency, unobstructed by the remains of this or any remnants of the Witch Hunts. There should be no sentencing, and President Trump will continue fighting against these hoaxes until they are all dead.

The best part is that no one cares that he's a convicted felon. No one. He won. Kamala lost, and the Democrats lost. Deal with it.

We do not care because the actual crook is leaving, half brain-dead, but he's leaving.

2.1.5 One Dem Had a Stupid and Grossly Transparent Meltdown After the House Speakership Vote (2025-01-04 19:48)

Rep. Mike Johnson (R-LA) was elected Speaker of the House, though there was a moment where it looked like it could go multiple rounds, feeding the narrative of GOP disunity. Alas, that didn't happen. The chaos over Kevin McCarthy was not repeated, as Johnson was elected on the first ballot. With the theatrics cut short, the House can start formal business, starting with the certification of the 2024 results on January 6.

The GOP Civil War is in full swing.

And it's only Day 1.— Hakeem Jeffries (@RepJeffries) [1]January 3, 2025

Last we checked, you didn't win either.— ForAmerica (@ForAmerica) [2]January 3, 2025

Del. Stacey Plaskett of the Virgin Islands wouldn't remain silent, voicing outrage over her inability to vote in this contest before going on about America's colonies problem. Shut up, lady. You know the rules. The clerk reread them, so take a sit. No one cares. Also, last time I checked, I'm pretty sure the American territories don't want statehood (via [3]Fox News):

Democrat Delegate Stacey Plaskett has a meltdown and has to have the rules explained to her. [4]pic.twitter.com/mXx0KrraHd— Libs of TikTok (@libsoftiktok) [5]January 3, 2025

lol...Democrats really thought they could elect the Speaker they wanted by having non-voting delegates from territories participate. [6]<https://t.co/AoIBwAEuxM>— Bonchie (@bonchieredstate) [7]January 3, 2025

U.S. Virgin Islands Delegate Stacey Plaskett protested the nonvoting status of the Virgin Islands and other U.S. territories Friday— sparking mixed reactions after she accused the U.S. in House floor remarks of having a "colonies problem."

The exchange occurred after Plaskett, a Democrat, stood after the first roll call vote to note what she said was a parliamentary inquiry.

Plaskett then asked the House clerk why she and other delegates from the Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the District of Columbia were not asked to participate in the House speaker vote.

Combined, she noted that the delegates excluded represent some four million Americans and what she said was "the largest per capita of veterans in this country."

Speaking over Republican cries of "order!" that could be heard in the background, the House clerk then explained to Plaskett that delegates-elect and the resident commissioner-elect are not qualified to vote in the House speaker election.

"Representatives-elect are the only individuals qualified to vote in the election of a speaker, as provided in Section 36 of the House Rules and Manual," the clerk said.

2.1.6 Bowl's Moment of Silence and National Anthem (2025-01-04 19:50)

All that can be said about this move during the Allstate Sugar Bowl is that ESPN got caught doing ESPN things. The college football playoff game between the Notre Dame Fighting Irish and the Georgia Bulldogs was held in New Orleans, postponed after 14 people were killed in an ISIS-inspired terror attack committed by Shamsud-Din Jabbar, 42, a Texas native, who used a Ford truck to run over pedestrians on a crowded Bourbon Street before opening fire on other bystanders. Police killed him.

The game was supposed to be held on New Year's Day but postponed until Thursday afternoon. There was a moment of silence held for the victims of this tragedy, along with the national anthem, but ESPN opted not to broadcast (via [1]NY Post):

This was a travesty that [2]@espn skipped one of the most moving and nationally significant moments of the [3]@SugarBowlNola. The anthem and moment of silence at the Dome was beautiful. [4]<https://t.co/QYxQXjCRym> [5]pic.twitter.com/vgoriBxiLW— Raymond Arroyo (@RaymondArroyo) [6]January 3, 2025

Wow [7]@espn didn't air the national anthem or the moment of silence for the New Orleans terror attack victims per [8]@burackbobby_ and they continue to label the terror attack a "truck attack" on screen. [9]<https://t.co/QWmOGZbKm3>— Clay Travis (@ClayTravis) [10]January 3, 2025

It was my distinct honor to have coached in 3 Sugar Bowls during my coaching career. American sports, and especially college football, have always been a patriotic tradition that brings ALL AMERICANS together.

Unfortunately, ESPN (who is owned by Disney) gave in to the woke...— Coach Tommy Tuberville (@SenTuberville) [11]January 3, 2025

All eyes were on ESPN on Thursday as the Sugar Bowl took place a little more than 24 hours after an ISIS-inspired terrorist created mayhem on Bourbon Street in New Orleans that left 14 people dead and injured dozens more.

But noticeably absent from the pregame broadcast on the main network was the national anthem and the moment of silence held in honor of the tragedy that occurred about 1 mile away from the Caesars Superdome where Notre Dame and Georgia squared off.

The exclusion of both moments from the ESPN telecast angered some football fans and led to criticism of the network on social media.

“SportsCenter,” which had served as the pregame show due to the unusual circumstances, had wrapped on an interview with Tim Tebow and went to a commercial break before the moment of silence and returned in the middle of the anthem, “making it awkward to cut it” at that moment, the source explained.

ESPN did open its broadcast of the Sugar Bowl with a pre-recorded message from President Joe Biden, and play-by-play broadcaster Sean McDonough spoke about the tragedy in his open while a montage of fans, police and the city of New Orleans played on the screen.

“SEC Nation,” which airs on the ESPN-owned SEC Network, was broadcast live from the Superdome and aired the moment of silence and national anthem in their entirety.

Still, not airing the tributes on ESPN following the tragedy stirred a lot of emotions for fans online.

Another unforced error by the network.

Here's the SEC Network's broadcast of the moment:

The pregame ceremony at the Sugar Bowl was beautiful.
Roman – a New Orleans icon – and I were quite moved. The moment of silence for those lost and hurting. The National Anthem. The cheers for our nation.
You pray for the right words to convey the emotion.

2.1.7 The West Does Not Even Know That It Is Committing Suicide (2025-01-04 19:52)

Certain trends threaten the very existence of Western nation states that we have taken for granted for the past several hundred years.

A friend once told me a story that occurred just prior to the 1967 Six Day War. Israel took a group of officers and tasked them with determining what Israel needs to do to win the upcoming war with Egypt, Syria and other Arab states. Egypt's Nasser had been on the warpath and the only question was when hostilities would begin. The officers determined that the most important task for Israel was to wipe out Egypt's air force. Without air cover, all of the invading armies would be open to attack. Israel determined the optimal moment to attack and preemptively wiped out Egypt's Russian-supplied air force. The outcome was that after six days, Israel had added the Sinai peninsula, the West Bank, and the Golan Heights.

If the U.S. were to take a bunch of geniuses and similarly lock them in a room and ask what the West needs to do to remain viable, it would probably make some very important observations and suggestions. Two might include the following:

The first would be to get birth rates up. One of the major drivers for bringing in large numbers of illegal aliens and causing social instability, increased crime and lower wages is because the locals are not producing enough kids. All Western countries other than Israel are well under the accepted 2.1 children per woman for the population size to remain as is. In the U.S., all of the growth in population is due to uncontrolled immigration. More people entered the U.S. via the southern border than were born in U.S. hospitals last year. Let that sink in. Governments have very few real buttons to push to make the people bring more babies into the world. Sure, they can offer tax breaks and subsidize education and other expenses. But the prospect of not sleeping for a few years and changing one's life patterns may simply outweigh any potential handouts. Increased religiosity tends to lead to more children. Ultraorthodox Bnei Brak is one of the poorest cities in Israel and it also is home to the largest average family size in the country. The final way to get the people to make more children is to create an economic and security environment where people feel comfortable bringing more children into the world. The parents' income can cover expenses and war and famine seem distant. The Baby Boom period included incredible post-war confidence.

Another recommendation is dealing with Islam. I remember after 9/11, there were discussions as to whether American Muslims themselves could police their brethren to prevent "radicalization" and future attacks. Based on continuing attacks by Islamic terrorists and the never-ending anti-Israel and anti-Western protests that often turn violent, the answer is no. Like most religions, Islam would appear not to be monolithic. I can attest that when we traveled to Dubai last year, we were treated with respect and kindness. Israelis are not welcome in many Muslim countries, and even the ones that do have relations with Israel are often quite unfriendly. Egypt and Jordan have never been major vacation destinations for Israelis, except for southern Sinai which has very good scuba diving. Israelis used to flock to Turkey; today, there are no flights between the countries, and their leader is Hamas' biggest cheerleader. What will be the future of Islam and the West?

Since Islamic institutions cannot regulate their members to prevent harm to other Americans or Westerners, then the government will have to step up its game to keep its citizenry safe:

1. Eject anyone from a Muslim country who in any way violates his or her visa—from jaywalking on up.

2 Eject anyone from a Muslim country who participates in protests demanding Sharia replace the local laws and customs. Foreigners do not benefit from Constitutional protections on freedom of speech. Anyone found to support “intifada revolution” or the like should be given an expedited one-way ticket back home.

3. Local Muslim populations need to be monitored and infiltrated by law enforcement. While the U.S. has been a bastion of freedom of religion, it has never faced a religion that has expressly stated its desire to destroy the democratic nature of the Republic. No branch of Christianity or Judaism has as a plank demanding the takeover of the U.S. government and converting it into a religious theocracy run solely according to its religious tenets. Tough times require tough measures. My grandparents in New York, as alien residents, had to have their papers on them at all times. On the Sabbath, when one is generally prohibited from carrying things outdoors, my late grandfather put his documents in the band of his fedora in the event that he was stopped by a cop.

The same suggestions for the U.S. would normally apply to Europe. But Europe is lost. It’s like those few seconds when we saw the second plane approaching the World Trade Center tower. The impact had not happened yet, but everyone knew what was about to happen. Europe could eject its problematic Islamists and encourage the pursuit of traditional values. But as we see in England, the Labor government will not even allow for an investigation into the recruiting and sexual abuse of hundreds of thousands of white British girls at the hands of Pakistani men. Europe does not have the moral fortitude or belief in its own past and institutions to fight for its future. Le Pen, Reform and AfD will all come to power, but through a combination of too little/too late and EU bureaucratic hurdles, the countries will not be able to right the ship in time. I am not a prophet and I hope that I am wrong. But I think that Europe is too far gone. Look at the violence and hatred in Germany against the locals on New Year’s Eve. It will only get worse as the countries don’t have the internal fortitude to throw out trouble makers and use deadly force to end the rioting. The “right-wing” Meloni in Italy has not stopped the boats or ejected illegal aliens from her country.

The U.S. can still change course. It will have to remove Muslims who wish to make the U.S. a Sharia state, and it will have to monitor Muslim citizens and institutions. There is no alternative. It does not sound very American to have the FBI putting listening devices in American mosques or educational institutions. But burying 3,000 citizens killed by Islamic terrorists does not sound very American either. It’s either one or the other.

Islamic supremacism will not change. Just last week, Recep Erdogan said that Jerusalem still belongs to Turkey because it was part of the Ottoman Empire so many years ago. As long as there are Islamic supremacists, then there will be violence to gain control of the West. Either we can fight it or we had better start learning the Koran.

2.1.8 No dates/friends on Bumble (2025-01-06 23:14)

I tried the 7 day subscription on bumble. All the people left me after the invalid photo, but it was valid 25 seconds later after i raised my hand by my face. It's like okcupid. I talked to these women in class in 2023. These women were making music on a digital audio workstation on their phone during lunch. I already knew what LMMS was so i shared LMMS music. One women called Ally liked My neighbor tororo said she was going to be my lifetime Snapchat friend in the two months in class, but that ended up untrue. Never saw Ally again. I liked or disliked about 100 women on dating and 70 men on friends tab. They all left me. It cost me $31. Sometimes I liked liberal women, conservative women, single moms, and nothing. I did this in 2011 with Plenty of Fish, but i was messaging too many women. I'll probably never have a girlfriend, and women were not interested in me for 40 years.

2.1.9 Selective Force, Strategic Restraint: Unpacking Trump's Jacksonian Foreign Policy (2025-01-09 00:07)

Have you noticed recently that [1]Donald Trump has both issued threats to our existential enemies abroad and that he's called for peace as well?

In other words, he's told Hamas: "You better let the hostages go by the time that I'm president or else."

And yet he's also said, at the same time, we don't want these 2,000 Americans in [2]Syria. It's a mess. The country's destroyed. Get them out before they get killed.

This brings up kind of a dichotomy that's been discussed: Is the [Make America Great Again] agenda and Donald Trump in particular isolationist? That's what the accusation is, that under no circumstances will we slay dragons abroad, looking for them. Or is he a neoconservative, and he wants to intervene everywhere. And I think the answer, of course, is neither.

It was Walter Russell Mead, a columnist for The Wall Street Journal, who coined—he didn't coin it—he rebooted the word "Jacksonian" in reference to Andrew Jackson, the hero of the battle of New Orleans, a [two-term] American president. And what that really means is that America will be second to no one, preeminent military abroad. We will be no better friend to our allies and no worse enemy to our enemies.

More importantly, we don't have to be perfect to be good abroad. We just act as Americans, and if we're better than the alternative, that's fine.

How does this boil down, though, to actual policy. After all, Donald Trump at one point was reported to have told [Russian President] [3]Vladimir Putin, "Don't go into [4]Ukraine or I'm going to look at the Kremlin"—meaning, he might even attack the Kremlin. And now he's saying, "This is one of our endless wars and we want to get out of it."

So how do you square that circle of restoring deterrence lost during the [5]Biden administration and yet not getting bogged down in nation-building and ground wars in the Middle East? And I think the answer is partly to be found in his first term.

Remember what he did? During the Cold War of some 75 years, we didn't really ever kill Russian soldiers. We may have, as pilots, as Russian pilots were flying in North Korea or Vietnam, but not knowingly and deliberately. Yet, when the Wagner group, some 500 soldiers strong, swarmed an American installation in Syria, they were devastated by U.S. airpower.

He did kill [Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi], the creator of ISIS. He killed Qassem Soleimani—the greatest Iranian terrorist, Gen. Soleimani—in the Middle East that was the architect of supplying weapons to Hezbollah, Hamas, and the Houthis.

And he also put a maximum pressure policy against Iran. But, but, he did not get in a war, even when he threatened North Korea.

So, what is the MAGA approach to foreign policy? It's Jacksonianism. He's a Jacksonian ... that is, he builds up the military to ensure that it can deter anybody, but he does it not to use it, but to not use it.

Unfortunately, he's inherited a world that has lost U.S. deterrence after the Kabul [Afghanistan] fiasco, the greatest military humiliation ... in American history, but surely in the last 50 years since we had helicopters flying off the [U.S.] Embassy in Saigon in 1975.

Then we had the Middle East fiasco, where some days we supported Israel; some days we didn't. Some days we said that Hamas, we can negotiate, some days we didn't, we wanted to get back in the Iran deal. It was a complete mess, complete mess.

So, when Donald Trump takes office on Jan. 20, he is going to have to restore deterrence to make a calmer world. But he can't get in an endless bogged-down war. So, he has to be very careful, because that is one of the keystone premises of the Make America Great Again movement.

We do not want another Afghanistan, two decades. We do not want 10 years in Iraq. We do not want to create chaos in Libya. We don't want to be in the tribal infighting in Syria. But we want the world at peace. And so, I think, what we should look for is that, at particular places, at particular times, when the use of force favors the United States; that is, without getting in house-to-house fighting or terrorism, tit for tat, in the streets of Baghdad ... type of endless engagements, we will use overwhelming force to send a signal that we can destroy you without having to fight your type of war on your ground.

And I don't think you'll have to do very much of it to restore U.S. calm and deterrence. And it will not be neoconservative interventionism, and it won't be isolationism. It will be Donald Trump-MAGA Jacksonianism. Thank you.

2.1.10 L.A. Water Chief Knew Fire Hydrants Were Broken, Yet Earns Nearly $800K Annually (2025-01-12 22:25)

In yet another example of mismanagement and government waste, the head of Los Angeles' water department, who was reportedly aware that crucial fire hydrants were out of service, is pulling in a staggering nearly $800,000 annually. While L.A. residents face increasing dangers from the wildfires ravaging the city— with many who have already lost their homes and 12 dead— the city's water chief appears more focused on lining his pockets than ensuring the safety of the public. Critics argue that this glaring oversight is emblematic of local government's broader incompetence. Top officials continue to earn hefty salaries while failing to address basic public safety issues.

According to a new report, Los Angeles Department of Water and Power (LADWP) CEO Janisse Quiñone was fully aware that the Santa Ynez Reservoir was offline and fire hydrants were not operating. However, despite the city stretching its budget to "attract private-sector talent," it appointed Janisse Quiñones as CEO of the Department of Water and Power (LADWP) in May, offering her a $750,000 salary—nearly double what her predecessor earned.

The Los Angeles Fire Department (LAFD) blames Quiñones for leaving fire hydrants empty and disconnecting the Santa Ynez Reservoir in the Pacific Palisades for several months.

According to the Daily Mail, this is [1]not the first time Quiñones has been involved in a scandal.

Quiñones past employer is also linked to fire scandals. She was previously a top executive at electricity company PG &E, which went bankrupt over liability for several massive wildfires in California. She served as senior vice president at Pacific Gas & Electric (PG &E) from 2021 to 2023. The utility company's power lines sparked the second-largest wildfire in California history, Dixie, in 2021. Its involvement in the 2018 Camp Fire cost PG &E a $13.5 billion legal settlement.

The firm's liability for allegedly causing fires was estimated at $30 billion when it filed for bankruptcy in 2018. It exited bankruptcy in 2020.

Sources told DailyMail.com that since her hiring at LADWP, Quiñones oversaw the shutdown and emptying of a reservoir in the Pacific Palisades during brushfire season. The shutdown meant firefighters battling the current Palisades Fire ran out of water faster, experts say.

2.1.11 The Bible and the Schools (2025-01-12 22:26)

Irony of ironies. There was an attempt to ban the Bible from school libraries in a conservative state because of a law against risqué content in school books.

The Mirror out of the UK [1]reports: "A Texas school district has reportedly been forced to remove copies of the Bible after a new state law banned books that were 'sexually explicit.' It was revealed in an email from Canyon Independent School District Superintendent Darryl Flusche, that the holy book had been deemed unsuitable due to 'sexually explicit material.'"

It clearly appears that school officials are trying to play "gotcha" with opponents of sexually explicit schoolbooks. The Mirror added, "Several parents were reportedly furious with the news. During a school board meeting earlier [in December 2024], Canyon ISD parent Regina Kiehne told school officials it 'seems absurd to me that the Good Book was thrown out with the bad books.'"

The [2]blowback was so strong, school officials retreated from their guileful position in the face of widespread opposition.

I'm glad to hear that some of the school districts in Texas allow the Bible on school property at all. But it's a shame that ever since the Supreme Court [3]ruled in the Abington v. Schempp case of 1963, many school districts have banned the Good Book altogether from the schools (while at the same time often allowing all manner of LGBTQ pornography).

In Schempp, the court declared as unconstitutional use of the Bible for devotional purposes in the classroom. But they added that the Bible has its place in a well-rounded education.[4]

[5]Said the majority of the justices: "It certainly may be said that the Bible is worthy of study for its literary and historic qualities. Nothing we have said here indicates that such study of the Bible or of religion, when presented objectively as part of a secular program of education, may not be effected consistently with the First Amendment."

For decades, many public school systems have systematically gone way beyond what the Supreme Court decided. Personally I think many of those Supreme Court decisions, such as Schempp, were wrongly decided. They grew out of a bias in favor of secularism and opposed to religion. Frankly, this country was founded by Christians for religious freedom, which they generously offered to other groups.

The irony of the Bible being controversial in the schools is that this is the book that helped create the educational system in America.

When you trace back education in our country, you see the Bible was the chief motivating factor. It was so that people could read the Bible for themselves that schools were started in the first place.

The first law regarding education in America is nicknamed "the Old Deluder Satan Act." The Puritans, the founders of Boston, wanted their children to learn how to read so they could read the Scriptures for themselves.

The act explicitly states that this was a counter-measure against the devil, who wants people to remain ignorant of the Word of God.

This 1647 Act [6]states: "It being one chief project of that old deluder, Satan, to keep men from the knowledge of the Scriptures...and that Learning may not be buried in the graves of our fore-fathers in Church and Commonwealth, the Lord assisting our endeavors: it is therefore ordered... [that every township] shall then forthwith appoint one within their town to teach all such children as shall resort to him to write and read."

The children even learned their ABCs with Bible lessons. The widely used New England Primer [7]taught: “A-In Adam’s fall, we sinned all. B-thy life to mend, the Bible tend. C-Christ crucified, for sinners died.”

The original colleges and universities were started to train ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Harvard’s original [8]motto (in Latin) was “Truth for Christ and the Church.” The first president of Princeton, Rev, Jonathan Dickinson, [9]said, “Cursed be all learning contrary to the cross of Christ.” Except for Cornell (founded 200 years after Harvard), all of the Ivy League schools were explicitly Christian.

And on it goes.

Founding father and Declaration of Independence signer Dr. Benjamin Rush [10]declared, “The only foundation for a useful education in a republic is to be laid in RELIGION....Without this, there can be no virtue, and without virtue there can be no liberty, and liberty is the object and life of all republican governments. . . . the religion I mean to recommend in this place is the religion of JESUS CHRIST.” [emphasis his]

Dr. Rush also [11]warned of the consequences when schools ignore teaching the Bible: “I lament that we waste so much time and money in punishing crimes and take so little pains to prevent them.”We need more Bible in the schools, including the public schools, not less.

2.1.12 Selective Force, Strategic Restraint: Unpacking Trump's Jacksonian Foreign Policy (2025-01-12 22:27)

Have you noticed recently that [1]Donald Trump has both issued threats to our existential enemies abroad and that he's called for peace as well?

In other words, he's told Hamas: "You better let the hostages go by the time that I'm president or else."

And yet he's also said, at the same time, we don't want these 2,000 Americans in [2]Syria. It's a mess. The country's destroyed. Get them out before they get killed.

This brings up kind of a dichotomy that's been discussed: Is the [Make America Great Again] agenda and Donald Trump in particular isolationist? That's what the accusation is, that under no circumstances will we slay dragons abroad, looking for them. Or is he a neoconservative, and he wants to intervene everywhere. And I think the answer, of course, is neither.

It was Walter Russell Mead, a columnist for The Wall Street Journal, who coined—he didn't coin it—he rebooted the word "Jacksonian" in reference to Andrew Jackson, the hero of the battle of New Orleans, a [two-term] American president. And what that really means is that America will be second to no one, preeminent military abroad. We will be no better friend to our allies and no worse enemy to our enemies.

More importantly, we don't have to be perfect to be good abroad. We just act as Americans, and if we're better than the alternative, that's fine.

How does this boil down, though, to actual policy. After all, Donald Trump at one point was reported to have told [Russian President] [3]Vladimir Putin, "Don't go into [4]Ukraine or I'm going to look at the Kremlin"—meaning, he might even attack the Kremlin. And now he's saying, "This is one of our endless wars and we want to get out of it."

So how do you square that circle of restoring deterrence lost during the [5]Biden administration and yet not getting bogged down in nation-building and ground wars in the Middle East? And I think the answer is partly to be found in his first term.

Remember what he did? During the Cold War of some 75 years, we didn't really ever kill Russian soldiers. We may have, as pilots, as Russian pilots were flying in North Korea or Vietnam, but not knowingly and deliberately. Yet, when the Wagner group, some 500 soldiers strong, swarmed an American installation in Syria, they were devastated by U.S. airpower.

He did kill [Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi], the creator of ISIS. He killed Qassem Soleimani—the greatest Iranian terrorist, Gen. Soleimani—in the Middle East that was the architect of supplying weapons to Hezbollah, Hamas, and the Houthis.

And he also put a maximum pressure policy against Iran. But, but, he did not get in a war, even when he threatened North Korea.

So, what is the MAGA approach to foreign policy? It's Jacksonianism. He's a Jacksonian ... that is, he builds up the military to ensure that it can deter anybody, but he does it not to use it, but to not use it.

Unfortunately, he's inherited a world that has lost U.S. deterrence after the Kabul [Afghanistan] fiasco, the greatest military humiliation ... in American history, but surely in the last 50 years since we had helicopters flying off the [U.S.] Embassy in Saigon in 1975.

Then we had the Middle East fiasco, where some days we supported Israel; some days we didn't. Some days we said that Hamas, we can negotiate, some days we didn't, we wanted to get back in the Iran deal. It was a complete mess, complete mess.

So, when Donald Trump takes office on Jan. 20, he is going to have to restore deterrence to make a calmer world. But he can't get in an endless bogged-down war. So, he has to be very careful, because that is one of the keystone premises of the Make America Great Again movement.

We do not want another Afghanistan, two decades. We do not want 10 years in Iraq. We do not want to create chaos in Libya. We don't want to be in the tribal infighting in Syria. But we want the world at peace. And so, I think, what we should look for is that, at particular places, at particular times, when the use of force favors the United States; that is, without getting in house-to-house fighting or terrorism, tit for tat, in the streets of Baghdad ... type of endless engagements, we will use overwhelming force to send a signal that we can destroy you without having to fight your type of war on your ground.

And I don't think you'll have to do very much of it to restore U.S. calm and deterrence. And it will not be neoconservative interventionism, and it won't be isolationism. It will be Donald Trump-MAGA Jacksonianism. Thank you.

2.1.13 California Inferno Was ‘Preventable.’ Blame Malfeasance of Newsom, Bass for Catastrophe. (2025-01-12 22:29)

As I’m speaking on a Wednesday night, there have been 15,000 acres, 1,000 structures destroyed. Nobody knows how many people are killed or missing. And how do we characterize this? Everybody’s talking about the Santa Ana winds, climate change—I mean everybody, the people in power.

But it was preventable. And once it started, this fire, it could have been assuaged. You could have had it lessened, that the severity didn’t have to be as catastrophic. So, I would characterize it as a [1]DEI-[2]Green New Deal hydrogen bomb. It’s something out of “Dante’s Inferno.”

And what I mean by that is, it’s a systems breakdown, a civilizational collapse. When you look at the people in charge, [California Gov.] [3]Gavin Newsom flew in, to sort of do these performance-art stunts, but he has systematically ensured that water out of the Sacramento River and the watershed of Northern California would go out to the sea, rather than into the aqueduct, so Los Angeles didn’t have sufficient amounts of water.

He bragged not very long ago that he blew up four dams on the Klamath River. They provided 80,000 homes with clean hydroelectric power. They offered recreation, flood control, irrigation. He blew them up.

California’s fire management, whether we look at the Paradise Fire or the Aspen Fire near where I’m speaking, it destroyed 60 million trees. We have no timber industry in California. [Newsom’s] dismantled it.

We don't clean the forest. We don't let loggers come in and have a viable livelihood by harvesting trees. It's sort of considered natural to let these things burn or to at least create the conditions in which they will inevitably be burned.

It's almost as if we don't like humans. We worry about grubs and worms and birds and the ecosystem.

The second breakdown was the mayor, Karen Bass, was in [4]Africa. You tell me why the mayor of the third-largest city in the United States at fire season, when she had been warned and warned for days on end that the Santa Ana winds were up to 100 miles an hour in the evening, and there was a danger of fire, and she goes off to Africa for the inauguration of the president of Ghana.

With all due respect, Mayor, but who cares? You have an obligation to the 6 million people of greater Los Angeles. And then we have the fire chief. I don't really care that she's LGBTQ, I don't care [about] any of that. All I do care is her emphases. She's been bragging for the last two years that her goal was to make sure [the Fire Department] was diverse and inclusive.

That can be good if it's competent. But when you announce that 70 % of your hiring will not be meritocratic, but will be based on diversity, equity, inclusion, then you're not putting the interest of your constituents first.

There were not even enough, there wasn't enough water pressure in Pacific Palisades. Pacific Palisades is not where I live. It's one of the wealthiest, most exclusive neighborhoods in the United States. If they don't have water, then no one's going to get water, believe me.

There's not enough insurance. There were famous actors that didn't have insurance. Why? Because industry is overregulated, it's fraught with people who make fraudulent claims, and the insurance industry knows that California is hostile to it, but more importantly that it will never clean up its forest or take preventive, time-trying, ancient protocols to lessen the dangers of fire.

And so put it all together, whether it's a deliberate policy to not store water, not preserve water. Last year was one of the wettest years that we've had. We've had three out of the last four years have been very wet. We had a huge snowpack. We had rivers that were running in 19th-century fashion, but out to the sea to save the delta smelt.

So, it was a total systems collapse from the idea of not spending money on irrigation, storage, water, fire prevention, force management, a viable insurance industry, a DEI hierarchy. You put it all together and it's something like a DEI-Green New Deal hydrogen bomb.

Gavin Newsom was fiddling, as he's almost Nero Newsom. And this has been something that is just unimaginable, this system's breakdown.

And to finish, what we're seeing in California is a state with 40 million people. And yet the people who run it feel that it should return to a 19th-century pastoral condition. They are decivilizing the state, and deindustrializing the state, and defarming the state, but they're not telling the 40 million people that their lifestyles will have to revert back to the 19th century when you had no protection from fire, you didn't have enough water in California, you didn't have enough power, you didn't pump oil.

So, we are deliberately making these decisions not to develop energy, not to develop a timber industry, not to protect the insurance industry, not to protect houses and property.

And we're doing it in almost a purely nihilistic fashion. And Karen Bass should resign. She came to the airport, back from Africa. She had nothing to say. She was confronted at the airport: "Why were you in Africa? Why did you cut the fire department?"

They cut the fire department by almost $18 million. They gave fire protective equipment to Ukraine's first responders, and she had nothing to say. She had nothing to say because she couldn't say anything.

I don't want to be too pessimistic or bleak tonight, but this is one of the most alarming symptoms of a society gone mad, and if this continues, and if this were to spread to other states, we would become a Third World country if we're not in parts already.

2.1.14 America and Europe Can Hang Together—or Hang Separately (2025-01-12 22:30)

Consider these European and American binaries.

On Dec. 20, a terrorist, Taleb Al-Abdul Mohsen, rammed his SUV into a Christmas crowd in Magdeburg, Germany. He killed six pedestrians and injured 299 others.

Eleven days later, on New Year's Eve in New Orleans, Louisiana, Shamsud-Din Bahar Jabbar smashed his pickup into a festive crowd. He killed 15 and hurt more than 35.

Germany's fertility rate is scarcely above 1.4—about average for a shrinking European Union. About 20 % of the country is now foreign-born, a record high.

American fertility has precipitously dived to 1.6. The foreign-born now represent 15 % of the American resident population, the highest in both actual numbers (50 million) and percentages in history.

The German military is a shell of its former self, with fewer than 200,000 soldiers and a shortage of almost all types of weapons.

The U.S. military, after being humiliated in Afghanistan, is currently down some 40,000-plus recruits. It faces shortages of antitank weapons, artillery shells, ships, and logistic support.

Germany may finally manage to spend 2 % of its gross domestic product on defense. The United States is heading downward below 3 %—the lowest in more than 80 years since the Great Depression.

Last year, the German economy shrank. This year, it will scarcely grow, in part because of shortages of affordable fossil fuels.

Germans pay four times what Americans on average do for electricity. Yet the Trump administration has promised an oil and natural gas renaissance, hoping to expand both production and exports with envisioned new pipelines and liquefied natural gas terminals.

In sum, the U.S. is beginning to mimic the pathologies of Europe—and yet in the next four years, renewal could help slow the decline of both.

Both face shrinking and aging populations. Both either cannot or will not control their borders, despite popular protests. Both suffer from woke political correctness and are pushing back.

The proverbial people of both nations want smaller government—and more freedom of expression and less woke. They insist on less and legal-only immigration and secure borders.

They vote for cheaper energy and fewer regulations.

Europeans and Americans alike want more meritocracy and fewer fixations on race and gender.

In the chaos of the postmodern 21st century, Europe and the U.S. nevertheless are still likely to share the same enemies and friends.

Both resent the asymmetrical Chinese approach to global commerce, based on a mercantilism that would never allow Europe and the United States to treat China as it does both.

The Europeans and the Americans are both worried about a vastly expanding conventional and nuclear Chinese military.

Neither wants Iran to develop nuclear-tipped missiles with ranges to hit the capitals of both. They do not want Russian President Vladimir Putin to re-create the former Soviet Union's borders.

Europe, as a rule, loves Democrats as kindred quasi-socialists. But privately, many Europeans assume their own security and prosperity do better when America is governed by conservatives.

In the past, Europe has not been a fan of Donald Trump, both as president and as a pre- and post-presidency candidate.

They fear that he is an isolationist, insufficiently diplomatic, not fully supportive of NATO, or too tariff-happy for their tastes—and are scared of his art-of-the-deal trolling to prompt wake-up calls.

But 2025 is certainly not 2017 or even 2020. And a “reset” in thinking on both sides is urgently needed, now more than ever.

The Biden administration was no model partner for Europe. It quite outrageously forced cancellations of a joint Cypriot, Greek, and Israeli EastMed pipeline to bring much-needed natural gas to Europe.

It talked a great game about strengthening NATO. But the alliance's bulwark, the U.S. military, saw its real budget cut, its Pentagon politicized, and recruitment short more than 40,000 enlistees.

The humiliating 2021 skedaddle from Afghanistan not only eroded American credibility, but undermined all Western deterrence as well.

President Joe Biden opposed building new liquefied natural gas export terminals in the U.S. designed to help energy-starved Europe find a reliable and honest supplier and decouple from Russia.

Trump, in contrast, promises to “drill, drill, drill,” in part to ensure needed income by exporting huge amounts of LNG to fuel-starved Europe.

Europe was angry that a bantering Trump once bullied it to meet its promises to increase its defense spending. But after the invasion of Ukraine, it is happy that some countries did just that.

Europeans likely want—and need—Trump to restore a more deterrent U.S. military, not a woke one.

Europe and America are both in crisis and need radical new thinking.

So, who knows: Europe may soon quietly rejoice that Biden is gone, Trump is back, and they have a strong, loyal, and rowdy friend, rather than a simpering enabler.

2.1.15 Deport Millions, Finish the Wall, Tax Remittances, and End Birthright Citizenship (2025-01-12 22:31)

I want to talk about illegal immigration. You know, this is the point in our history that we've never been before. We have not a porous border, but no border at all. We've had somewhere between 10 [million] to 12 million illegal entrants since the Biden administration began.

There is no real corpus of immigration law. It's been destroyed. We're at a historical period in our country, where 55 million people, never such a large number of people born outside the United States, that are residing here. In terms of percentages, almost 16 % of the population was not born in the United States.

That's an enormous task of assimilation, integration, [and] civic education, and we just haven't been doing any of that. So, what are we going to do? Well, the first thing is: We need to stop "catch and release." We need to make entrants, legal entrants, go back to their country if they're applying for refugee status. You cannot come here, and then say you're a refugee. You must ascertain that and prove that at the consulate overseas.

We've got to finish the walls. It's a 2,000-mile border, and we've never quite been able to continue. We've got a wall or fence or somehow obstruct the entire 2,000-mile border. That will save manpower. It will save time and cost, and it will have an enormous deterrent effect.

The next couple of things are a little bit trickier. I think that whatever your status is, if you are sending money back to a foreign country from the United States that is singled out as a source of illegal immigration—Mexico, Latin America, for example—then the United States government should put a 10 % to 20 % or 30 % tax on all the remittances.

That would earn us up to maybe somewhere around $20 billion. And that would also deter Mexico, to take one example, that depends on remittances as its largest source of foreign exchange—greater than tourism, greater than its oil revenues. And yet, so often the American taxpayer—state, local, federal—through generous subsidies, free up the cash so that the illegal resident can send it back for social necessities that the Mexican government itself is responsible for, so we're subsidizing everybody but ourselves.

I think it's very important that we start looking at the countries that are the source of illegal immigration in terms of security. A Sudan, a Syria, terrorist countries that support, countries that support terrorism like Venezuela, the Middle East, especially Iran. Russia, as well.

Why would we let them send people here that we have no background checks, have not adjudicated their status? So, we should have a travel ban, an immediate deportation, and immediate consequences for the mother country that knowingly sends these people here. And that, too, would be a deterrent.

We've got to also look at anchor babies.

The 14th Amendment didn't really ever say, as sometimes [is] alleged, that if you're born in the United States, then you're an automatic citizen. It says if you're born in the United States, and not subject to the laws of another country. All the people coming, in some sense, are subject to the laws of another country.

So, we have to redefine that, either through legislation or renewed attempts in the courts.

Europe, the Left always looks for guidance—17 [European] countries don't even allow it. And the other 13 or 14 have restrictions that qualify it. So, we're the only country in the world that gives unqualified citizenship to people who happen to be born here and then anchor an entire family.

Why not also put a 10-, 20-year ban on people who have been detained here illegally and stop them from applying for a green card or legal readmissions for 20 years? That would be a very powerful deterrent.

In other words, we would announce sometime in February and say, "We want all of you to know, all 12 million who came here during the Biden administration, to take the first iteration of cohort, you have 30 days to go back. If you do not go back to your country, and you are detained, arrested here in the United States, you will be deported, but you will not be given any chance to get a green card for 10 to 20 years," depending on how the courts or legislation adjudicates it.

And finally, I think it's time to look at how we deport people. The first 500,000 who have committed a crime, it will be no problem. There's unanimous consent. They should be deported immediately. They're wreaking havoc on the American population.

The next iteration, the 1.5 [million], 1.7 million people who have already gone through the system, they've been adjudicated, they failed to show up for the court hearings. Or they left detention when they were facing deportation.

Those would be the next group that would face deportation. The third group of people, as I said earlier, from terrorist countries or terrorist-supporting countries, no one is going to sympathize with their residents here.

The fourth group is a little trickier, but I think we could pretty easily find hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of able-bodied residents who are on public assistance and who have not been here five years. If you haven't been here five years, you came during the Biden open-borders era.

You were on welfare of some sort, and you're able to work. You should go back home. That would leave a large group of people who have been here five years. They've never committed a crime. They're not on public assistance. And they want to get a green card, not citizenship, a green card.

I think if we had won public opinion and support by deporting the most egregious offenders, say 10 [million] to 12 million, then I think in a bipartisan fashion, we could work out a system for the law-abiding, the productive, and the long-residing American residents and allow them to pay a fine to recapture legality and stay in the United States.

It's going to be a tough road to restore border security, because the prior administration didn't believe in it. But I think now that the White House, the Senate, and the House are in Republican hands, it's absolutely possible. It can be done rather quickly.

2.1.16 Elon Musk's First DOGE Agents Arrive In DC (2025-01-12 22:33)

Elon Musk's ambitious push to reshape America's financial landscape took a bold step forward this week. His first "DOGE Agents" arrived in Washington, D.C., with a clear target: the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). These agents are aiming squarely at the agency's grip on taxation and regulation of digital currencies. As Americans watch closely, many see this as a much-needed pushback against bureaucratic overreach. In contrast, others warn that Musk's growing influence could open the door for unchecked corporate power over public policy.

According to reports, the newly established government agency already has 50 employees working for DOGE out of SpaceX's Washington offices, configuring ways to lessen the government's spending. The agents have reportedly been hard at work interviewing more than a dozen executive branch departments, including the U.S. Treasury, IRS, Departments Veterans Affairs, Homeland Security, and Health and Human Services.

The "nongovernmental" body, directed by Musk and Ohio businessman Vivek Ramaswamy, aims to cut up to $2 trillion from the federal budget by eliminating redundancies, scaling back the workforce, and dissolving unnecessary agencies.

According to Vinay Hiremath's blog post, the co-founder of tech company Loom, who worked for DOGE for four weeks, the group has gone "from 0 to 100 taking meetings and getting s done."

"Within 2 minutes of talking to the final interviewer for DOGE, he asked me if I wanted to join. I said 'yes'. Then he said 'cool,' and I was in multiple Signal groups," Hiremath wrote. "I was immediately acquainted with the software, HR, and legal teams. The next 4 weeks of my life consisted of 100s of calls recruiting the smartest people I've ever talked to, working on various projects I'm definitely not able to talk about, and learning how completely dysfunctional the government was. It was a blast."

DOGE hopes to reach at least 100 employees in the next several weeks. The DOGE X account wrote a post to the account seeking full-time salaried Software Engineers and InfoSec Engineers.

"'Recruiting for a very small number of full-time salaried HR, IT, and Finance positions,' the DOGE X account posted. 'If interested, please DM us your resume and a few bullet points about why you are interested in DOGE.'"

2.1.17 Democrats Killed Los Angeles And No One In Power Cares (2025-01-12 22:34)

The horror that has hit Los Angeles is something we haven't seen since Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicked over that lantern in 1871. Back then, Chicago burned to the ground and roughly 300 people died. That was more than 150 years ago, things were different then, and things are very different now. There is literally zero reason for a repeat, in any respect, of what happened in Chicago, and yet we are getting just that because of the mentality of the radical progressive leftists who've run that city for all but 8 of the last 64 years.

The Great Chicago Fire makes sense in a weird way. Wood and brick were the building materials of choice back then, and wood burns like mad. There were no zoning laws to speak of; buildings were clustered together because "traffic" was a bunch of horses stopping for water or a poop. Go to any old town's "historic district," and you'll see what I mean - it is not rare to find "roads" or alleys where you or a friend can touch buildings on both sides of the street.

When fire hit one house, it risked wiping out the block or the section of town for those very reasons. Add in the infancy and luddite nature of the fire fighting profession and technology and it was a recipe for disaster. Almost every major city around back then has some (much smaller) version of the Great Chicago Fire.

But we aren't living 150 years ago. Los Angeles is not a densely clustered town of swinging-door saloons and rickety wooden buildings; it is heavily regulated (just try to build something there or put a pool in your own backyard, and you'll find out how heavy-handed a government can be), and sprawling metropolis with millions upon millions of people. There is more money in the greater Los Angeles area than most countries in Africa and South America.

"Modern" is an understatement to describe LA, or at least describe how it was...how it appeared to be.

It turns out that modern Los Angeles was like so much of the entertainment industry upon which it is built: beautiful and new on the surface but rotting at its core.

All the modern architecture and "smart homes" wired for the digital age were wiped out by a lack of water - something the ancient Romans mastered with a mortarless aqueduct system 2000 years ago.

California doesn't lack for water; it lacks the will to move it to where it's needed. Los Angeles is basically a desert. Irrigation greened it and Hollywood grew it. At a certain point, the progressive left decided to destroy it.

OK, they didn't decide to destroy it, the natural result of their policies just do that.

Rather than put in place whatever is necessary to safeguard the lives and property of its citizens, the Democrats in California were busy congratulating themselves for the configuration of the people they hired to administer the city.

No one's skin color, gender or sexuality has ever put out a fire. Yet, you would be hard-pressed to find a story about LA's Fire Chief prior to the current disaster that was about anything else. She seems to have [1]an impressive resume, but given the way no one talked about it when she got the job, it should be asked if it was the most impressive resume or just impressive enough for a gay woman to satisfy the DEI Gods.

Janisse Quiñones, the Chief Executive Officer and Chief Engineer of the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power, has overseen the failure of the water supply and her incompetent leadership may well be the most responsible aspect of this disaster. She is paid three-quarters of a million dollars per year to...check DEI boxes. The ones she doesn't personally check are what she sees as her priority in that job. "It's important to me that everything we do is with an equity lens and social justice and making sure that we right the wrongs that we've done in the past," [2]Quiñones said before her incompetence helped destroy the city.

Mayor Karen Bass was the first black woman to be mayor of Los Angeles. That and $7 will buy you a cup of coffee. But until her inability to do the job cost lives and tens of billions in damages, she was celebrated for existing. That's what Democrats do - they elevate and celebrate people who exist while ignoring what they do or what they can't do.

It's really easy to be "historic" and congratulate yourself for the unimportance when there is nothing actually important needing to be done. But there is always feces flying toward a fan somewhere, and when they meet you damn well better have someone who knows what they're doing at the helm, no matter what their configuration happens to be.

The best person for any job may well be a woman, a minority, someone who is gay or whatever, but if your priority is to look like a Benetton ad from the 90s rather than hire the most qualified person for a job, don't be surprised when things don't work out the way they should. And it's much more than a coincidence that none of these "leaders" is remotely conservative, as any conservative would have refused to participate in press coverage about their irrelevant characteristics. Condi Rice doesn't bill herself as the first black female Secretary of State; liberals do (through clenched teeth, if they acknowledge her at all).

There is no serious argument that Los Angeles has the best, most qualified people in the positions necessary to have prevented this disaster or to have gotten it under control quickly once it started. But they all could serve as grand marshals of various progressive interest group parades. That gets them celebrated, with glowing press coverage...and puts out exactly zero fires.

08/01/2001

Hitmaker made up its second game that exclusive to Dreamcast (Crazy Taxi One went to PS2 remember.) From the first Crazy Taxi to Crazy Taxi 2, the game stayed the same. That's a good thing because the prequel was the most played arcade ports released in the present in the United States. What made Crazy Taxi 2 so playable is that the customer's yelled at you for almost anything you did wrong like they weren't stupid. If you messed up they tell you that. Like "Fool you almost killed me! - Bring me the to Burger King." The second addition to the series takes 4 new cab drivers in New York City. The new game plays songs from the band Offspring and tends to be more "slangish." But over all the game is the same fun picking people up with 2 new maps to drive around in.

The good. - Improved Graphic quality, "the crazy jump", how realistic people in the game talk - hehehe; Some of the sound track (rather it be the non-vocal version of Offspring.

The bad - the adult language - don't need to hear that much while I'm driving.

Sonic Adventure 2

I played this game for a while and the graphics are really good. Its like a step down from the Playstation 2. Every character has a darker effect to it and the game plays modern music like for Knuckles, its rap in Pumpkin Canyon. The game has game play like the original but is has more pre-rendered cut scenes and huge levels that make but for the adventure style game in Sonic Adventure. Sonic is one of those “want to be cool” characters, he’s not quite there. Unlike the original the script is a little more realistic, characters tend to interrupt each other. The game is pretty long. Also you can play separate levels for your pleasure.

One other thing I like is that you get to interact with your chaos like a pet in the game. You can pet it, feed it, enter it in a race, scold it you can do a lot of things with a chaos.

The good: huge levels to race down; Sonic, beautiful textures; the way the game has the feeling that its trying to be cool without over doing it, positively; chaos interacting.

The bad: voice acting; memory card usage

Air Force Delta

Konami 1999

This game is a fighter pilot game. The game stands but, even though it was made by Konami. The backgrounds are smooth and the game has good frame-rate. The graphics in the game are reasonably good. The lock-on system works like a charm and stalling is realistic. (Always increase your speed when turning, I killed myself that other way. ;) Normal mode is kind of easy expect when you get half way through, then it’s a little tricky to master. The game has hard too. Which is extremely hard. In this game I like to beat it once and play the missions independently. Each mission lasts for 10 minutes on average. I would recommended it.

The good: being able to be one; cold war effect

The bad: graphics could be a little better; wrong soundtrack; stalling

Crazy Taxi

Hit maker 2000

07/01/2001 v 1.0

Crazy Taxi came from the Arcade. The game is attractive. Your in a taxi cab and you race around with customers and drive them to there destination as quick as possible. The game recognizable vechals that exists. The best invention of the Dreamcast is the idea of the driving triggers. Right trigger for driving, left to brake, best idea since the joystick, I think. Even though the game has 2 cities to play, the game is perfect for the impatient gamer, which is me.

The good: crashing into cars, having the passenger getting mad and jumping out; originality

The bad: only 2 levels

Resident Evil: Code Veronica

Capcom 2000

07/01/2001 v1.0

Would you ever believe that the Umbrella Corporation (zombie creators) was developed by a 10 yr old genius whose name is Veronica? Never would of guessed it. If you haven't heard, Resident Evil is a respected horror pre-rendered game made by those dudes at Capcom. The game is not for the impatient gamer, it requires thinking and backtracking and shooting zombies. You be mature to play game, ok. There is a lot of blood and guts in this game so don't leave this game in the DC for your 6 year old to find out. But its fun for 17 years olds if your parents don't care. The game is very, very long. I bad, I never got through the first disc and been playing the darn thing for 3 months. Over all the game play is good with the exception when you walk the character through a still screen. Highly recommended.

The good: Shooting stuff; power ups; cut scenes; knowing what to do

The bad: The fact that Capcom hasn't came up with it earlier.

Soul Caliber

Awesome fighter. The game is based on anime characters, laugh out loud man. The game has many characters to chose from, I think the women are cute. The game hands down, has the best combat system of any fighting game, ever. The left trigger is always block. The AI can be extremely good. Its not eh you hit me I'm dead, it competes with how well you play the game - and averages out the difference. The game itself is based on the Arcade by Namco. It's so good that Namco is putting it in its own franchise. It was also had the best graphics of 1999. It is also a highly recommend game for Dreamcast.

The good: cute characters, great combat system; awesome music; realistic sound effects; very strong game play

The bad: Wasn't released on a later system also.

Rayman 2: The Great Escape

Uri Soft France 2000

Rayman 2 is a 3D sequel to Rayman. Good game. In the game you play a character with no arms or legs this a head, stomach and feet. The game has cool characters, that you would see in Super Mario or Banjo and Kazooie for the Nintendo 64. The game is kinda hard to beat. It requires a lot of climbing, running and shooting on Raymans part. One thing about this game is that Uri Soft totally redesigned the game for the Dreamcast, at the time the console had the best lighting effects around. The game has solid gameplay and a solid story. I like it. There are times when the game gets way to childish though, but you kinda respect that in a way.

The good: huge levels, good graphics, solid gameplay; clean textures; not too long, but not short by all means.

The bad:sometimes the level gets harder in the middle and if you quit you start all over with that level. If you don't have a memory card I would feel sorry for yeah.

Daytona USA for Dreamcast

Gecki /Hasbro Interactive 2001

The game is a remake of the arcade released back in 1994. Daytona USA is well designed. The game has three times as more tracks to race then Saturn. The game includes an enhanced music of Daytona and Gonna ride. Hasbro makes the cars longer. The game highly resembles the original that leads up to this day of age. The game is not based on drifts but when to brake and when to accelerate. My favorite track is Ryn Ryn Rank. Also not seen in the Saturn version is a full replay that looks like Electronic Arts Nascar series. Over all I think the game since its all been seen before, would not be the best buy, but a enjoyable remake of an arcade classic.

The good: more levels; good gameplay; Nascar on Dreamcast; good AI

The bad: too futuristic for its own good.

Resident Evil 2

Capcom 1997, 2000

07/01/2001

A game that comes very close to Code Veronica. The game takes place where the last one took off in Raccoon city. In 1997 Sega had a debate whether to bring the sequel to the Saturn, even though I own both consoles, I'm glad they didn't. It's a very good game. The game has noticeable improvements from the Playstation game. Like all the Resident Evil games you backtrack, shoot zombies. But what make it so good was some people thought that the game was kind of past stuff until Sega released it. In the game you try to find a way out of the Raccoon city which was developed by the Umbrella Corp because they were already there. You play James who meets up with Claire who has her own game in Code Veronica. Any way, they split up and meet each other discovering what's left of the Umbrella's attack force that as sent to destroy all the evidence. James who is a STARS member is located in Raccoon City. And that's what the entire game is basically about. Its fun though. This is also a recommended game

The good:Capcom did an exceptional job of porting RE2. Improvements over Playstation version like camera angles; shooting zombies

The bad: Capcom didn't add to the story; trying to walk on a still screen. Dieing.

Test Drive: Le Mans

Infrogrames 2000

Driving is really realistic. Graphics are comparable to those of PS2. Le Mans has 4 large tracks that take you 5 miles around for each one. The game has a loading time but also has smooth frame rate. The cars include Chrysler, BMW, Duncan International, and some other man made racing cars. The replay timing and angles are real time angles. The controls are that you use A and X for gearing up and down and L and R triggers for acceleration and braking. Overall the game is ultra cool. But is best when there are 2 players one on one. Overall the game his one of the best lighting effects on the Dreamcast that pushes the hardware to the limit.

The good: Le Mans car series, ghost mode, replay, solid controls, long detailed tracks, auto body customization.

The bad: graphics are starting to be outdated, freezing, loading time.

F355 Challenge

This is also a really good racing game if you like realism. The entire game has Ferrari tracks. The game has good lighting effects, not as good as Le Mans but pretty close. The game has solid game play where you have to either gear down or brake hard and lose your place out of 5. The game has 5 tracks plus 4 secret tracks that aren't that small. With all the handicaps off like power everything, the driving can be extremely hard for the average gamer, me. Sound tracks have rock on them. I don't mind it though, its like Harley Davidson music.

The good: car actually loses its place when you slow down, awesome music and graphics.
Good game-play

The bad: sometime freezes

Aero Wings 2: Air Strike

CRI 2000

If you take the three flight simulators on the Dreamcast, AW2 would be your best pick. The game has combat and stunt flights. Even though you don't get to chose as many planes as in Air Force Delta, you'll find that this game doesn't need all those speedy planes to past. The game play equals that of Air Force Delta since the prequel wasn't that good. It has a fairly descent 2-player mode that you and your friends to dogfight. You can do barrel rolls and back loops to out smart the enemy. In this game if you make that small error it could cost you the game. There is a training mode on how to plan and maneuver your plane. Over all its what is expected from a flight simulation, I liked it, even though it isn't to be played all the time. Good Control, realistic altitude conditions, and smart enemies.

The good: most realistic fighter on the Dreamcast; maneuver capacities not seen on any other game

The bad: takes time to know what to do; a little difficult

Speed Devils

07/02/2001

Speed Devils is one of the best racing game of any of the launch titles besides maybe Sega Rally 2. The game is based on hot rod racing. Each car has a different feel to it, some looser then others. The game itself has a unique feel to it as you go through Area 51, Hollywood, Canada, Oklahoma , places like that. There is options that let you make it a timed race. In each race there are about 2 or 3 shortcuts each boo bee trapped. In the game there are also power ups like better acceleration or speed, all terrain tires. Overall the game design is an A but it takes an experienced player to make it through. The game isn't as commanding as F355 Challenge and Le-Mans. The game is fun to play for your spare 10 minutes. But if you play more then that you may get a little tired of it.

The good: the street racing part of it, many options.

The bad: if your behind you'll never take 1st, and if you push it, it usually means bad luck for you.

Skies of Arcadia

Overworks 2000

This is the Final Fantasy of Dreamcast, the Role Playing Game. The game is very long and spreads across 2 discs. The game is based on fantasy tale where a young girl gets stole by the Empress Arcadia and two rouges go after her and there friends that have mean caught hiding on an island by the Royal army. Cool eh. The 2 rouges eventually save there family that was captured and they eventually take over the empire, I think. The combat system is pretty well organized since RPGs' aren't Sega's specialty. The game is in 3rdperson. But when this game isn't the only RPG around, it tends to be un welcomed and sat aside. But the backgrounds are well oriented and gameplay is very good, in the future this game would be a gem to have.

The good: good artwork, story, battle system, made for the teenage gamer; the choose system (one decision can change the way people view you)

The Bad: single player; the need to continually save the game, if you don't have the health you might as well start all over because it won't matter.

Street Fighter Alpha 3

Street Fighter Alpha 3 is the better 2D fighting game, at least it's very good. What makes it so good is that it has the screens move you in the game and not this put you there like you actually after world conquest. The baron and the rye and jo are back to kick butt. The animations are fluid as any other fighter. The game has over 20 locations and 40 characters most of them are lock into the game. Like all Capcom fighters, there are no blood and lots of anime characters. In my opinion the game is the longest worked on fighter by Capcom on Dreamcast. The game is very detailed and has moving backgrounds, instantaneously. This game is defiantly one to own.

The good: fluid motions, there is a point to the game; good everything

The bad: graphics outdated

Dead or Alive 2

Tecmo Games 2000

This is a very unique game since it the characters are pretty life like. It's also the only game that Tecmo produces. The music in the game is based on Japanese rock, I guess. Every time is in Japanese. What makes this game stand out is that the characters have totally different ways of fighting. One might do a body slam wrestling (what Japanese think of us Americans) and another may be doing judo. One of the character's breasts jiggle a bit, I find that interesting. Any way the moves are basic enough, though there are combos when you are near your competitor. Like Soul Caliber it has the right stuff to be a 3D Fighter. One plus is that you get to through characters of edges. That's fun. What isn't fun is when you get thrown off. The game has every thing that other 3D fighters have. Survival, VS mode, Arcade, Team Match, and some others I don't know on top of my head. Even though Soul Caliber is the bomb, DOA2 is a welcome addition to my library.

The good: Great Graphics; woman; solid fighting; beating the boss with wings

The bad: spoke in Japanese; ugly defense system for amateurs

Tony Hawk's Pro Skater

Neversoft/Crave 2000

I hear that a lot of people like this game, but I not really interested in it even though I own it. Basicly you have the top skaters in the world jumping the ramps, riding rails, doing 360s and 580s and 'side airs' which made the game really popular. The game is fine, it has solid graphics and control but your on a skate board all the time. And have you even ran away from Officer Dick. He skateboards too you know. The game has goals that are challenging but you can avoid it, that's a good thing. The game is solid in every way, but I this don't like skating. But if you like skating, this is the game to buy.

The good: realistic courses; very solid game play; challenging but avoidable requirements

The bad: in my option I'm not a stake board fan, and I think that the game is over rated a bit.

Hydro Thunder

07/03/2001

The Dreamcast title Hydro Thunder has everything from the arcade plus 4 bonus tracks and 4 hovercrafts. What made the arcade title so fun was that Midway didn't waste any energy making this really fast. The game has power ups to gain position. Each race lasts 3 to 4 minutes. Each vehicle has tighter or looser steering which is made up with faster speeds. On your first time playing you'll may get 4th or 5th place because some of the power ups are hidden and need to play a few times to find where they are. Each time you place gold in each stage (beginner, medium, hard) you will receive a new environment and vehicle. Over all this game is fun to play a couple times but you might get tired of it if you play it all the time. It's good for a 10 or 20 minute game.

The good: good pace racer, the arcade sounds, decent AI

The bad: sometime freezes after 3 or 4 races.

F1 World Championship

Videogames 2000

If you want a good all around Indy car game, this one would be it. I played it, it is very good. One reason is that the game uses real Formula One tracks across the world. The game has a good AI, that will leave you in the dust if your not careful. Braking and then accelerating after turns in by far the most important. As you slow up the car becomes easier to handle this like the real thing. That's the best. One drawback that the game has is that the backgrounds could be a little sharper, but the game for what it is has a stable frame rate. The game runs after the 1998 season and comes with over 20 vehicles and 40 drivers. And also every F1 track internationally. The champions mode lets you play the whole season in order, one that I haven't tried before. Over all the F1 World Championship is a very 'slick' racer.

The good: Tight control, many tracks, options for power braking and acceleration, nice intro, fans cheering, decent music, good frame rate.

The bad: saving is questionable

2.1.19 Nintendo 64 reviews off my 2000 Pressenter.com homepage (2025-01-15 22:32)

4 - Fun to play for a little while

3 - needs improvement

2 - rental

1 - don't review these games

Zelda: Ocarina of Time

Legend of Zelda is good. What the best about it is that it has not only has simple controls Z to block and A to attack. I has a simple battle system with a cursor on the enemy. Though after a while I loss some interest, and I could always come back later. The game is huge, maybe not as much as it's sequel but as big as Turok 2 I would imagen. In the game you play Link, an adventurer "half-elf," (half human) who had a dream of the Princess Zelda kidnapped by an evil sorcessor and figure out the next day that you were summoned by the Deca Tree.

Developer Nintendo | Publisher Nintendo esp. 1998

The Pros. Very huge game, slingshot, talking; 3D transition excellence; detailed - not too detailed though.

The Cons. Sometimes I can get overwhelmed by fighting enemies too long.

Banjo and Kazooie

Banjo and Kazooie is good platform that simple and innertaining. The game was also RAREs first game of this type which is petty large about as much as Zelda 64. The backgrounds are blurred out, but looks overall petty nice, almost like Dreamcast almost. In the game you have to search for puzzle pieces that let you in curtain areas. In all there are 10 levels that you search for. Much like Mario 64, each level has quests like when you get 100 gems or reach a current point you will almost always get a reward. Like most other games that are based on finding items you may find yourself bored running around searching for skulls (power-ups 5+). zin ten or years or so you this game could still be a gem on the N64 if you can find it, and even though its aimed at a younger audience, the oppicals vary in a good way.

Rating 4 - 5

Developer - Rare 1998 | Publisher - Nintendo

The Pros - 10 hours + gameplay, not agerveting

The Cons - takes a lot out of your joystick

Mario Kart 64

Mario Kart is one of my favorite games. Its easy to beat and the races don't take that long. And I don't know about you, but racing in the mushroom cartoonish world that Mario usually exist sort of takes me back to the Super Falcom. And people didn't buy a new console with flashy graphics every 2 years.

Rating 5 -5

Developer RAD1 1996 | Publisher: Nintendo

The Pros - solid game play with awesome weapon system

The Cons - characters are not grown up yet.

Golden Eye

This was my very first person shooter before I had Diablo for the PC. :). The game uses the original movie made in the 1960s with the new James Bond. I remember back then how lifelike the soldiers moved and the how realistic the AI is. Although the enemy put up a good fight before even if you cant see them, the way the soldiers move don't really amaze me, I seen Perfect Dark you know. But its funny how you can shoot these guys in the balls and they crouch like sissies and then they fire and you shoot them again and they repeat them selves. My god. At the time, hard core gamers where buying consoles this to play the game mostly because the multi player mode was ahead of its time. I mean N64 had four controller ports and scattered ammo in very large areas. The internet wasn't very good back then and this way you could hunt down your friends by the radar. Gadical.

Rating 5 - 5

Developer: Rare 1997 | Publisher: Nintendo

The Pros - solid gameplay, verses heaven, 20 single player stages.

The Cons - graphically outdated.

Super Mario 64

Even though I never finished the game yet, Mario 64 had merit to it to say the least. Nintendo made the game so compact at the time that they oven tally released larger carts anyways. Its amazing but Nintendo spent 3 years putting the game together. At the time I thought the browser theme was "heavy Music" Much of the game is based on 5 stages in 15 levels. One thing that was a breakthrough in these game was the MIDI music and how it added to the background theme. Its interesting what the sequel will sound like on Gamecube and I'm not talking about Luigi's Mansion. The game-play and graphics were state-of-the art in 1996 but the game it self, people thought strayed away from the original world Mario played in. In the game you try to save Princess Toadstool (Peach) from Browser. You had to get 75 stars to finish the game. By trying different maneuvers to get form place to place obviously. In my option, SM64 is a must buy for the console.

Rating 4-5

The Pros - seeing Mario in 3D, solid gameplay, return of the "marshon men" hehehe

The cons - basic errors that made up a 3D game, unrecognizable at the time

Extreme-G

Extreme-G is pretty fun except for the visablity which isn't that good. The game is a fast paced shoot em up game surrounding high-tech combat cycles of the future. Sadly the first Extreme-G was a quick developed game from Acclaim. The game has protential which the 3rd one already has. But the first can be fun if you get the turns and being able to use the right trigger. Other then that the game has good Artificial Intellegence and plenty of tracks. Even there is a techno theme to move the game along.

Rating 3-5

The Pros - AI, variety of weapons. nice fast pace shooter/racing game, good controls

The Cons - mediocre graphics (I can't see where I'm going half of the time)

2.1.20 Nintendo Switch 2 tech specs (2025-01-15 22:39)

Power Profiles

- Handheld:

- CPU @ 1100.8 MHz
- GPU @ 561 MHz, 1.72 TFLOPs
- RAM @ 2133 MHz, 68.26 GB/s

- Docked:

- CPU @ 998.4 MHz
- GPU @ 1007.3 MHz, 3.09 TFLOPs
- RAM @ 3200 MHz, 102.40 GB/s

And here's a roundup of other unconfirmed tech specs:

Tech Specs

- CPU: Arm Cortex-A78C
 - 8 cores
 - Unknown L1/L2/L3 cache sizes
- GPU @ Nvidia T239 Ampere (RTX 20 series)
 - 1 Graphics Processing Cluster (GPC)
 - 12 Streaming Multiprocessors (SM)
 - 1534 CUDA cores
 - 6 Texture Processing Clusters (TPC)
 - 48 Gen 3 Tensor cores
 - 2 RTX ray-tracing cores
- RAM: 12 GB LPDDR5, (some/all units will have LPDDR5X chips)
 - Two 6 GB chips

Over on [1]Reddit, one comparison point for TFLOPS – which is one way of measuring power – has been the 2021-released GeForce RTX 3060 GPU. It had 12 TFLOPS, which would put Nintendo Switch 2 at a fourth of that. But looking purely at gaming consoles which probably makes more sense, the Xbox Series S comes in at 4 TFLOPS while the PS4 Pro is 4.2 TFLOPS. However, TFLOPS alone doesn't fully tell us what Nintendo's new device could be capable of, especially as DLSS will apparently be supported as a significant upscaling feature.

There have been so many rumors and leaks surrounding Nintendo Switch 2 over the past few months and weeks, so we may as well throw in TFLOPS to the mix. Things could finally come to a head this week though – at least partially. It's [2]rumored that the new system will be announced in some form on Thursday. Meanwhile, Nintendo previously confirmed an announcement for this fiscal year ending in March, so that deadline will be here sooner rather than later.

2.1.22 CNN's Scott Jennings Was Left Speechless By the Insanity of This Ex-Kamala Staffer (2025-01-20 00:13)

CNN's Scott Jennings was stunned that Joe Biden said that the nation was threatened by misinformation and that lies are being told to enhance power or increase profits. This man is shameless since that's precisely the modus operandi of the Biden crime family. Jennings sparred with former Kamala Harris aide Ashley Etienne, though he didn't have to do much since virtually all her talking points were lies. The whole segment was the seat of irony, given the panel's topic on January 15.

Etienne seemed to make the argument that Donald Trump's remarks induced COVID to kill people, which is insane. Also, using COVID to attack the first Trump presidency is largely ineffective since Anthony Fauci and the entire medical establishment have been exposed for lying about the disease. Etienne tried to make the case that Trump's lies had a top-down effect regarding containment. False—Trump gave us the vaccine, which is another story. But for those who want to manufacture the false narrative that Trump's COVID protocols led to all the deaths, that's simply fantasy. She also repeated the debunked lie about drinking bleach—it left Jennings paralyzed due to how degraded the conversation had become.

CNN's [1]@ScottJenningsKY schools former Kamala aide Ashley Etienne for praising Biden lamenting the decline of trust in the media and then hurling disproven lies about Donald Trump: “Has Joe Biden, Kamala Harris or Karine Jean-Pierre ever lied?...Your speech is about the truth and... [2]pic.twitter.com/pgspP7JK7w— Curtis Houck (@CurtisHouck) [3]January 16, 2025

Biden is the wizard of lies, and CNN, Mr. Jennings excluded, is a factory for falsehoods. A couple of days later, the network [4]was found liable for defaming a Navy veteran who they singled out was exploiting Afghans trying to flee the country in 2021 when the Taliban took over the country again. They were ordered to pay millions to Zachary Young. So, lies and misinformation seem to be a liberal media and a liberal America problem writ large.

This is the segment in which CNN defamed a U.S. Navy Veteran and has to pay him $5 million for.

Up top is the segment, bottom is the apology.

“We did not intend to suggest that Mr. Young participated in a black market.”

2.1.23 LAFD Whistleblowers Sound Off. No Wonder Why the LA Fires Got Out of Hand. (2025-01-20 00:14)

The fires are still raging in Los Angeles County, but once contained and extinguished, this fiasco will be investigated. These fires are likely to be the costliest natural disaster in American history. The cuts to the Los Angeles Fire Department, the scrubbing of LAFD memos pointing to deficiencies in the department, and the lack of water have all been documented, especially for the Palisades blaze. Independent reporter Michael Shellenberger has tracked the behind-the-scenes fiasco that led to this catastrophe.

For the Palisades blaze, it took LAFD almost an hour to respond. And yes, while the cuts to the LAFD proved damaging, its chief, Kristin Crowley, also geared her department toward training that had little to do with fighting fires. In short, people want firefighters to save their homes—they don't care if a black lesbian does it. The DEI nonsense played a significant role in the LAFD's degraded and shambolic response to these wildfires, [1]which whistleblowers can attest. The cost of these woke initiatives is also immense, and resupply can become a byzantine journey as LA will only work with pro-DEI vendors. A few of them reached out to Shellenberger to vent about the current state of the department [emphasis mine]:

They [LAFD whistleblowers] say the reason they arrived too late to stop the fires from becoming catastrophic was because of severe budget cuts. The Fire Department did not pre-deploy fire engines to strategic locations, and helicopters arrived half an hour too late to put out the Palisades.

"That [Santa Ynez] reservoir being closed did not allow helicopters to drop and suck water up from five minutes away," a new firefighter whistleblower, the third who has come forward, told me. "Instead, they had to fly 10 to 15 minutes away to go get water somewhere else."

The problem is that the LA Fire Department is one of the most severely understaffed of America's 10 largest cities. It has less than a single firefighter per 1,000 residents compared to Chicago, Dallas, and Houston, which have twice as many.

"In 1960, our city population was 2.5 million, and we had 112 fire stations. In 2020, our city population was 3.9 million, and we had 106 stations," a representative of LA's firefighters' union testified last month. "That's 1.4 million more people and six fewer fire stations."

This undermines the Department's ability to respond to emergencies. "In 2020, the average emergency response time was seven minutes and 53 seconds, nearly double the NFPA recommendation."

The third firefighter whistleblower says the firefighters are being put in danger by budget cuts. “Even last week,” the person said, “I wanted to work and I was told, ‘Sorry dude, we don’t have a seat for you to fill because there’s not enough apparatuses,’” meaning fire engines or other equipment.

One hundred fire engines and other apparatus are currently out of service because the city cut the Fire Department’s budget, and it couldn’t afford to hire mechanics to fix equipment.

“We have a crack about halfway down our water tank. Half of our [engines and other] apparatuses are broken. They were sending rookies, new probationary firefighters, out to the field last year with no department-required brush jackets.”

The firefighters lack life-saving equipment. “We were running out of electrodes to do EKGs,” the person said. “We’ve been running out of gloves. We’ve been running out of drugs, you name it. There’s been ambulances that have been having to steal stuff or borrow stuff from the hospitals just to stay available.”

At the meeting last month, the president of the city’s firefighters union warned, “If we cut one position, if we close one station... the residents of Los Angeles are going to pay the ultimate sacrifice, and someone will die.”

All this and yet Los Angeles is one of the richest cities in the world. Eighty-four of America’s richest 400 people live in California, and LA is home to 26 billionaires who collectively possess a net worth of approximately $185 billion.

As such, the problem is not poverty, it is severe mismanagement and bad governance. Not only is the city’s mismanagement to blame for LA’s disastrous response to the fire, but it’s also responsible for the city’s ongoing homelessness disaster.

Why is that?

Part of the reason is the city's Diversity, Equity, Inclusion (DEI) programs. "The city will only purchase from vendors that support DEI," said the firefighter. "So we'll go with a vendor that we have to pay twice as much, or the shipment may take twice as long, in order for it to be a DEI vendor rather than the vendor who has it at half the price and can get it to us tomorrow."

The whistleblower said that DEI programs put firefighters and the public in danger. "I personally witnessed in my own drill tower them making and passing women just to get their [female quota] numbers even though they didn't have to meet all the criteria the men did."

When asked what those criteria were, the person said, "A certain amount of push-ups. Holding a certain size hose line. Throwing a certain ladder. We no longer require two firefighters to be able to throw a 35-foot ladder because of the amount of women that were failing that. So now, it's just a three-person ladder. We no longer require that as a job requirement. In the field that doesn't work because we don't have enough people to spare when a fire is happening to just throw one ladder."

The DEI programs are also expensive, distract attention away from preventing and fighting fires, and result in the Fire Department hiring unqualified people, whistleblowers said. "Do we really need to sink millions a year into DEI? I don't think so."

Another reason is corruption, which drains money from the city's coffers, including for firefighting.

2.1.24 Switch 2 talk (2025-01-20 00:15)

Nintendo has been very clever with the Switch and it's production pipeline. I don't know if youve noticed the pattern, but the cadence is very sleight of hand to make the release calendar seem more robust than it really is. They'll release one game per year that would be considered an actual bonafide "AAA" game (Tears of the Kingdom, Smash Bros, Pokemon, etc) and then they'll surround it with a lot of "3DS" level bullshit filler games, but still charge you AAA prices for them. Last year there really wasn't even a big AAA game. I guess Echoes of Wisdom was the closest thing, but in they surrounded it with a bunch of filler like Brotherhood, Princess Peach, Mario vs Donkey Kong, etc. This year is a little different since Nintendo is releasing a new console. So I expect a better year of big releases. I still maintain that the best single year for Switch exclusives was the launch year. No other year measured up after that.

Sure, like all companies, Nintendo would be happy with making money anywhere it can be made. That being said, Nintendo is clearly skeptical and isn't dumping a ton of money into this live service play. Mario Kart and Smash have optional online play, which I'm fairly sure only makes up a small % of hours played in those games. Most players have probably not utilized online play even once for those games. I'd be shocked in the online features for the next MK or Smash have much if any additional features from the Switch games. Heck, Nintendo still clearly has no interest in an achievement system akin to Microsoft or Sony, which would probably lure more people to playing online.

If anything, I'd say Nintendo is even LESS prone to following hot market trends and experimentation than they have been in the past. The Switch 2 seems like the safest/least change/least loaded with new gimmicks console Nintendo will put out since the SNES. I suspect much of that is the current management (namely Furukawa) being more risk averse than past leaders at Nintendo, which I generally think is a good thing.

My only minor quibble is that I'd like to see a bit more in the way of bringing back certain older Nintendo IP's or games long dormant, such as F-Zero, 3D Donkey Kong Country, Wave Race, Star Fox, etc. But I do get why most of those don't return. Mario Kart seems to cannibalize all other Nintendo racing games, seemingly every Star Fox game goes through development hell, and their one attempt at a pure 3D DKC continues to give Nintendo PTSD due to its reception (a lot of which is unfair, it was an amazing game) even decades later. Apparently, there was a 3D DKC being farmed out to Blizzard Albany not too long ago, but Nintendo hated it and scrapped it. So I'm not exactly optimistic about anything other than a new 2D/2.5D DKC anytime soon.

While I don't love the wait till April for the software, man am I glad they opted to reveal the games in a Nintendo Direct rather than another live presentation to a clearly very corporate audience, as they did with the Switch. Video game people in general don't do particularly well with live presentations (large share are very introverted and/or autistic, as am I... not trying to criticize), resulting in a LOT of cringe worthy presentations like the Switch software reveal and most E3 presentations. The original Switch software presentation was like that, but also with an audience that had ZERO excitement. Nintendo is better suited all around for taped Directs. Still miss Iwata's presence and wish he were still around to witness the huge Switch success.

Nintendo already does this quite a bit actually, and the problem is you start to lose quality control. As good as the Switch has been, some of their IP's were not done proper justice and were not so loved by critics and fans. Titles like Mario Golf: Super Rush (Developed by Camelot Studios) has a metacritic score of 70 and a user score of 6/10. That's way below what you expect a game like that should be and I still think Everybody's Golf on PS4 is better! Mario Strikers: Battle League (Next Level Games) is another example. It has a 72 metacritic score with a user score of 4.5/10. Again, way below standards you'd expect for a title with Mario attached to it. Yoshi's Crafted World (Good-Feel) is a 79 on metacritic with a user score of 8/10. A LITTLE better but still, kind of pedestrian for a Yoshi licensed game IMO. Princess Peach Showtime (also Good-Feel) 74 on metacritic with a 6.2/10 user score.

All these games that use Nintendo IP are extremely mid and all of them were farmed out by Nintendo for other studios to make. Why couldn't Nintendo make these in house? Nintendo used to have a very strict seal of quality standard for all of their 1st party properties. But if they're going to keep farming out their characters to lesser talented studios, this will continue to be the results.

2.1.25 Illegal Aliens Flee U.S. Voluntarily with Less Than 24 Hours Before Trump's Inauguration (2025-01-20 00:16)

As the United States is just less than 48 hours away from a second Trump administration, illegal immigrants have resorted to "self-deporting" themselves as President-elect Donald Trump returns to the White House. With Trump's promise to crackdown on illegal immigration looms, fears of mass deportations and stricter border enforcement under Trump's second term have many illegal aliens opting to leave the U.S. voluntarily. This comes as illegal immigrants appear to be afraid of Trump's harsh consequences of a renewed immigration policy.

I recently [1]reported that mass deportations in certain sanctuary cities will begin just one day after Trump is sworn into office— starting with Chicago.

NewsNation host Markie Martin, sister of Trump's deputy communications director Margo Martin, was visibly taken aback as she reported the trend of illegal immigrants self-deporting across the U.S. In recent days, undocumented aliens have confided in immigration attorneys that they prefer to leave voluntarily rather than face arrest, detention, and deportation without knowing where the Trump administration might send them. Many have chosen to exit on their own terms to avoid being swept up in the Trump administration's mass deportation effort.

Self-deportations of illegal immigrants have begun ahead of the inauguration.

[2]pic.twitter.com/7PwiQpH68T— The Post Millennial (@TPostMillennial) [3]January 17, 2025

Mexico is reportedly "bracing" for a surge of new arrivals following Trump's inauguration on January 20th, leaving many illegal aliens panicking. Unlike the Biden administration, which has struggled to deliver on its promises, undocumented immigrants told Rolando Vazquez, a Texas-based immigration attorney, that Trump follows through on what he says. In other words, if the president-elect promises to deport all illegal immigrants, they believe he will do just that "This is causing many migrants to leave on their own, knowing that they're either going to be deported to their home country or be deported to Mexico, and obviously, the overwhelming majority of them do not want to be in Mexico," Vazquez said.

Trump focused much of his 2024 campaign on restoring "law and order" by enforcing U.S. immigration laws. While on the campaign trail, he promised that, if re-elected, he would push for aggressive action to remove the millions of undocumented immigrants from the country that the Biden administration allowed in.

2.1.26 Everything You Missed From Trump's Inauguration Day Eve Rally (2025-01-20 00:17)

Tens of thousands of people attended President-elect Donald Trump's fire rally on Sunday at Capitol One Arena.

Trump promised to take back the United States at noon on Inauguration Day as Americans begin the journey to the first day of a brand new country.

Advertisement

"So on the eve of taking back our country, that's what we're going to do," Trump said. "Take back our country tomorrow at noon, the curtain closes on four long years of American decline, and we begin a brand new day of American strength and prosperity, dignity and pride. Bring it all back once and for all."

Trump told the 20,000-person crowd that he had fought for the American people for the last nine years, including those in the most Democratic-run states, such as California and New York.

"For the past nine years, you and I fought side by side against the most sinister and corrupt forces on earth," Trump continued. "And in our magnificent victory on November fifth, you showed them once and for all that this nation does not belong to them. This nation belongs to you. From New York to Los Angeles, from Philadelphia right here in Washington, DC, our country was won and built by generations of patriots who gave everything they had for our rights and for our freedom."

He promised to sign at least 200 executive orders on Monday, saying he would sign as many as possible on day one of his presidency.

□President Trump: "Someone said, 'Sir, don't sign so many in one day. Do it over weeks.' I said, like hell we're gonna do it over weeks. We're gonna do it at the beginning. Tomorrow. And we'll have plenty later on. It's not going to stop."

[3]pic.twitter.com/l2sdlrADeU— Benny Johnson (@bennyjohnson) [4]January 19, 2025

Trump brought high-profile guests to his rally, including Elon Musk, The Village People, Megyn Kelly, and Dana White.

Trump boasted about saving TikTok, which had gone black just hours earlier after the U.S. government banned it. He said he liked the app and suggested its value would be negligible without U.S. approval but could reach massive amounts, even up to $1 trillion, with it.

The president-elect said the U.S. has no choice but to save it because it creates jobs.

He also talked about the Israeli hostages that were released earlier in the day from Hamas terrorists. He said that the hostages would still be in Hamas custody if he hadn't won the election.

"I'm glad to report that the first hostages have just been released. And who knows what's going to happen? I know that Biden may think that they made the deal," Trump said. "First of all, it would have never happened if I were president. Would have never happened."

He also vowed to declassify documents related to the JFK, Bobby Kennedy, and MLK assassinations.

2.1.27 Trump Makes Stunning Move During Arlington National Cemetery Wreath Laying (2025-01-20 00:19)

President-elect Donald Trump visited Arlington National Cemetery to honor the nation's fallen heroes in one of his final pre-inauguration events. The somber occasion marked a moment of reflection as Trump paid his respects at the hallowed grounds, symbolizing his commitment to the nation's veterans and military families. The visit, attended by a small group of close associates, was a fitting tribute as the country prepares for his second term, underscoring his focus on national security and respect for the armed forces.

In a surprising move that captured global attention, Trump invited a wounded warrior to lay a wreath at Arlington National Cemetery on Sunday. During his visit, he also paid his respects at the graves of three U.S. soldiers who were tragically killed in the botched Afghanistan withdrawal—an incident Trump has consistently blamed on the Biden administration's mishandling of the situation.

While touring Section 60 at the cemetery, the president-elect paused at the graves of the three fallen soldiers, taking a moment to speak with their grieving families. The soldiers—Darin T. Hoover and Nicole L. Gee of the Marine Corps and Ryan C. Knauss of the Army—were killed during the August 26, 2021, terrorist attack as they worked to evacuate people from Kabul.

At his side, Vice President-elect JD Vance gained national applause for praying after laying a wreath at Arlington National Cemetery.

Watching from a distance during the visit were Trump's wife, Melania, and four of his children: Don Jr., Eric, Ivanka, and Tiffany. Several of Trump's Cabinet picks were also present, including Pete Hegseth, nominated for Secretary of Defense; Marco Rubio, his choice for Secretary of State; and Tulsi Gabbard, his choice for Director of National Intelligence.

2.1.28 Vivek Ramaswamy Is Out at DOGE (2025-01-20 00:20)

Many saw this break-up coming, though I'm not sure they expected it to happen so soon. Elon Musk and Vivek Ramaswamy were supposed to be co-leads to head the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE). Given their profiles, both men were likely never to work together for long.

Yet, it sounds like Vivek won't be part of the DOGE revolution, reportedly rubbing the rank-and-file the wrong way and unwilling to do the heavy lifting behind the scenes. Hence, why Donald Trump and others have been trying to create new opportunities for him, like pressing Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine to name him to fill JD Vance's empty Senate seat (via [1]CBS News):

Vivek Ramaswamy, President-elect Donald Trump's choice to co-lead the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) with entrepreneur Elon Musk, is expected to soon step away from the task force, CBS News has learned. Ramaswamy intends to announce a campaign for Ohio governor as soon as the end of January, multiple sources confirmed to CBS News.

Ramaswamy, 39, had no comment.

People close to Musk have privately undercut Ramaswamy for weeks, frustrated with his lack of participation in the heavy lifting, according to sources familiar with the internal dynamics. There has been friction between the incoming rank and file DOGE staff and Ramaswamy, the sources said, and Ramaswamy has been subtly encouraged to exit.

"Vivek has worn out his welcome," one person close to Trump said.

Ramaswamy recently met with the Ohio's sitting governor, Mike DeWine, about the state's Senate seat left vacant by Vice President-elect JD Vance. But on Friday, DeWine announced he is appointing his lieutenant governor to the post.

Despite its name, the Department of Government Efficiency is not expected to be a full-fledged federal agency. Trump has said it "will provide advice and guidance from outside of Government" and partner with the White House and Office of Management and Budget.

2.1.29 Nancy Pelosi's Daughter Comes Up With a New Nickname for Jill Biden...and It's Perfect (2025-01-20 00:21)

Rep. Nancy Pelosi has been recovering from a nasty fall while on a congressional trip to Luxembourg last December. She broke her hip during the incident. A fixture of Congress and one of the many faces of the Democratic Party, Pelosi has been showered with the usual flowers and well wishes from friends and colleagues. Yet, two people have been conspicuously absent in these overtures of recovery and good health: Joe and Jill Biden.

Pelosi has tried multiple times, I'm told, to have a conversation with Biden. But she and intermediaries who've also attempted a rapprochement have repeatedly been met with the same response from the president's top advisers: The answer is no.

"She's been told they're not over...— Jonathan Martin (@jmart) [1]January 19, 2025

Politico had a brutal piece about the Biden and Pelosi families being at war. It's personal, and it's been this way for months. Joe Biden and Nancy's friendship has disintegrated. It's shocking to those in their respective inner circles since there was a time when Biden referred to Ms. Pelosi as his Catholic sister.

Pelosi has tried to reach out to the president for quite some time, only to be rebuffed. Jill Biden's interview with The Washington Post did delve into this matter, where the First Family places much blame on Pelosi for forcing Biden off the 2024 ticket. Then again, Pelosi's daughter, documentarian Alexandra, coined a new moniker for Jill, and it's pretty appropriate. Whipping out the knives for her mother, Alexandra said, "Lady McBiden" should grow up, put on some big girl pants, and tend to the legacy left behind by her husband. Oh my, and that fall in Europe also exposed the depth of this friendship, which has reportedly fallen. The former

House speaker was worried that she might not be able to secure transport back to the States due to Biden's anger over the 2024 race (via [2]Politico) [emphasis mine]:

Fueling that anger is Jill Biden's continued, and now public, nursing of a grudge toward Pelosi for pushing the president to withdraw from last year's campaign.

"If I was Lady McBiden, I'd put on my big girl pants, play the long game and think about my husband's legacy," Alexandra Pelosi, the former speaker's daughter, told me Saturday. "There aren't that many people left in America who have something nice to say about Joe Biden and Nancy Pelosi is one of them." The younger Pelosi made clear she was speaking only for herself.

Pelosi has tried multiple times, I'm told, to have a conversation with Biden. But she and intermediaries who've also attempted a rapprochement have repeatedly been met with the same response from the president's top advisers: The answer is no.

"She's been told they're not over it, don't make more overtures because he's blaming her," said a person who has spoken to Pelosi about the conversations between the former speaker and Biden's aides.

Pelosi told people last week she's struck that the Bidens would leave on such a low note, asking rhetorically why they'd convey such bitterness.

A Biden spokesperson declined to speak on the record but did not deny the silence.

Biden did briefly chat with Pelosi, her husband, Paul, and daughter Christine at a White House holiday party last month. But that encounter only served to remind them of the rupture.

It's also common for family members of officeholders to take grudges more personally — and hold them longer. But the political converged with the personal after Pelosi slipped in Luxembourg.

Desperate to get her the best possible care in the initial hours after the accident, the Pelosis grappled with whether she should go to a U.S. military hospital, which she did, or immediately fly back home for care. And part of that trepidation, I'm told, owed to uncertainty about whether Biden would quickly get her a plane "because we have this wall at the White House," as one person familiar with the situation put it. (Another source said any concerns abated when White House staff heard the news and were swiftly responsive.

The chill between the two since has saddened their longtime friends and muted even some of the most forthcoming figures in politics, at least for public consumption, which I was reminded of last wk in a series of terse conversations.

"I've been around long enough to know that...— Jonathan Martin (@jmart) [3]January 19, 2025

There's another side to the story, which the article highlights, which is that Pelosi did try to usher out Biden with grace, dignity, and, most of all, privacy. The president wouldn't believe the polls, and his intransigence and stubbornness led to Pelosi and others bulldozing the entire White House operation, whose political team was quintessentially 'JV' in nature. Pelosi knew she would win this knife fight, one she didn't want to have, but she likely saved more congressional seats, which everyone, except for Biden cultists, agreed. Her Morning Joe appearance in July sealed Biden's fate. As for repairing the friendship, some think time could fix the relationship that's lasted for 50 years. Time away from the spotlight and press also helps, but some, like Rep. James Clyburn (D-SC), feel these two are likely to never speak to one another again:

"There were no threats," one person familiar with the conversation told me. "She just told him the truth — he was losing in every poll, and people had lost confidence."

This is not to understate Pelosi's role in driving Biden from the race. She was the most critical player in last summer's backstage political drama.

It's entirely possible the president would have weathered the crisis were it not for Pelosi's Morning Joe interview, which took place immediately before her meeting with Biden in the White House residence.

Appearing the week Congress returned from July 4, a moment many Democratic lawmakers were drifting back to Biden and the president was emphatic about staying in , the former speaker repeatedly insisted his decision remained an open question. That pivotal moment effectively ensured it was — and less than two weeks later Biden dropped out.

Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-Conn.) — one of Pelosi's most dedicated legislative allies and the person Biden credits for taking his son, Hunter, under her wing in New Haven when he was at Yale law school — was as restrained as Dodd.

"Time has a way of working things out," DeLauro told me, conceding that Pelosi and Biden are both "very strong personalities."

Those who know Biden well, though, wonder if he can ever truly reconcile with Pelosi.

"I don't think he'll ever get over that," said Rep. James Clyburn (D-S.C.).

And he's acted as such since Pelosi's fall. Biden isn't Mr. Empathy. He's a vile and vindictive old man who needs reminders to wear pants and has an inflated sense of himself in the world capital of politics. He was easily defeated by a Democrat who wasn't even in the leadership anymore. He was outmaneuvered on the world stage to such a degree that chaos reigns. And, among many other things on the domestic front, he made us poorer. There was a supply chain crisis. He allowed Chinese spy balloons to infiltrate our airspace.

He's a failed president who was never meant for the job. And showed it masterfully over these four years of incompetence, chaos, and utter disappointment.

And no, Joe, you still would've lost all the swing states, Trump still would've won the popular vote, and his Electoral College performance would've been better since the president-elect was likely going to take Virginia if you'd stayed in—no one told you that your support was collapsing in the all-important Northern Virginia suburbs? When those heathens start to stray, you know you're cooked.

2.1.30 America Awakes From Its Coma (2025-01-25 19:22)

Have you noticed during this transition, from the Nov. 5 election to the inauguration of Jan. 20, there's been a whole change of mentality from the trivial to the existential? We can't quite believe that. Mika and Joe Scarborough made a religious journey, as it is, to Mar-a-Lago.

Snoop Dogg once cut a film about shooting Donald Trump. Now he has endorsed him. And that is true all over the media. They just fired the head of MSNBC. Now we also learn these disclosures. Why now? Why now? Why did we suddenly learn from The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times that Joe Biden had had cognitive decline all these years, in which to point that out was blasphemy?

Remember Peter Daszak? He was in EcoHealth. He was the one who engaged in forbidden gain-of-function viral research. He was getting money from the NIH [National Institutes of Health], transferring it to the Wuhan laboratory. But, even to say that was considered heresy. And now all of a sudden, we hear we were right all along. All of you were.

That there was gain-of-function research. That we did have a role in the Wuhan lab. And guess what? Peter Daszak is barred now for five years from receiving one dime of federal health care. How about the FBI? They stonewalled, stonewalled, stonewalled. All of a sudden—suddenly, out of the head of Zeus—they tell us they're going to abandon, abolish, get rid of their diversity, equity, and inclusion department.

And finally, Christopher Wray, in his last address to us, says, well, there are cabals of Chinese espionage activists and they're in sensitive places. We have to be careful. Why didn't he tell us that two years ago? Why all of a sudden is Mr. [Justin] Trudeau stepping down? Why did the Assad dynasty collapse? Why does Hamas want to negotiate?

It's eerie. We've never seen anything like it. Why did Joe Biden suddenly abdicate? He's kind of abdicated from power. Donald Trump is the de facto—and he has been for weeks—president. We've never seen anything like it. The obvious answer is, the king is dead. Long live the king. People gravitate toward power, especially when power is expressed by winning the popular vote, the Electoral College, having control of the House, the Senate, the Supreme Court, and having issues that all polled over 55 % to 60 %. It was a mandate. And everybody wants to be on the winning side, in the sense, you root for your football team when it's 10 and zero, and you don't go to the stadium when it's zero and 10.

There's another criteria here and that is, a lot of people, as they look back, see that what they did to Donald Trump—the lawfare, the Alvin Bragg, the Fani Willis, the Jack Smith, the Letitia James, the E. Jean Carroll, civil and criminal suits—they really were an aberration. They were a miscarriage of justice.

And when they're compounded with the two prior impeachments, the trial of Donald Trump as a private citizen, the effort to get him off the ballot, the raid at Mar-a-Lago—a lot of people on the left in the media, in the Democratic Party, in the liberal circle itself are thinking if we were Donald Trump and we had suffered what we did to him and we were in power now, we know what we would do: revenge.

So, they project that onto Donald Trump, and they try to reach out now, whether it's the media settling defamation suits, or talk that even CBS will settle with Donald Trump. But I don't think that necessarily explains all of this vast change of heart. This new mindset. I think people, as they look back, they think we were in a coma.

We were drugged. This was an aberration. Maybe it was the COVID lockdown. Maybe it was the George Floyd. Maybe it was the hatred of Donald Trump. Maybe—I don't know what it was, but it was a four-year aberration. And now they're coming to their senses and they're thinking Joe Biden really was cognitively declined. A coup dismissed him.

That was abnormal. The border should be closed. There really are two main sexes, not three. Looting and shoplifting have to be crimes or society will not exist. What happened in Afghanistan, turning over $50 billion to terrorists, that's not normal. That's not the United States. Nor is putting "daylight" between us and Israel.

So, there's a sense now that, Rip Van Winkle, like we've woken up. And Donald Trump wasn't a monster. In fact, Donald Trump has commonsense answers to all the things of the last four years. So we're looking back and we're saying we were mad. And now there's a commonsense corrective and we don't really care if it's Donald Trump or not, but we're going to go with the corrective and return America to common sense.

2.1.31 Why Trump Threatens Davos (2025-01-25 19:23)

This is the week of the inauguration of [1]Donald Trump, but it also coincides, not just with Martin Luther King's birthday—on the same day as the inauguration, but also the meeting of the world's elite at Davos, Switzerland, lorded over by 86-year-old Klaus Schwab, who, created this organization.

If you don't know what Davos is, don't worry about it. It's not that important, in some ways. I mean, it's not doing a lot of good for the rest of us.

But it is important because it has aspirations that are quite [2]dangerous. Basically, its premise is that if we got together all of the "smart people"—those are people who have letters after their name, or they live in the right ZIP codes, or they're wealthy, or they're professors, or they're key government officials—and we put them all in this beautiful, idyllic place, they can think up utopian dreams that then can be, from the top down, implemented by hoi polloi: the many.

And they have actual disgust for [4]elected governments because you see elected governments make mistakes. They elect people and then they do the wrong thing. They have these 19th-century [5]borders. They believe in legal-only immigration. They don't believe in redistribution of money. They believe in free market capitalism.

They are opposed to diversity, equity, and inclusion. And they don't want to put mandates on corporations—[6]ESG—about the environment and social questions and governance questions. They let the market adjudicate, which you can't do.

Now the reason that they're really angry this week is Donald Trump was elected in the United States. And he is a Jacksonian, populist, nationalist, who believes that the U.S. Constitution and the creation of this last great hope for Earth is unique and singular. And he trusts it and its Constitution more than he does these Davos international organizations, who, remember, are not elected by anybody. They're appointed.

So, Donald Trump immediately got out of the International Criminal Court. This was an international body that, if implemented—in the case of the United States—fully, it would say that a major or colonel in the United States could be prosecuted if he issued an order that they felt was inhumane.

He got out of the World Health Organization. That was pretty much a Chinese-dominated world organization that functioned during the COVID crisis, largely, with the help of Anthony Fauci and Peter Daszak to suppress the truth that that virus was created in the Wuhan lab. May or may not have been a biological weapon. May or may not have escaped naturally by mistake. But in any case, Donald Trump poses the threat to the Davos crowd.

And more importantly, his threat, it is amplified because it works. People who have followed the model of Milton Friedman and free market economics in Europe, in Eastern Europe, in Argentina, and the United States are doing very well.

When the EU was created, its [gross domestic product] was almost—25 years ago—the same as the United States. And then it started to implement these Davos-like issues and laws and policy, and now it has almost a little more than half, half the GDP of the United States, and only about 60 % of the per capita income.

So, the people at Davos know that their socialist, globalist model doesn't work. And they know that people don't want to listen to them anymore because when people adopt these views, their economy slows, they get poorer, their borders are overrun. Illegal immigrants come and cannot be assimilated or integrated. And the people feel they have less security, prosperity, and freedom.

Rather than addressing those concerns—and so having at Davos—why is Donald Trump being elected? Why was [Argentine President Javier] Milei? Maybe we can learn from these people because they represent elections and freedom.

No, it's Donald Trump. How dare you say this? Milei is wrong. And so, they too, as I've said in an earlier broadcast, they have forgotten nothing and learned nothing.

Each year, Davos becomes more and more irrelevant. And the people who oppose them and put their trust in the people, in the U.S. Constitution, in freedom and individual liberty do better and better.

2.1.32 The Unhinged, Petty, and Vindictive Left (2025-01-25 19:26)

[1]Donald Trump won the 2024 election in part because [2]the Left's hysterical style of attacking him no longer worked.

After a decade of this unhinged furor, it proved worthless in winning public support—and for two simple reasons.

One, after years of [3]Russian collusion hoaxes, the laptop disinformation farce, and the warped lies about the “suckers” and “fine people on both sides,” the shrill Left became predictable.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [4]Donate now

So, the bored public began tuning them out, switching channels, hitting the mute button, and pulling the plug.

Like the deleterious effects of inflation that eventually render a currency worthless, nonstop hectoring, hysterics, pontification, and distortion finally made all such criticisms of Trump mostly as valueless as 1930s German marks.

Second, the wearied public never heard reasoned counterarguments from the likes of a Rachel Maddow. Instead, on spec, she kept mouthing, “The walls are closing in” on Trump.

Now-former President [5]Joe Biden did not explain why his open border was a better idea than Trump’s closed one. He preferred mumbling about “semi-fascists!” and the “ultra-MAGA!”

The Never Trumpers did not critique the Trump deficits. Instead, they hammered away that Trump was Adolf Hitler, or Benito Mussolini, or [6]Vladimir Putin—or just a dangerous dictator or autocrat.

Angry retired generals never demonstrated why Trump was, in their view, an existential threat to democracy. Instead, they shouted nonstop in op-eds and interviews that he was a fascist, Nazi-like, no different from the guards at Auschwitz, a pathological liar, and should be summarily removed.

Worn-out voters began to understand that these psychodramas were substitutes for substantive criticism or occasions for legitimate debate.

Indeed, the exhausted public finally concluded that the hysterics increased in direct proportion to the poverty of the charges.

So, what did 10 years of such derangement achieve for the Left?

Trump now has control of the [7]White House, and both houses of [8]Congress operate under [9]Republican majorities.

The [10]Supreme Court is mostly conservative. Almost all of Trump’s issues—the border, immigration, the economy, foreign policy, and crime—poll well over 50 %.

No matter, the Left is still hammering away at the trivial and irrelevant—and remains paralyzed in furor and hysterics.

When Snoop Dogg performed for the Trump inauguration, Ana Navarro of TV's "The View," in racist fashion, called the African American rapper "a trained seal."

When Pete Hegseth went before a Senate committee for confirmation as secretary of defense nominee, Democrats asked almost nothing about nuclear strategy, recruitment shortfalls, or a paucity of artillery shells.

Instead, what followed were animated "gotcha" lectures about Hegseth's prior adultery.

No sooner had Hegseth finished his successful audit than the Left rounded up his former sister-in-law, now divorced from his brother.

A hard-core Democrat, she confessed she wanted his nomination rejected. She further claimed—with no evidence—that she had "heard" from his ex-wife that Hegseth was a wifebeater.

His former wife immediately denied the charges. She pointed to their prior divorce settlement that recorded neither had ever lodged such a complaint against the other.

Next, the Left went after Elon Musk. Recently, he had finished an address by touching his heart and then extending his arm out to the crowd.

To the Left, that greeting now became proof of a "Nazi salute."

Yet in no time, the internet cited photos of Hillary Rodham Clinton, Barack Obama, and Elizabeth Warren all extending their stiff arms out in identical fashion to Musk.

We were next told by critics that Trump was not technically president because he did not place his left hand on the Bible as he swore his presidential oath.

The Constitution, of course, demands no such act. But it does explicitly state that no religious test shall be required to hold public office.

During a National Prayer Service for newly sworn-in President Trump, the Episcopal bishop of Washington, D.C., Mariann Budde, hijacked the sermon. She rebuked Trump—sitting right in front of her—because he supposedly had portrayed illegal aliens and transgender children “in the harshest of lights.”

Budde later bragged that she had used the occasion to sandbag Trump with a “one-on-one conversation.”

She talked grandly of mercy, but not of the thousands of Americans who have been physically assaulted or attacked by illegal aliens, or tens of thousands of deaths due to illegally imported fentanyl, or the unfairness of open borders to legal immigrant applicants, or the suffering of our citizen poor when their social services are overwhelmed by some 12 million illegal entries of the last four years.

In sum, the Left wants no debate because they know voters have rejected what they saw and suffered during the past four years of the Biden administration.

Forgetting nothing, learning nothing, like zombies, leftists keep screaming banalities. But like addicts and their feel-good fixes, their hysterics only further turn off the public as they destroy themselves.

2.1.33 What McConnell Did After the Hegseth Vote Is Infuriating (2025-01-25 19:34)

Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-KY) had good qualities. He pushed through Trump's judicial nominees during the first presidency, got his tax cuts passed, and is a noted legislative strategist and tactician. It doesn't mean he always bats a thousand, but McConnell got key portions of the Trump agenda passed after the 2016 election. Now, he's erased all that goodwill with this dastardly vote against Pete Hegseth for secretary of defense. McConnell's defection, plus that of Sens. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) and Susan Collins (R-ME), led to Vice President JD Vance performing his constitutional duty to break the tie.

Mitch McConnell just voted NO on President Trump's secretary of defense nominee

This led to VP Vance having to rush down to cast a tie-breaking vote, only the 2nd such vote in U.S. history

In this cause, he...— John McCormack (@McCormackJohn) [7]January 25, 2025

U.S. Senator Mitch McConnell (R-KY), Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense, issued the following statement today on the nomination of Pete Hegseth to serve as Secretary of Defense:

“The most consequential cabinet official in any Administration is the Secretary of Defense. In the face of the gravest threats to U.S. national security interests since World War II, this position is even more important today.

“Major adversaries are working closer together to undermine U.S. interests around the world. And America’s military capabilities and defense industrial capacity are increasingly insufficient to deter or prevail in major conflict with China or Russia, especially given the real risk of simultaneous challenges from other adversaries like Iran or North Korea.

“Stewardship of the United States Armed Forces, and of the complex bureaucracy that exists to support them, is a massive and solemn responsibility. At the gravest moments, under the weight of this public trust, even the most capable and well-qualified leaders to set foot in the Pentagon have done so with great humility – from George Marshall harnessing American enterprise and Atlantic allies for the Cold War, to Caspar Weinberger orchestrating the Reagan build-up, to Bob Gates earning the wartime trust of two Commanders-in-Chief, of both parties.

“Mere desire to be a ‘change agent’ is not enough to fill these shoes. And ‘dust on boots’ fails even to distinguish this nominee from multiple predecessors of the last decade. Nor is it a precondition for success. Secretaries with distinguished combat experience and time in the trenches have failed at the job.

“Effective management of nearly 3 million military and civilian personnel, an annual budget of nearly $1 trillion, and alliances and partnerships around the world is a daily test with staggering consequences for the security of the American people and our global interests.

“Mr. Hegseth has failed, as yet, to demonstrate that he will pass this test. But as he assumes office, the consequences of failure are as high as they have ever been.

“The United States faces coordinated aggression from adversaries bent on shattering the order underpinning American security and prosperity. In public comments and testimony before the Armed Services Committee, Mr. Hegseth did not reckon with this reality.

“President Trump has rightly called on NATO allies to spend more on our collective defense. But the nominee who would have been responsible for leading that effort wouldn’t even commit to growing America’s defense investment beyond the low bar set by the Biden Administration’s budget requests.

“In his testimony before the Committee, Mr. Hegseth provided no substantial observations on how to defend Taiwan or the Philippines against a Chinese attack, or even whether he believes the United States should do so. He failed, for that matter, to articulate in any detail a strategic vision for dealing with the gravest long-term threat emanating from the PRC.

“Absent, too, was any substantive discussion of countering our adversaries’ alignment with deeper alliance relationships and more extensive defense industrial cooperation of our own.

“This, of course, is due to change. As the 29th Secretary of Defense, Mr. Hegseth will be immediately tested by ongoing conflicts caused by Russian aggression in Europe and Iranian-backed terror in the Middle East. He will have to grapple with an unfinished FY25 appropriations process that – without his intervention – risks further harming the readiness of our forces.

“By all accounts, brave young men and women join the military with the understanding that it is a meritocracy. This precious trust endures only as long as lawful civilian leadership upholds what must be a firewall between servicemembers and politics. The Biden Administration failed at this fundamental task. But the restoration of ‘warrior culture’ will not come from trading one set of culture warriors for another.

“The single most important way for Secretary Hegseth to demonstrate his professed devotion to America’s warfighters will be to equip them – urgently – to deter aggression... and rebuild the defense industrial capacity to restock the depleted arsenal of democracy. In this cause, he will find willing partners on the Senate Appropriations Defense Subcommittee, which will expect and receive his candid testimony.

“I wish Secretary Hegseth great success, and I look forward to working closely with him to restore American hard power. Every member of the uniformed services will be looking to him for decisive, principled, and nonpartisan leadership.”

2.1.34 Magic: The Gathering (2025-01-29 14:18)

It's more that I could take photographs of the 1200 games, 17 DnD books, 4000 magic cards, 400 pokemon cards. I have KinHank and emulation station. Mario Kart 8 on Wii U crashes on my emulation station, but anything up to Playstation 3 won't crash. I play old Wipeout Pure on PSP or Manx TT Superbike on Saturn for 4 hours per session (1 weekly) on emulation station in 1080p. This Kinhank technology since 2019 was so amazing and affordable. I enjoyed myself. I used to finish most games up to 2015. Around 2015, PC games DVD releases stopped in stores and around the time I stopped finishing games on console and PC. I just play 5 hours of any game I have. I play and finish hand and foot card, Klondike Solitaire, lady jane solitaire games now.

I also finished some DnD books! I still don't know how to apply it after 10 years.

2.2.1 Can the American Flag Once Again Lead Us Back to Unity? (2025-02-02 15:56)

Imagine a moment when the American flag, battered but resilient, stood as a beacon of unity. From the tragic ashes of 9/11 to moments of national triumph, this enduring emblem has symbolized resilience, hope and a shared identity. Today, as cultural divisions deepen, can the flag again inspire us to unite as one nation?

The U.S. State Department's "[1]One Flag Policy" mandates that only the American flag — except for specific instances, such as the POW/MIA flag — be flown at U.S. embassies around the world. To ensure a unified identity, this policy prohibits additional flags, including the Pride flag and the Black Lives Matter flag.

While the policy invites debate, its purpose is clear: to promote unity over division. In an era when division permeates our culture and churches, this policy encourages us to reflect on unifying principles and the significance of raising one banner high.

Red, white and blue: symbols of freedom

Flags signify a common identity and set of values. The red in the American flag represents sacrifice, white denotes purity and blue signifies justice. Together, these colors capture the essence of liberty and unity.

From its adoption in 1777 to its iconic presence at Ground Zero after 9/11, the flag has brought Americans together during both crises and celebrations. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. marched under this banner, urging the nation toward justice and reconciliation grounded in biblical truth. [2]He proclaimed, “Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere.”

The “One Flag Policy” emphasizes unity over competing agendas, reflecting the Gospel’s call for oneness. [3]Ephesians 2:14 reminds us that Jesus “has broken down the dividing wall of hostility.” Just as a flag unites a nation, the gospel unites believers, transcending the labels that divide us.

Time and truth

Recently, my wife and I celebrated our anniversary in Chicago and reflected on what we’d change if we could go back 20 to 30 years. Time tests ideas — some endure while others fade. Just as enduring symbols like the flag remind us of timeless values, the Gospel also points us to eternal truths.

As believers, we must focus on rhetoric rooted in Christ’s truth rather than chasing trends. The media generates significant noise, leading many astray. We should pause and ask: Is this grounded in biblical truth or merely a distraction? Like the Gospel, the American flag represents shared values that endure through time: liberty, unity and justice.

The dangers of division

The United States should continue to acknowledge the painful truths of its history, which have caused deep suffering for African Americans and other people of color. Understanding the past is essential; however, unity requires reconciliation and progress.

As the body of Christ, we cannot let diversity divide us; instead, we must allow it to unite us in His love. Dr. King's reminder [4]resonates here: "Darkness cannot drive out darkness; only light can do that. Hate cannot drive out hate; only love can do that."

Critical Theory, which divides society into oppressors and the oppressed, often fuels division by emphasizing identity rather than shared humanity. This theory categorizes overlapping identities (e.g., gender, class, race) as either oppression or privilege. Movements like Black Lives Matter function within this framework.

While these movements raise important issues, they risk dividing us further by focusing on what separates us rather than what unites us. Dr. King's vision emphasized reconciliation over division. [5]He warned, "We must learn to live together as brothers or perish together as fools." Christianity teaches that all people are made in God's image, hold equal value, and can find redemption in Christ.

While Black lives are undeniably important, the organization "Black Lives Matter" promotes principles that conflict with biblical teachings, such as undermining the nuclear family. These ideologies threaten unity by prioritizing group identities over shared values.

The Gospel: a superior banner

The Gospel provides the ultimate solution to division. While ideologies such as Critical Theory create fractures, the Gospel brings all people together under Christ. [6]Ephesians 2:11-16 illustrates how Jesus reconciled Jews and Gentiles, forming "one new man." This peace promotes justice and unity.

Dr. King's vision aligns with biblical teachings such as [7]Micah 6:8: "Do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God." Likewise, the One Flag Policy brings Americans together under one banner, steering clear of divisive ideologies. As Christians, we should raise Christ's banner above worldly beliefs.

One nation under God

Christians should see the Gospel as the ultimate remedy for cultural divides. True freedom requires responsibility, which fosters unity, reconciliation, and shared values. [8]Dr. King reminded us, “Faith is taking the first step even when you don’t see the whole staircase.”

Displaying the American flag reaffirms our commitment to unity and hope. As we reflect on the flag, let’s also contemplate the cross. The red, white and blue remind us of the sacrifices for freedom, the purity of hope and the pursuit of justice. Above all, we must elevate the Gospel that transforms lives and transcends divisions.

As followers of Christ, let’s take the first step toward unity — extending our love across divides, raising the banner of Christ above all, and living as one nation under God.

2.2.2 Imagine What Republicans Could Achieve Without Undoing Democrats’ Failures (2025-02-02 15:58)

Each time you think Democrats have hit the bottom of stupid, they break out a shovel. Or a drill. Or a backhoe. It’s really something, considering they already start off in the Mariana Trench. But there is no bottom for them to hit. Like someone smoking through a trach hole or a junkie angry over being revived with Narcan, the left simply cannot quit being what they are. The residual damage done by Democrats is occupying much of the first month of the Trump administration and far too much of what the country has to do every time they are tossed out of office.

Taxes will go up if Republicans don’t make the Trump tax cuts from 2017 permanent. Were it not for Democrats and their lies about how federal revenue is collected, they would have been made permanent in the first place.

On their way out the door, Joe Biden's handlers imposed countless new regulations and tried to cram through spending on their pet causes and interest groups, all of which has to be found and stopped before it happens and the money is gone – which is why you get an executive order freezing so much spending. That leads to lawsuits because that's what the left loves to do and how they get most of their political victories, which only gums up the works for getting more things done.

That's why President Trump's initial rush of actions is so important this term. Last term, Democrats flooded the zone with lawsuits, preventing the implementation of Trump's agenda and catching them off-guard. This froze them and hampered them.

This time, with Trump being the one flooding the zone, he is overwhelming the left's ability to focus – they are not good multi-taskers – and find themselves reacting to everything, which makes their reaction to anything less impactful. They are firing wildly, without focus, at everything that moves. Sure, they may hit something here or there, but they'll miss much more of it.

The media can't even report effectively on everything Republicans are doing; they're too busy trying to figure it out for themselves.

It's beautiful.

Donald Trump fired the director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, the left-wing activist organizations masquerading as a quasi-government agency. The whole thing should be dismantled, but until that is possible, cutting off its head is as good of a place to start as any.

It's just the Trump administration or even Republicans plowing through the obstructions to liberty and prosperity Democrats build, it's everyone. DEI is being ripped out of corporate American, root and branch. The biggest electricity company in Georgia is pushing to keep its coal burning plants because it's the most effective way to meet the state's energy demands.

There is a rebellion, albeit minor, happening across the country. The progressive agenda, the parts that were imposed in city council meetings people weren't attending, and pieces of state legislation no one read are being steamrolled, repealed, or ignored to the benefit of everyone.

California's devastating wildfires are now contained, and all it took was a new President pressuring and overriding their worthless Governor's insane water re-direction orders that dumped hundreds of millions of gallons into the ocean. New President, a week and a half, and problem solved.

Advertisement

None of this is lost on the American public, and none of it is lost on the left. It scares the hell out of them. That's why you end up with stories in Politico like, "How Trump Could Snatch a Third Term — Despite the 22nd Amendment."

Politico's "legal editor," demonstrating the fact that title means nothing, declares Trump may magically override the Constitution by one of these ways: repealing the 22nd Amendment, "exploit a little-noticed loophole in the amendment that might allow him to run for vice president and then immediately ascend back to the presidency," simply run again assuming no one and nothing – including the Supreme Court – would object or stop him, or just refuse to leave office.

It's so dumb of an idea you'd expect it from a high school newspaper.

Democrats are melting down, unable to work at the speed of Trump that they're lost. Republicans are getting things done, addressing the issues Americans really care about. Just imagine how far advanced we'd be if we didn't have to waste time undoing all the damage Democrats created every time they're in power.

2.2.3 Free at Last, Free at Last, Free of Climate and Energy Insanity at Last (2025-02-02 16:00)

This is what winning looks like!

In the past two weeks, first in the private sector, then in the public sector, climate and energy reality has begun to dawn on large institutions and the elites who run them.

A few weeks ago, every [1]major bank in the United States withdrew from the UN-sponsored Net-Zero Banking Alliance (NZBA). The NZBA was a transglobal cabal of big banks attempting to control peoples' freedom by controlling their access to banking services, capital, and by limiting loans only to projects that satisfied progressive climate fetishes. The banks had already been under pressure in various states with lawsuits claiming that by imposing climate preferences and politics on average people and private businesses, banks were violating anti-trust laws. The Heartland Institute discussed the dangers of the overlapping international climate banking organizations in our 2023 report [2]"ESG Is a Threat to Individual Liberty, Free Markets, and the U.S. Economy." It seems the world finally got clued into the truth of our message – certainly President Donald Trump understands it.

With Trump's stated hostility to climate policies that place America at a competitive disadvantage while benefitting transglobal elites and technocrats, the bankers saw the writing on the wall. Wanting to play nice with Trump, within the space of a few weeks, days before Trump's inauguration, JP Morgan, Citigroup, Bank of America, Morgan Stanley, Wells Fargo, and Goldman Sachs withdrew from the NZBA.

To be clear, they have yet to eschew their individual net zero goals as stated in various public statements online, but that might be coming. Otherwise, the banks may be in for a bumpy ride for the next four years. In the end, the banks are on the wrong side of climate science, there is no climate crisis, and the wrong side of economics.

Climate policy is bad for everyone except politically connected business grifters, and their days of subsidies and access seem to be coming to an end.

The private banks are not alone, the U.S. [3]Federal Reserve Bank (Fed) withdrew from the Network of Central Banks and Supervisors for Greening the Financial System (NGFS), days before Trump's inauguration. The Fed said it was pulling out of the NGFS because its work has increasingly broadened in scope, covering a wider range of issues that are outside of the Board's statutory mandate. The NGFS is a transnational organization of central banks colluding to shape the world's economy in ways that benefit the wealthy and powerful by directing development and financing funds to programs and projects that meet the elites' standards of sustainability based on their supposed climate impact. Any country or major development project that didn't subscribe to the climate concerns of the central banks was shut out.

In truth, the Federal Reserve should never have joined the NGFS because fighting climate change is not within its charter. With Trump now in office, the Fed is out of the global climate cabal and none too soon.

Canadian bankers, it seems, got the message of the impending collapse of net zero mandates as well. In Canada, soon to be ex-Prime Minister Justin Trudeau was the biggest pusher of climate alarmism, imposing harmful climate policies on often resistant provincial governments and their people. Working with [4]Canadian's for Sensible Climate Policy and Friends of Science, I co-authored a publication, "[5]Energy and Climate at a Glance: Canadian Edition," which demonstrated the dangers from international net zero goals, developed with and embraced by Trudeau and his cronies. With Trudeau in retreat, and the dangers of climate mandates becoming ever more apparent to the public, five of [6]Canada's biggest banks, BMO, National Bank, TD Bank Group, CIBC, and Scotiabank, have announced a strategic withdrawal from the NZBA in the past two weeks.

Then there is the United States, where Trump is firmly at the helm once again. In lighting quick succession, Trump issued a flurry of executive orders (EO) signifying that any net zero pipedreams still held by the elites at the UN and Davos are effectively dead.

[7]Trump's EOs end climate lockdowns and unjustified, harmful mandates restricting personal freedom and consumer choice and imposing energy subservience to international bureaucrats, green-energy profiteers, power-hungry elites, and the Chinese Communist Party.

The first EO Trump signed rescinded 78 EOs, directives, and memorandums his predecessor, President Joe Biden, had enacted. The reversals included EOs wasting money and resources on "tackling the climate crisis at home and abroad" (his signature order initiating his "all-of-government approach" to climate change, making climate considerations a primary concern in every Cabinet agency and department); ending the climate change support offices and directives for climate financial risks and climate justice; halting Biden's clean car initiative, which served as a justification for the Biden EPA's EV mandate; ending restrictions on federal infrastructure, buildings, and repairs to ensure "sustainability" (which made cost and effectiveness secondary considerations) in contracting for projects, to boost the fortune of purportedly "green" developers and contractors; and reversing Biden's offshore oil ban.

Trump also issued an EO blocking permits and consideration of new offshore wind industrial facilities. Trump calls them ugly. More importantly, they are expensive, unnecessary, and harm marine mammals, the commercial fishing industry, and tourism. There is no climate justification for offshore wind farms.

Trump's [8]National Energy Emergency EO may prove to be the most consequential order of all in the long term. Under national emergency orders, the president can waive many rules, regulations, studies, analyses, hearings, and public comment periods to expedite critical infrastructure. This allows Trump to hasten construction of pipelines and railways, avoiding the copious delays such projects typically face because of lawsuits by environmental groups. Trump specifically mentioned oil, gas, coal, uranium, and critical minerals, all things we have in abundance and can produce, develop, and use right here. Trump left off the list anything to do with wind and solar power because they are expensive and unreliable and China controls the market for the key elements that go into them.

Trump also withdraw the United States from the Paris climate agreement (for the second time) on his first day in office.

The Paris agreement has done, and in fact can do, nothing to prevent or slow climate change. As Trump rightly recognized, it put the United States at an economic and geopolitical disadvantage to China by throttling U.S. fossil fuel use, the lifeblood of the economy, while China increased its use of coal, oil, and natural gas.

“We will drill, baby, drill,” Trump said at his inauguration. Trump’s moves, combined with the other actions this month by banks and Trudeau’s fall in Canada, have put net zero and misanthropic global climate diktats firmly in retreat. Let’s hope the climate cult can’t revive this patient.

2.2.4 The Left’s Sin Is of Omission and Lost Opportunity (2025-02-02 16:04)

Over these first few days of the Trump administration, we’ve seen these bold measures. And it’s starting to incur a big backlash, or anger, or counter response from the Left.

And it runs something like this: well, yes, maybe this needed correcting, but it's going to be so expensive, do you understand what you're doing? You're supposed to be cost-cutters and now you're going to spend all this money to rectify something. It's almost as if, well, the person who's going a hundred miles drunk and when you pull him over the cost to arrest him, to bring him into the police station to arraign him, to indict him, to impound his car, is so much more than the damage he did by going a hundred miles and endangering people.

So, you don't arrest him, in other words. So, here's what I mean, we're told, oh, Donald Trump is spending billions of dollars to fill the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, does he have any idea—well, who emptied it? When he left office, there was about 650 million [1]barrels. It got down to 340. It's only 40—I mean, he took almost half of it.

And why did Joe Biden do that? He timed it right before the midterms and the general election. So he could lower the price of gas. There was no national emergency. There was no global tension, which the reserve was designed to preempt. So yes, it's going to be expensive to fill it back up because Joe Biden drained it for his own political selfishness.

Another thing is about [2]the wall. They're saying, well, Donald Trump wants to build the wall. Does he have any idea what it's going to cost?

Well, a couple of things. What was the cost of letting 12 million people in here? Twelve million people. We have no idea. What was the cost of allowing 80,000 to 100,000 people to die every year from cartel-imported fentanyl?

What was the cost of telling legal applicants, wait in line for six, seven years—with real talent, some of them—you can't come in because we have to handle all of this? What was the cost to tell people, our own citizens who are in social service dependencies, I'm sorry, the doctor's office is too crowded?

So, there was a cost. And it's not—that cost was much greater than building the wall. We have 700 miles that are walled pretty well now. There's gaps. The governor of Texas is helping. We have a 2,000-mile border. We need another 1,300 miles. Some of it is in rough terrain, some of it is on the banks of rivers, and we don't know exactly, what can be walled and not.

But the wall is a reaction to the waste and expenditure of the Left, and it will save money in the long term. Now, finally, there's also this question of DEI. Everybody's saying, Donald Trump just ended DEI, and he's giving them paid leave. So, Mr. Costcutter is telling people to go home and not do anything.

Well, no, he's telling them, I'm not going to be sued right now. You're going to get out right away because you're doing damage every second. And the second—anytime you're not on the job, even if we have to pay you for a while, we're saving money because your sin is not just commission—in other words, you're a, what, a Russian Soviet commissar who is overlooking every type of productive activity and say, no, you don't. That person needs to not be in the pool.

I'm disturbed about that talented person because they're the wrong race, or the wrong religion, or the wrong sex, or the wrong sexual orientation. But they also commit this sin of omission. While we spend all this money in these programs, we're taking money away from other things. It's been estimated—just to take one final example—in the National Institute of Health, $50 billion, maybe a fifth of that money is not on scientific research or medical studies to cure cancer or to cure viruses, but things like what is the race, sexual orientation, gender of this particular group, and were they treated fairly by this particular program?

So, maybe we're going to look at—spend $5 million to look at how many people got chemotherapy and see if we can just find, just we hope, we can find there is some discrimination. That's not going to get you a better chemotherapy.

And so there was a sin of omission: what we didn't do because we were spending on DEI and commission. We were discriminating against people and robbing ourselves of talent. Bottom line is the corrective.

The remedy for this malady is going to be expensive, and that's what the Left is glomming onto, but they're forgetting that the malady itself that they cause was far more expensive than the cure.

2.2.5 The Harder the Change, the Tougher the Vote (2025-02-02 16:05)

We're in a weeklong process of confirming nominees of the Donald Trump administration for these 13 Cabinet-level positions. And I think it may go on all the way through February, given the Democrats' strategy to oppose, wherever possible, the confirmations.

There's a general rule, though, that we can make sense that, I think, will apply—has applied to Pete Hegseth. It will apply to Kash Patel, especially, RFK Jr., and others.

And that is three things: The more important the Cabinet position is, the more controversial the vote; the more likely a Republican nominee is going to try to make fundamental and needed changes, the more controversial the vote; and the more that senators in swing states worry about being reelected, the more controversial vote.

Put that all together, and on the Republican side, there's usually going to be two to three votes that are going to be ambiguous: Susan Collins in Maine, Lisa Murkowski in Alaska, and here and there, Mitch McConnell. Take the Pete Hegseth recent nomination confirmation, that was only the second time in nomination history for a Cabinet post that the nominee was completely deadlocked and the vice president, in this case JD Vance, interceded to break the vote. That had only happened one time before, when Mike Pence came in and ensured that Betsy DeVos would be confirmed.

Why was that necessary? Because three senators obliterated the Republicans' 53 Senate margin; Mitch McConnell, Lisa Murkowski, and of course, Susan Collins. Looking back, we have to ask ourselves, do they really believe that Pete Hegseth is going to be a worse defense secretary than Lloyd Austin in retrospect? Lloyd Austin was AWOL for a week.

Lloyd Austin oversaw the worst catastrophe humiliation in U.S. history with the withdrawal from Kabul. Under Lloyd Austin, we had two theater-wide wars and we were very ambiguous, ourselves, on whether to support Israel fully or to give them necessary munitions. Or what was our position about Ukraine?

Give them enough to win, but not lose or just prolong that war, that cost 1 million lives? So, there's a lot of inconsistency.

And now we look at the upcoming nominations, specifically RFK and Kash Patel. And I think it's going to be very, very close again. I expect both Collins and Murkowski to vote against Kash Patel, to vote against RFK.

And it'll depend on whether Mitch McConnell is there. A couple of other things I want to point out in the past as well, Betsy DeVos, who remember, she resigned early in anger at Donald Trump after Jan. 6. But I don't think she remembers, fully, that when she was nominated, she was more controversial in 2017 than was Donald Trump.

She was the only Trump nominee that got the entire Democratic side against her. And again, Sen. Murkowski and Sen. Collins joined the Democrats. That said, after she was confirmed, she turned out to be, I think, a spectacular secretary of education. She went after the teachers union, she tried to make reforms with higher education, she looked at illicit donations from China to major university campuses.

And yet, she would not have been confirmed if it had been up to those two Republican senators. Contrast that with the most recent secretary of education, Miguel Cardona. I don't think we've seen a worse secretary. He was in power during this outbreak of antisemitic, anti-Israel violence throughout the United States on major campuses, from Oct. 7, 2023, to Jan. 20, 2025.

He said nothing. He was pressed to say, "Do you condemn the antisemitism?" He would say nothing because he was a hard leftist. Nobody really knew who he was before he was selected as education secretary. And nobody knows who he is now after four years and no one knows—we'll know where he'll be in four years.

And yet, two Republican senators suggested that—I shouldn't say suggested—they voted that he was more qualified than Betsy DeVos, whom they opposed. So, the Republican Party, once again, has a big problem that they don't have the discipline and the solidarity that the Democrats do. And they have to count on JD Vance and these particular cases to save them from themselves.

2.2.6 Death Threats Come With the Job of a Public Figure (2025-02-02 16:06)

In this first two weeks of the Trump new tenure, there's just been a flurry of news and disinformation. We've heard about all of these pardons, all of these yanking of security clearances, and now most recently, the end of security details for former Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, former national security adviser John Bolton, and former Director of the [National] Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Anthony Fauci.

And let's cut through all of the hysteria and look at a few constant themes in all of these cases. Donald Trump said, when he was pressed about this, aren't you worried that you may be culpable if any of them are harmed, since, supposedly, right-wingers don't like Fauci and the Iranians are mad at Bolton and Pompeo?

And he said, "Do we give security details forever?"

And then he pointed out in the case of John Bolton and Anthony Fauci that they're quite wealthy people and they made a lot of wealth while they were in office. Anthony Fauci and his wife were probably the highest-paid couple in the federal workforce, perhaps nearing a million dollars in annual compensation.

John Bolton had his own political action committee that traditionally raised $7 million a year. And his blockbuster bestseller, a tell-all book, damning the person who hired him, made him a lot of money. It's not true of Mike Pompeo. He did not cash in. There's another thing to remember. Donald Trump will do more to keep Pompeo and Bolton safe by confronting Iran.

And he already has told Iran that they are going to be held responsible, not just for threatening Bolton's life or Pompeo's, but his life. And remember, the recent interview with the president of Iran, what did he say? He said, "I have no intention of starting a war. I have no intention of attacking Israel. I have no intention of assassinating a U.S. official."

Why that change in attitude? It's because Donald Trump has given them an ultimatum and that will ensure the safety of, not only, Bolton and Pompeo, but Trump himself. And then there's the other question; Donald Trump was almost shot twice with, supposedly, the most impressive security detail in the world.

So, nobody can be completely protected. And so, let me get back to another point—in the case of Anthony Fauci, he has his own resources, as I said, to protect himself. His detail was scheduled to run out anyway at the end of his tenure. It was inaugurated by Joe Biden and paid for within the budget of [the Department of] Health and Human Services and the [National Institutes of Health].

So, it wasn't Donald Trump that came in and said to Anthony Fauci, "I'm going to expose you to danger." All of us in this public sphere, every pundit, every op-ed writer, college prep—all of us have received threats, existential threats. And I can attest that I have. And so, it's part of the game when you get into the political arena.

There's one other factor: Mike Pompeo, I think, is in a different category of John Bolton and Anthony Fauci. He had a longer tenure as a political appointee than Bolton did. He was very loyal to the president. But more importantly, he doesn't have the individual means—the profit-making, during or after his tenure, that puts him in a financially secure position, as Fauci and Bolton.

Second, because his tenure was much longer and because he was much more high profile in opposing the Iran deal and being vocal about [Qasem] Soleimani, he is in some jeopardy, I think, to a greater degree than either Fauci or Bolton. And so, that's something that we might want to re-examine, depending on the attitude of the Iranians.

But again, the best way to protect Bolton and Pompeo is to preemptively tell Iran that if anybody—Donald Trump, those two—anybody is in danger of an Iranian attack, the consequences will be existential for Iran. This all takes place in sort of a hysteria that Donald Trump is calling people to account in the Biden administration.

And it's part and parcel of yanking the security clearances of 51 "intelligence authorities," the pardons of the Biden family. My only advice to all of us is just take a deep breath. And when you hear these hysterical news accounts, understand that they have a political motivation behind them.

2.2.7 The Most Outrageous, Horrific Things USAID Did With Your Tax Dollars (2025-02-05 22:44)

As part of President Donald Trump's plans to crack down on wasteful government spending, his administration has halted all foreign aid funded by or through the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) while Secretary of State Marco Rubio ensures that their overseas assistance programs align with our national interests.

USAID, the country's chief international aid agency, enjoys an annual budget of over $40 billion in appropriations—much of it splurged on a host of far-left foreign causes that run counter to Trump's America First agenda. "They're not a global charity," Rubio said of USAID's spending spree. "These are taxpayer dollars. People are asking simple questions. What are they doing with the money?"

Here are some of the most horrific projects, outrageous initiatives, and biggest boondoggles USAID has financed:

1. Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

Until Trump's funding freeze, USAID was actively paying for "sex-change" procedures in Guatemala. USAID poured $2 million into Asociación Lambda, a Guatemalan LGBTQ+ activist organization, to "strengthen trans-led" activism and provide "gender-affirming health care," grant records show. Launched in April 2024, the three-year program was slated to span through the spring of 2027.

Rep. Brian Mast (R-FL), the House Foreign Affairs Committee's new chairman, released a report Tuesday exposing USAID's frivolous DEI-related expenses. Among them, Mast reported, $1 million went toward supporting French-speaking LGBTQ+ groups in West and Central Africa, $3.3 million was blown on normalizing "being LGBTQ in the Caribbean," and $425,600 helped Indonesian coffee companies become "more climate and gender friendly."

Mast said $1.5 million had gone toward promoting job opportunities for LGBTQ-identifying individuals in Serbia, $16,500 for fostering a "united and equal queer-feminist discourse in Albanian society," $47,000-plus on a "transgender opera" in Colombia, $32,000 for an LGBTQ-centered comic book in Peru, $70,880 on a musical promoting DEI in Ireland, $20,600 for a drag show in Ecuador, over $7,000 for a BIPOC speaker series in Canada, more than $39,650 to host seminars at the Edinburgh International Book Festival on "gender identity and racial equality," $80,000 on an LGBTQ community center in Slovakia, $10,000 on pressuring Lithuanian corporations to push DEI messaging, and $8,000 to promote DEI among LGBTQ+ groups in Cyprus.

USAID's Office of Chief Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Accessibility notified Congress just before Christmas that they've earmarked money (about $1 million) for several programs that will support "marginalized" groups in Indonesia, Guatemala, and Kenya. The funding notice said USAID would "engage with Indigenous-led institutions to implement an Indigenous language technology program" in Guatemala.

1. Climate Activism

In March 2023, USAID set aside up to $1 million to help disabled people in Tajikistan become "climate leaders." The grant notice solicited proposals for a "Disability-Inclusive Climate Action" project in the Central Asian country that would ensure that disabled Tajikistanis are included "in the development of climate change response and mitigation policies."

In May 2023, USAID unveiled a $1.5 million effort aimed at "empowering women to adapt to climate change in northern Kenya." Women in the area, USAID wrote, live in "traditionally patriarchal communities" and need training to join Kenya's fight against climate change. The program would "improve their participation in decision making" and "enhance adaptive capabilities to climate change."

The funding announcements followed USAID's release of their 2022-2030 climate strategy, a $150 billion "whole-of-agency approach" seeking to achieve an "equitable world with net-zero greenhouse gas emissions." Included in the effort is a pledge to expand the "diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility of the climate workforce" through taxpayer-funded programs elevating gay, female, indigenous, and disabled climate activists.

According to Mast's findings, other USAID expenditures include $446,700 to promote the expansion of atheism in Nepal, $2.5 million on the construction of electric vehicle charging stations in Vietnam's largest cities, and $55,750 for a presentation—led by female and LGBTQ+ journalists—warning about the impact of "climate change" in Argentina.

In response to Trump's mandate, USAID staffers have submitted about 200 waivers for foreign aid spending they feel should proceed during the funding freeze; however, the Rubio-led U.S. State Department rejected them all, sources told The Washington Free Beacon. Some of these requests pertained to "environmental justice," "LGBTQ+ Inclusive Development," and "Latinx politics."

One waiver made a one-week funding plea of $21.7 million within the Bureau for Resilience, Environment, and Food Security (REFS). This bureau prioritizes "equity and environmental justice through the empowerment of marginalized and underrepresented populations," an effort that includes improving "gender equality" and "digital inclusion." Another one-week funding request of $62.7 million was made within the Bureau for Inclusive Growth, Partnerships, and Innovation (IPI), which "advances the rights and inclusion of women and girls and gender-diverse individuals, and ensures marginalized and underrepresented groups are central to their own development." The request outlines the bureau's policies and strategies, including a "2023 Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment Policy" and an "LGBTQI+ Inclusive Development Policy."

1. Mass Migration

According to federal funding records, almost $45 million in USAID funds were slated to provide emergency food assistance and economic support for Venezuelan migrants in Colombia through the United Nations World Food Programme. Mast said the U.S. State Department paid for $14 million in cash vouchers for immigrants at the southern border and allocated $3.2 million toward helping migrants "readjust to life in Tunisia" after being deported.

1. 'Sexual Health' in Third World Countries

In fiscal year 2023, using U.S. "family planning funds," USAID spent massive sums of money on contraception and condoms abroad, shipping about $60.8 million worth across the globe, mainly to Africa (89 percent). Of those shipments, approximately $46,000 of oral and injectable contraceptives were distributed to the Middle East. From FY 2016 to 2022, USAID bought 3.6 billion male condoms (priced at $118.6 million) for 60 countries, according to USAID Global Health Supply Chain Program-Procurement and Supply Management (GHSC-PSM)'s "comprehensive agency report on condoms and lubricants."

According to a non-public congressional funding notice reviewed by The Washington Free Beacon, USAID "quietly" distributed $15 million worth of contraceptives and condoms in Afghanistan, which would require "some" "necessary" "coordination" with the Taliban "for programmatic purposes." USAID earmarked the cash infusion last July and transmitted the funds in August. The procurement was part of a $100 million package meant to support "basic rights and freedoms" and empower women and girls living under Taliban rule.

USAID also funded the mass production of 3D-printed "personalized" contraceptives for women in developing countries. In March 2022, scientists at the University of Texas at Austin's Pharmaceutical Engineering and 3D Printing (PharmE3D) Labs gained USAID backing to create custom, "less-intrusive" female birth control devices. "This USAID grant has the potential to make a significant impact on women's reproductive health in the developing world," Dr. Mo Maniruzzaman, an assistant professor at the university's Division of Molecular Pharmaceutics and Drug Delivery, praised. The firm's IUD research was carried out in collaboration with the work of Contraceptive Research and Development (CONRAD), an organization established by USAID.

1. EcoHealth Alliance

Between October 2009 and May 2019, USAID partnered with Wuhan lab collaborator EcoHealth Alliance on "PREDICT," a project of USAID's Emerging Pandemic Threats (EPT) program. USAID accordingly awarded EcoHealth Alliance approximately $1.1 million over that 10-year period as part of a "sub-agreement" with the Wuhan Institute of Virology "for the purpose of advancing research on critical viruses that could pose harm to human and animal health."

USAID claims that all USAID-funded activities carried out at the Wuhan lab were "consistent with the work performed in other countries that also received related funding." These activities involved testing for exposure to coronaviruses in animals and humans. The purpose of this research, according to USAID, was to identify zoonotic viruses among animal populations before they spill over (i.e. are able to infect humans) and cause potential pandemics in people.

USAID insists that they "never authorized or funded any work that aimed to increase the ability of infectious agents to cause disease by enhancing its pathogenicity or by increasing its transmissibility," otherwise known as gain-of-function research.

Under the auspices of the PREDICT project, which identified nearly 950 novel viruses, including SARS-related coronaviruses, USAID says that their "work in China" ended abruptly in 2019. Since then, no additional USAID Global Health Security funding went to Wuhan, the agency maintains.

According to EcoHealth Alliance, PREDICT partners base their research in geographic "hotspots" and focus on animals that are most likely to carry zoonotic diseases, such as bats.

EcoHealth Alliance is currently under fire for using their last federal grant to fund dangerous, gain-of-function coronavirus research at the Wuhan Institute of Virology prior to the pandemic. Led by Dr. Peter Daszak, EcoHealth has failed to report findings from their federally funded research and attempted to impede investigations into the Wuhan lab leak theory.

Then, in October 2021, despite Dazak's troubling record, USAID awarded EcoHealth Alliance a five-year $4.67 million grant. A USAID spokesperson told Fox News that this multi-million dollar award will simply implement EcoHealth Alliance's Conservation Works Activity (CWA) in southwest Liberia. CWA, an initiative honing sustainability practices in the West African country, was "competitively bid and awarded," the USAID spokesperson said. "EcoHealth Alliance has experience monitoring wildlife and understanding forest-disease dynamics in Liberia, and its consortium partners have substantial experience with protected area management and rural development in Liberia."

In 2013, EcoHealth Alliance received a three-year $2 million award from USAID to "combat disease emergence and climate change in Asia." At the time, EcoHealth Alliance argued that "intact ecosystems" are better equipped to "reduce risk of infectious disease spillover events" because a changing environment can accelerate the pace of animal-to-human contact, enabling pathogens to spill over between species populations, "a first spark in the chain of events that ignite global pandemics.

From 2011 to 2021, data from ForeignAssistance.gov shows that USAID provided $2.5 million in funding to EcoHealth through the Infectious Disease Emergence and Economics of Altered Landscapes Project. Federal watchdogs also found that USAID funneled over $854,000 in grant money to two Chinese entities (Wuhan University and Wuhan Institute of Virology) between 2014 and 2021 through a "cooperative agreement" involving EcoHealth Alliance, the "first-tier subrecipient" in this arrangement, acting as a conduit.

1. Terrorism

Courtesy of USAID, 38,000 meals went to al Qaeda-affiliated fighters in Syria. Mahmoud Al Hafyan, who ran an NGO regional office in Syria, skimmed as much as $10 million worth of meals, which we were supposed to go to Syrian civil war refugees, the USAID's inspector general's office charged. Al Hafyan allegedly allowed members of the Nusra Front, an al Qaeda-linked terrorist organization, to collect the thousands of meal kits. For "safety reasons," USAID declined to confirm the name of the NGO, which USAID awarded $122 million in funding between 2015 and 2018, according to The Washington Examiner.

In another "inadvertent" act of material support for terrorism, USAID funded irrigation canals, farming equipment, and even fertilizer used to cultivate poppy production in Afghanistan, an industry mainly benefitting Taliban narco-jihadists. In 2018, the U.S. Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction (SIGAR) released a report revealing that after USAID devoted at least $330 million in funding to failed alternative development projects (ADP), these agricultural programs "inadvertently" supported poppy cultivation. The inspector general's report pointed to USAID's rehabilitation and development of irrigation systems. Geospatial data derived from satellite imagery showed that USAID's Kandahar Food Zone program focusing on irrigation repair and construction contributed to rising levels of opium growth.

In 2023, USAID sent more money to a terrorism-tied NGO after the inspector general began investigating the cash flow. Around February of that year, USAID's oversight office began looking into a $110,000 grant issued in 2021 to Helping Hand for Relief and Development, which lawmakers warned shares ties to terrorists, including Pakistan's Falah-e-Insaniat Foundation. Still, in October 2023, USAID reportedly sent another $78,000 to that same charity.

USAID beneficiaries have called for their land to be "free" "from the filth of the most dirty Jews." In 2021, Unlimited Friends Association (UFA) director Jomaa Khadoura said Al-Aqsa should be "cleanse[d] from the impurity of the Jews." A year later, USAID celebrated the construction of a USAID-funded UFA "educational and community center" in Gaza. UFA often hosts events providing financial support to the "the families of martyrs and prisoners" and organizes meetings at their offices with prominent Hamas figures, such as Mustafa Sawwaf, who says "Israel's disappearance" is "a necessity [according to] the Koran."

USAID has directly contributed to terrorism sympathizers and abettors, giving $100,000 to an Islamic charity that's been banned in both Israel and the United Arab Emirates for providing financial assistance to Hamas as well as other terrorism-tied organizations. Under USAID's Foreign Assistance for Programs Overseas, Islamic Relief Worldwide, a known fundraiser for Hamas, was awarded a $100,000 grant in 2016 for various foreign projects.

In 2006, Israeli authorities arrested the charity's Gaza coordinator, Ayaz Ali. "Incriminating files were found on Ali's computer, including documents that attested to the organization's ties with illegal Hamas funds abroad (in the UK and in Saudi Arabia) and in Nablus," according to Israel's Ministry of Foreign Affairs. "Also found were photographs of swastikas superimposed on IDF symbols, of senior Nazi German officials, of Osama Bin Laden, and Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, as well as many photographs of Hamas military activities." Islamic Relief Worldwide was co-founded by former Clinton Foundation employee Gehad el-Haddad, who was arrested in Egypt in 2013 and sentenced for supporting the Muslim Brotherhood.

USAID gave a $78,000 grant to the West Bank-based Community Development and Continuing Education Institute (CDCEI), whose chairman, Imad Al-Zeer, attended an anniversary event commemorating the founding of the terrorist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. CDCEI's deputy chairman Mike Salman praised convicted terrorist George Abdallah, the murderer of U.S. military attaché Charles R. Ray, as a "hero fighter." On Facebook, Salman called for the release of Abdallah, who's serving a life sentence in France for the 1982 murder. Salman also celebrated six escaped Palestinian prisoners, including Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigade terror chief Zakaria Zubeidi and a Palestinian Islamic Jihad member convicted of killing an Israeli teenager in 2006.

CDCEI's other board members, such as Yasser Shaheen, applauded Hamas missile attacks on Israel, calling them "rockets of the Palestinian resistance." Shaheen mourned "hero martyr Omar Abu Layla," three days after Layla killed a rabbi and an Israel Defense Forces soldier.

Jiries Abu Ghannam, another CDCEI board member, posted about standing in "solidarity with the prisoner fighter Marwan Al-Barghouti in his 19th year in Israeli prison" for helping to instigate the first and second intifadas. CDCEI board member Rana Abu Farha celebrated the "44th anniversary" of the "beautiful and brave fighter" Dalal Al-Mughrabi, who committed a 1978 bus hijacking and massacre of 38 Israelis, including 13 children. Al-Mughrabi also killed American photographer Gail Rubin, the niece of a U.S. senator, in the attack.

For years, USAID has given the Bayader for Environment and Development Association, a Gaza charity with documented ties to Hamas, generous disbursements of grant money, including a payment in the lead-up to the October 7, 2023, terrorist attack on Israel. Bayader secured a total of nearly $1 million in funding from USAID, according to the U.S. think tank Middle East Forum (MEF). The most recent USAID grant, for $15,219, was paid out on October 1, 2023, six days before the mass slaughter of over 1,200 Israelis.

Bayader is associated with Abdul Salam Haniyeh, the son of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh, who orchestrated the pogrom. Bayader often operates in close "coordination" with the Hamas regime, according to a 2021 annual report mentioning meetings with multiple Hamas ministries. Moreover, Bayader's "project coordinator" Ahlam Jama shared social media posts mourning the death of Baha Abu al-Ata, the leader of Palestine Islamic Jihad (PIJ), a Sunni Islamist paramilitary group committed to the destruction of Israel. Bayader's financial director, Abd Rabbo Saeed Abu Haddaf, similarly mourned the passing of another PIJ militant, Ahmed Abu Dekka, whom he referred to as a "brother and friend." Abu Dekka served as deputy rocket forces commander of the Al-Quds Brigades, PIJ's armed wing.

Last year, USAID publicly praised Bayader's work in the West Bank, boasting about their partnership, and USAID official Jonathan Kamin, one of its top mission directors, even posed with the Hamas-linked nonprofit's leaders in Gaza for a photo op.

Bayader's cash is routed through a nexus of pass-through U.S. nonprofits, including the International Medical Corps (IMC), a sub-grantee of USAID. These charities act as fiscal sponsors on behalf of Bayader and effectively as arms of Hamas, helping to build the latter's infrastructure projects, per the Middle East Forum. International Medical Corps itself recently received over $68 million in funding from USAID to support its operations in Gaza.

USAID has sent more than $2.1 billion in "humanitarian assistance" to Gaza since October 7, 2023, including $230 million that purportedly "support[ed] the Palestinian people," the U.S. Office of Palestinian Affairs touted in September. Notably, in the immediate aftermath of the onslaught, the U.S. Office of Palestinian Affairs, which was opened by President Joe Biden when he entered office, tweeted a now-deleted directive instructing Israel to stand down. Congress has increased oversight over the Palestinian affairs office since it publicly opposed Israel's right to self-defense.

According to an America First Legal complaint, the release of internal U.S. State Department emails—obtained via Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests—uncovered the Biden administration's attempts to undermine Israel. In March 2021, Hady Amr, Biden's special representative for Palestinian affairs, sent an email to George Noll, head of the U.S. Office of Palestinian Affairs, discussing the "progress" they had made ahead of Israel's parliamentary elections later that month. "Got the memo on elections," Amr told Noll, per the heavily redacted message. "We are making progress. This is great."

Noll's office also awarded a $160,000 grant to Al-Quds University, which is known as a hotbed of Hamas activity and has praised the group's militants as "martyrs." Hamas has hosted a number of military rallies at Al-Quds University, including a December 2022 on-campus event that commemorated the terrorist faction's founding and called for jihadist genocide of Israelis. In an interview on Palestine TV, a political science professor at Al-Quds University asked why the world "weeps" over the "so-called Holocaust."

USAID also notably funded the U.S. Overseas Cooperative Development Council, which employs Camila Piñeiro Harnecker, the daughter of Fidel Castro's intelligence chief Manuel Piñeiro Losado. As director of the organization's "Strengthening Cooperatives" practice area, Harnecker has helped lead several USAID-sponsored events, including a 2022 "learning" symposium on "Reflection & Resonance for Cooperative Impact" and a 2023 global cooperatives conference.

Advertisement

Harnecker, who has written several books on "Rethinking Cuban Socialism," is a representative of Havana's Cooperativism Society. "I think most of the population sees the cooperative as a useful and viable tool for strengthening socialism in Cuba," she told Democracy At Work, an anti-capitalist American podcast.

Harnecker's father, Piñeiro, served as Castro's ruthless spymaster and dispenser of weapons to admiring Latin American guerrilla groups. By the mid-1970s, Piñeiro had helmed the colloquially called "Ministry of Revolution," which supplied arms, money, guidance, and a rear base to hordes of guerrilla movements in Latin America that sought to mimic Communist Cuba's model. Accordingly, Piñeiro was reportedly on a first-name basis with two generations of Latin American revolutionaries. As deputy minister of the interior, Piñeiro was placed in charge of the state security apparatus that helped spies infiltrate the Cuban exile movement in America. There, he oversaw internal security arms that surveilled and severely punished any acts of domestic opposition to Castro's dictatorship.

Meanwhile, Harnecker's mother, Marta Harnecker, is considered one of the most influential Marxist theorists among Latin American leftists. An adviser to Venezuela's president Hugo Chávez, Harnecker reportedly provided him with the theoretical framework for what he called "21st century socialism."

2.2.8 'Rude, Aggressive, Unhinged': Democratic Congresswomen Force Their Way Into Meeting With Speaker Johnson (2025-02-05 22:58)

The unhinged Democratic reactions to Elon Musk and his use of the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE) continue. On Wednesday, Reps. Judy Chu (D-CA) and Gwen Moore (D-WI) stormed into Speaker Mike Johnson's (R-LA) office, interrupting his meeting with Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent to demand answers.

Axios, in a headline fittingly highlighting how the congresswomen "crash[ed]" the meeting, [1]shared details from all sides involved:

A pair of House Democrats showed up uninvited to House Speaker [2]Mike Johnson's (R-La.) office Wednesday to elbow into his meeting with Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent.

...

Driving the news: Reps. [3]Gwen Moore (D-Wisc.) and [4]Judy Chu (D-Calif.) both showed up at Johnson's office hoping to grill Bessent on DOGE staffers [5]being granted access to sensitive Treasury information.

- The two Democrats were allowed to enter and meet with Johnson, but Chu told reporters that Bessent "wasn't in the room — we were talking to the speaker the whole time."
- Moore alleged that Bessent was sent out "through the back door just like the data."
- Johnson, according to Moore, said "he was trying to find out" what was happening at Treasury, adding, "I said that was very distressing to me, that even you don't know."

What we're hearing: A person who saw the interaction accused the Democrats of "incredibly rude, extremely aggressive and frankly unhinged behavior."

- "The Speaker was more than gracious and allowed the members into his personal office to hear their concerns," the person said.
- Graeme Crews, a spokesperson for Chu, said in a statement to Axios that she "never barged into anything. She politely joined the meeting already occurring and the Speaker invited her in for a brief, civil discussion.
- Crews, who accompanied Chu, added, "We just walked in, no staffer and no security stopped us.

From what is out there about the incident, it indeed seems like there was "incredibly rude, extremely aggressive and frankly unhinged behavior" involved from the congresswomen. One might wonder why Johnson would let them in to begin with, but the person cited referred to him as "more than gracious," which sounds about right.

While Chu's spokesperson said they "never barged into anything" and referred to the conversation in more charitable terms, that doesn't make such behavior the way to go. The same goes even if "no staffer and no security stopped" them.

Another Democrat, Rep. Linda Sánchez (D-CA) posted her support for Chu and Moore via a quoted repost of CNN's Sarah Ferris, who described the congresswomen in part as having "forced their way into Speaker Johnson's office in middle of Bessent meeting."

Sánchez even began by claiming she was "[p]roud of these fellow Democrats. In typical loser Democratic fashion, she referred to the claims that the women were "rude" and "aggressive," words that can be used to describe a person of any sex or race, as sexist and racist.

"Attempts to silence them with sexist or racist tropes like 'rude' or 'aggressive' won't work," she claimed, adding that "the American people deserve answers!"

Proud to see my fellow Ways and Means women [6]@RepJudyChu & [7]@RepGwen-Moore demand accountability for Elon Musk's takeover of the Treasury Department. Attempts to silence them with sexist or racist tropes like "rude" or "aggressive" won't work — the American people deserve answers! [8]<https://t.co/5Fzj2oUQd7>— Rep. Linda Sánchez (@RepLindaSanchez) [9]February 5, 2025

As much as Democrats may want to celebrate each other, that doesn't mean Chu and Moore handled trying to have such a meeting is the way to win over the American people. Even the Daily Beast, a leftist outlet, went with the headline of how "[10]Dem Reps Storm Johnson's Office to Protest Elon Musk's Hostile Takeover," with the use of "storm[ing]" not exactly painting the congresswomen in the best light. The article itself also notes how they "forced their way in."

The congresswomen's own social media posts and their own language communicate a forceful behavior, with Moore posting a photo of herself outside of the speaker's office, highlighting how she was there to "DEMAND answers" from Johnson.

Chu and Moore also took to more theatrics by speaking outside the speaker's office, where they lamented that they were denied access to Bessent. In a post of their remarks, Moore even tried to go for a bit of a pun, noting that they "snuck [Bessent] in the same way they're stealing our data: the back door."

I am here to DEMAND answers from [11]@SpeakerJohnson at his meeting with Scott Bessent regarding sensitive taxpayer information being handed over to an unelected billionaire donor. [12]pic.twitter.com/CbTLVnvERV— Rep. Gwen Moore (@RepGwenMoore) [13]February 5, 2025

We were denied access to meet with Treasury Secretary Bessent.

They snuck him in the same way they're stealing our data: the back door.

Speaker Johnson ADMITS that even he doesn't know what Elon Musk and his cronies are doing with your sensitive information. [14]pic.twitter.com/gkB7kR8vBT— Rep. Gwen Moore (@RepGwenMoore) [15]February 5, 2025

For all these comments about private and sensitive data, with Moore even levying accusations about "stealing... data," Musk has responded at length over X.

On Tuesday, he put out a post indicating that "Doge has not looked at, nor is there any interest in, private financial data," asking, "What would we even do with it?"

"The outgoing payment review process just looks at potential fraud and wasteful spending to organizations," Musk's post further explaining, wondering why "Corrupt politicians are the ones complaining."

Doge has not looked at, nor is there any interest in, private financial data. What would we even do with it?

The outgoing payment review process just looks at potential fraud and wasteful spending to organizations.

Corrupt politicians are the ones complaining. I wonder why?— Elon Musk (@elon-musk) [16]February 4, 2025

Currently, Johnson's pinned post to his X account is also a clip from his Wednesday press conference earlier in the day responding to "misinformation and overreaction" about President Donald Trump and Musk's efforts on government efficiency.

There's a lot of misinformation and overreaction about President Trump's efforts to make the government efficient.

Here are the facts: [17]pic.twitter.com/2mGD76TRn1— Speaker Mike Johnson (@SpeakerJohnson) [18]February 5, 2025

2.2.9 Gun Owners of America Files Lawsuit Challenging the Dumbest Firearm Law In the Nation (2025-02-05 23:02)

Gun Owners of America (GOA) and the Coalition of New Jersey Firearm Owners have filed a lawsuit challenging New Jersey's ban on hollow point ammo, one of the dumbest gun control laws in the nation.

The law prohibits people from carrying hollow point ammunition outside of their homes. However, they are allowed to use it inside their homes. GOA noted that "Despite being widely used by law enforcement and civilians across the country for personal protection, New Jersey's draconian laws prohibit the possession of commonly used hollow point ammunition outside the home, leaving residents to carry substandard full metal jacket ammunition instead."

Erich Pratt, Senior Vice President of GOA, [1]argued that the state "does not get to decide for Americans what kind of books they may read, what brands of firearms they may own, or what kind of ammunition they can use.”

New Jersey’s unconstitutional ban on hollow points for self-defense outside the home is yet another example of anti-gun politicians disarming law-abiding citizens while criminals ignore the law. Self-defense is an enumerated right, and GOA will fight to ensure that New Jerseyans are no longer left vulnerable due to senseless restrictions.

The [2]lawsuit argues that New Jersey’s law does not meet the historical precedent standard mandated by the Supreme Court’s ruling in New York Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen and that hollow point ammo is commonly used by those who carry firearms.

“New Jersey forbids a person from publicly possessing the most effective types of self-defense ammunition, despite the hollow point’s overwhelming popularity,” the complaint states, pointing out that the Garden State is the only one “to criminalize the ‘bear[ing]’ of hollow point ammunition.”

The plaintiffs further argued that New Jersey’s law “operates to deprive ‘the people’ of their Second Amendment rights while outside the home, notwithstanding the Second Amendment’s protections.”

The lawsuit points out that the ban runs afoul of the Supreme Court’s rulings in Bruen and District of Columbia v. Heller, which “did not differentiate between regulations governing ammunition and regulations governing the firearms themselves.”

In referencing Bruen’s historical precedent requirement, the lawsuit further notes that “There was never an early American tradition of prohibiting the public carry of any type of ammunition, much less hollow point or self-defense ammunition.”

Kerry Slone, founder of We the Female, told Townhall:

Placing any restrictions on access to self-defense tools such as hollow point ammunition doesn’t prevent violent crimes. It does, however, prevent women from having the ability to defend themselves effectively. This is especially important in a state like New Jersey, which has a reputation for failing to protect women from violent assailants. One would think New Jersey's, elected representatives would have learned this after their oppressive policies were the reason Carole Bowne's abuser/stalker murdered her because the state's corrupt government prevented her from having legal access to a firearm.

[3]Carol Browne was murdered by her abusive ex-boyfriend in 2017. She applied for a gun permit as was required by New Jersey law. Tragically, the state slow-walked the process, and the abuser killed and dismembered her.

Not only is New Jersey's law unconstitutional, it demonstrates why anti-gunner politicians should not be allowed to pass laws regulating firearms: They simply do not know enough about the topic to legislate effectively.

If you're a gun owner reading this, you already know why it is ridiculous for a state government to allow people to carry full metal jacket ammunition while banning hollow points.

For those who don't, hollow points are designed to expand when they hit the target. This creates a larger wound, which increases the likelihood of stopping an assailant quickly. On the other hand, full metal jacket rounds do not expand. Instead, they maintain their shape and pass straight through the target.

This makes it far more likely that an individual using a firearm to defend themselves against an attacker will also hit innocent bystanders as the round goes through the assault and any other barrier before finally stopping.

Imagine someone is forced to shoot a mugger in a parking lot. If this person used full metal jacket rounds, it could go through the attacker and into a nearby store and hit a customer. This is how much these rounds can penetrate.

Since hollow points are designed to stop inside the target, there is a reduced risk of harming innocents.

To put it simply, the rocket scientists who came up with this law are actually placing more people in danger by forcing people to carry full metal jackets instead of hollow points. So, not only is the law an unconstitutional violation of the right to keep and bear arms, it raises the odds that innocent people will be harmed. This is yet another example of how gun control only endangers people instead of saving lives.

2.2.10 This Dem Rep Made Everyone Dumber at the DOGE Oversight Hearing This Week (2025-02-14 08:06)

he Department of Government Efficiency Oversight Subcommittee [1]hearing on February 12 certainly wasn't dull. We had "dk" pics being whipped out, another Democratic congresswoman peddling election denialism, and overall Elon Musk derangement syndrome.

Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-GA) chairs this subcommittee on DOGE, so you knew fireworks would fly. Rep. Jasmine Crockett (D-TX), who is Greene's archnemesis on the Hill, did what she did best: spew nonsense around the room like Trump "allegedly" being elected and casting Mr. Elon Musk as an unelected bureaucrat. Yes, admittedly, this isn't Crockett at her worst, but such talk, I was told, was in support of armed rebellion.

WATCH: Low IQ Rep. Crockett says Donald Trump was "allegedly elected" & calls Elon Musk an "unelected bureaucrat."

"If you are trying to conduct audits & figure out where the waste, fraud & abuse is, I don't know why you would go to some tech guy..." [2]pic.twitter.com/q4RTuHPqlw— Breaking911 (@Breaking911) [3]February 12, 2025

Mazie Hirono is breathing a sigh of relief.

Jasmine is officially the dumbest lawmaker on the Hill.

This jobs report consists entirely of data from before President Trump took office.

I guess I should thank you for pointing out the failure of Bidenomics.
[4]<https://t.co/p3jpsBeNEw>— Alex Pfeiffer (@Pfeiffer47) [5]February 7, 2025

Then, Rep. Robert Garcia (D-CA) called Elon a “dk,” and did not shy away from using charged rhetoric to voice his outrage over DOGE doing its job in uncovering all of the liberal pork projects that have bled taxpayers for years. Oh, and his “dk pic” was just an image of Mr. Musk during his remarks. These people truly have nothing.

CNN: “Do you think that calling Elon Musk a dick is effective messaging?”

REP. GARCIA: “Well, he is a dick...The American public wants us to bring ACTUAL WEAPONS to this bar fight!”

These people are unwell & dangerous. [6]<https://t.co/hqSDMqlq47>
[7]pic.twitter.com/WucneFIJfv— Breaking911 (@Breaking911) [8]February 12, 2025

Rep. Garcia brings a “d*ck pic” to the DOGE subcommittee hearing but presents a picture of Elon Musk.

He says Elon is giving back “absolutely nothing” with his work on DOGE.

This is false. According to the U.S. debt clock, DOGE has already saved the American taxpayer over 86.6... [9]pic.twitter.com/x8SrbkGS0k— Media Lies (@MediasLies) [10]February 12, 2025

Finally, and I must agree, it’s beyond words that the person testifying in defense of all the wasteful spending was a blind man.

Not to be insensitive. But it’s beyond ironic that the Democrat’s witness defending the govt’s horrific record on finding waste and fraud.. is an actual blind man.

As an aside, DOGE, keep doing your thing, fellas:

2.2.11 Ohio Dems Want to Regulate Ejaculation. Yeah, This State Is Going to Be Red Forever. (2025-02-14 08:07)

What the hell is this? I get why Ohio Democrats are doing this, trying to be cute with the whole 'regulate our bodies' narrative that no one cared about in 2024. Abortion and female voters did not save Democrats, who obsess over the weirdest issues that will keep this party in the political wilderness. I'm not complaining—it's just funny that we were the ones who were framed as being 'weird,' specifically Vice President JD Vance. Again, when you dug just a little, it was Tim Walz and the rest of the Democrats who proved to be the aberrant clowns of the 2024 cycle. And now, this bill targeting ejaculating males only reinforces that Democrats are unserious, leaderless, rudderless, and without a central message (via [1]Newsweek):

NEW: Ohio lawmakers have proposed a new law that bans men from ejaculating without intent of conception, would fine men up to $10,000 per ejaculation.

The bill was brought forward by Democratic State reps Anita Somani and Tristan Rader.

Men would be charged with a felony under... [2]pic.twitter.com/yKb7Q1rZIY—Collin Rugg (@CollinRugg) [3]February 13, 2025

A bill proposed to the Ohio statehouse will make male ejaculation without intent to have a baby, a fineable offense of up to $10,000.

The bill has been proposed by State Representatives Anita Somani and Tristan Rader, who wrote it to point out what they see as the absurdity of rules that control women's bodies but do not control men's. It has not been formally introduced to the House Floor yet.

Per Somani and Rader, men would face a $1,000 first offense, $5,000 second offense, and $10,000 subsequent offense fine to "discharge semen or genetic material without intent to fertilize an embryo."

To the shock of no one, this bill [4]is dead on arrival. The fact that it was even put forward is an embarrassment. However you feel about abortion, it does deal with ending human life. This bill is about sperm and regulating it, which is creepy, weird, and all sorts of 'WTF.'

The Republicans are focusing on reducing regulations, getting a budget passed, bringing down the cost of living, getting our fiscal house in order with the help of the Department of Government Efficiency, re-establishing primacy aboard, and bringing back the excellent job-creating and investing climate under the first Trump presidency.

Democrats in Ohio are obsessed with sperm. They want to establish the sperm police. What a bunch of weirdos.

Please keep doing this, Democrats. You're only working to help the GOP have a generational grip on power.

2.2.12 Two Independent Journalists Took a Blowtorch to the 'Censorship Industrial Complex' (2025-02-14 08:08)

These two have been up on the Hill before outlining the increasingly illiberal and creepy censorship mentality that's engulfed the Democratic Party, the progressive activist wing, and its leeching into the mainstream media that have pundits who defend this Politburo nonsense. Michael Shellenberger of Public and Matt Taibbi of Racket News have been two of the most visible independent reporters who have been made uneasy by the actions of the Biden administration.

On Wednesday, both reporters testified before the House Judiciary Committee on the "Censorship Industrial Complex." The entire hearing will be posted below. However, their opening statements mentioned a familiar agency whose actions have been uncovered, thanks to the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE), which would be USAID. Both had lengthy opening remarks, with Taibbi noting that right-wing misinformation does exist, but growing up a Democrat, he wasn't afraid of differing views, even nutty ones. He felt his arguments in the arena of debate could and would neutralize bad ideas from taking hold.

Instead, Democrats and liberals want no debate and have weaponized the institutions of government to go after their political enemies. Taibbi and Shellenberger were part of a crew of reporters who analyzed and wrote about the Twitter Files, the extensive and chilling system of censorship and thought control built at the social media company with the help of the FBI. After these stories about the censorship operation were published, the IRS opened an investigation into Taibbi. These activities ceased and will continue to be dismantled, thanks to Trump retaking the presidency in 2024.

Here are Taibbi's opening remarks, provided by Mr. 'Camus' who also transcribed it:

Opening statement by Matt Taibbi: "Two years ago when Michael and I first testified before your weaponization of government subcommittee, Democratic members called us so called journalists, suggested we were bought off scribes, and questioned our ethics and our loyalties. When we...

- Camus (@newstart_2024) February 12, 2025

Two years ago when Michael and I first testified before your weaponization of government subcommittee, Democratic members called us so called journalists, suggested we were bought off scribes, and questioned our ethics and our loyalties. When we tried to answer, we were told to shut up, take our take off our tinfoil hats, and remember two things."

"One, there is no digital censorship, and two, if there is digital censorship, it's for our own good. I was shocked. I thought the whole thing had to be a mistake. There was no way the party that I gave votes to my whole life was now pro censorship. Then last year, I listened to John Kerry, whom I voted for, talked to the World Economic Forum."

"Speaking about this information, he said, quote, our first amendment stands as a major block to our ability to, quote, hammer it out of existence. He complained that it's really hard to govern because people self select where they go for their news, which makes it quote, much harder to build consensus."

"Now, I defended John Kerry when people said he looks French, but Marie Antoinette would have been embarrassed by this speech. He was essentially complaining that the peasants are self selecting their own sources of media. What's next?"

"Letting them make up their own minds? Lastly, building consensus may be a politician's job, but it's not mine as a citizen or as a journalist. In fact, making it hard to govern is exactly the media's job. The failure to understand this is why we have a censorship problem. This is an Alamo moment for the First Amendment."

"Most of America's closest allies as both, Rupa and Michael have pointed out, have already adopted draconian speech laws. We are surrounded. The EU's new Digital Services Act is the most comprehensive censorship law ever instituted in a Western democratic society. Ranking member Raskin, you don't have to go as far as Russia or China to find people jailed for speech. Our allies in England now have an online safety act, which empowers the government to jail people for nebulous offenses like false communication or causing psychological harm."

"Germany, France, Australia, Canada, and other nations have implemented similar ideas. These laws are totally incompatible with our system. Some of our own citizens have been harassed or even arrested in some of these countries, but our government has not stood up for them. Why? Because many of our bureaucrats believe in these laws."

"Take USAID. Many Americans are now in an uproar because they they learned about over $400,000,000 going to an organization called Inner News, whose chief Jeanne Bourgeault boasted to Congress about training hundreds of thousands of people in journalism. But her views are almost identical to Carrie's. She gave a talk once about building trust and combating misinformation in India during the pandemic. She said that after months of a really beautifully unified COVID nineteen message, vaccine enthusiasm rose to 87%."

"But when, quote, mixed information on vaccine efficacy got out, hesitancy ensued. We're paying this person to train journalists, and she doesn't know that the press does not exist to promote unity or political goals like vaccine enthusiasm. That's propaganda, not journalism. Bourdieu also once said that to fight bad content, we need to work really hard on exclusionless or inclusionless and, quote, really need to focus our ad dollars toward what she called the good news."

"Again, if you don't know the fastest way to erode trust in media is by having government sponsor exclusion lists, you shouldn't be getting a dollar in taxpayer money, let alone 476,000,000 of it. And USAID is just a tiny piece of the censorship machine Michael and I saw across that long list of agencies."

"Collectively, they bought up every part of the news production line, sources, think tanks, research, fact checking, anti disinformation, commercial media scoring, and when all else fails, straight up censorship. It is a giant closed messaging loop whose purpose is to transform the free press into exactly that consensus machine. There is no way to remove this rod surgically. The whole mechanism has to go."

"Is there right wing misinformation? Hell, yes. It exists in every direction. But I grew up a Democrat and don't remember being afraid of it. At the time, we figured we didn't need censorship because we thought we had the better argument."

"Obviously, many of you lack the same confidence. You took billions of dollars from taxpayers and you blew it on programs whose entire purpose was to tell them they're wrong about things they can see with their own eyes. You sold us out. And until these rather tires tiresome questions are answered, this problem is not fixed.

Thank you."

Here are parts of Mr. Shellenberger's opening remarks:

Chairman Jordan, Ranking Member Raskin, and members of the Committee: thank you for inviting my testimony.

Nearly two years ago, I testified and provided evidence to a Subcommittee of this Committee about the existence of a Censorship Industrial Complex, a network of government agencies, including the Department of Homeland Security, government contractors, including Stanford Internet Observatory, and Big Tech social media platforms that conspired to censor ordinary Americans and elected officials alike for holding disfavored views.

The latest is the United States Agency for International Development, or USAID. Last October we published a report that noted that USAID had funded the creation of a Censorship Industrial Complex in Brazil, complete with third-party ``fact checkers,' ' committees of experts in charge of deciding for the entire society what the truth is on any given issue.[iv] And, after I published the Twitter Files - Brazil, last spring, the Attorney General of Brazil opened a formal criminal investigation of me, which is ongoing.

In 2021, USAID even published a so-called ``Disinformation Primer' ' that called for ``advertiser outreach' ' to ``disrupt the funding and financial incentive to disinform.' ' Such ``advertiser outreach' ' was precisely the advertiser boycott strategy used by groups with ties to the US intelligence community. These groups, with uncritical support and amplification from the media, were able to use this strategy to successfully get Facebook and Twitter to censor more content.

In my March 2023 testimony before the House Select Committee on the Weaponization of the Federal Government, I described the emergence of the ``Censorship Industrial Complex' ' comprised of a vast and coordinated network of government agencies, academic institutions, and private organizations that had been working together to suppress lawful speech under the guise of combating ``misinformation' ' and ``disinformation.' '

We still do not know how much money other US government agencies have routed to censorship advocacy, in part because they hide the money through multiple shell organizations. An investigative journalist from Romania in 2021 denounced USAID for ``hiding the flow of media development money'' to supposedly independent journalists around the world through an ``offshore structure... US public money -> Delaware -> Eastern Europe -> Sierra Leone -> Mexico.''

The CIA whistleblower whose complaint became the basis for the 2019 impeachment of President Trump relied upon reporting by a supposedly independent investigative news organization called the Organized Crime and Corruption Reporting Project (OCCRP), which appears to have effectively operated as an arm of USAID. In a censored 2024 documentary by German television broadcaster NDR, a USAID official confirmed that USAID approves OCCRP's ``annual work plan'' and approves new hires of ``key personnel.''

The journalistic collaboration behind the documentary revealed that OCCRP's original funding came from the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs of the State Department and quotes a USAID official who says, OCCRP founder Drew Sullivan is ``just nervous about being linked with law enforcement. If people who are going to give you information think you're just a cop, maybe it's a problem.''

It appears that this was the beginning of OCCRP's practice of hiding US government funding.

OCCRP does not operate like a normal news organization. Its goals appear to include interfering in foreign political matters, including elections, with an eye toward causing regime change. Sullivan told NDR that his organization had ``probably been responsible for five or six countries changing over from one government to another government... and getting prime ministers indicted or thrown out.''

As such, it appears that the CIA, USAID, and OCCRP were all involved in the impeachment of President Trump in ways similar to the regime change operations that all three organizations engage in abroad.

This one example fits the pattern. The government employees and contractors who have engaged in information operations and censorship advocacy over the last decade have been overwhelmingly focused on silencing populists. That is as true in the United States as it is in Europe and Brazil.

Two years ago, I described the reasons for this. Since then, our understanding of the development of the Censorship Industrial Complex over the last two years has deepened.

Shellenberger said that while this censorship push is in retreat in the United States, it remains systematic in Europe, Australia, Britain, and Brazil.

2.2.13 We Are Totally Going to Crush the Democrats' Puny Lawfare Offensive (2025-02-14 08:09)

Everybody needs to calm down and take a deep breath – the DOGE revolution is not in danger because a bunch of obscure district court judges in blue jurisdictions have signed ridiculous temporary orders purporting to limit President Donald Trump's ability to actually be president. Don't listen to the black pill battalion. We're not losing this fight. We're going to win it. Listen to the vice president – JD Vance has gotten a lot of heat because he pointed out that this is a legal farce. As usual, he's right. And, to the extent there is a constitutional crisis – which there isn't – it was brought on by uppity jurists hoping to distract the administration from its mission by embroiling it in a separation of powers fight. Except that's not going to happen. The President and JD Vance are not going to fall for it. What they will do is use the judiciary to police its own misbehaving members, and when it's all done, these legal fights will solidify the administration's ability to act decisively in the future.

There are a few things non-lawyers need to understand. The first is that this nonsense will not stand. There are many reasons why, but the most important reason is that these emergency temporary restraining orders (and the injunctions that will likely follow) are legally meritless. Once a serious court gets a look at them, they will end up on the ash heap of judicial history.

The next thing to understand is that after this fight, Donald Trump will be more secure in his ability to be president than he has ever been. This kind of nationwide injunction will go extinct like the dinosaurs, passenger pigeons, and alternative pronouns in government correspondence. Why? The most obvious reason is that the orders are legally ridiculous, but the other key reason is that Chief Justice John Roberts is fully aware of the danger to his institution that this phenomenon poses.

We're going to win this fight. We just have to fight smart.

Let's back up a little. Doesn't it seem like these orders are crazy? Your gut is correct – they are crazy. They are also obnoxious, as they are the result of blatant judge shopping. Have you noticed that just about every one of these judges is an Obama or Biden appointee? That's not an accident. They didn't just get lucky in the judge lottery. It's no coincidence that one of the judges is a big donor of Democrat freak Sheldon Whitehouse – he's not black, so they might have met at Sheldon's beach club. The leftists find a venue where they know they will have a sympathetic ear who doesn't care about the law. Next, they file a nonsense pleading and get the handpicked judge to sign their proposed order – yes, lawyers often draft orders and give them to the judge to sign. Right at the threshold, these cases are the result of cynical gamesmanship. But it gets worse.

I was an active lawyer for 30 years, including in the federal courts. I've never gotten an emergency temporary restraining order. I don't know anyone who's gotten an emergency temporary restraining order. The rules for getting emergency temporary restraining orders are so onerous, and the judges so reluctant to grant them, that it's an exception to the exceptions-level kind of thing. But it's easy when you're a Democrat suing Donald Trump! For litigants who are not suing Donald Trump, there is a whole list of things you have to show just to get a regular restraining order, much less one issued at 1 AM on a Saturday morning when the opposing party hasn't even had the opportunity to respond. Among those showings is "irreparable harm." In one order, the anti-Trump plaintiffs claimed that the "irreparable harm" was that they weren't going to be able to read a government website about some DEI nonsense and, therefore, their patients were going to die. That's simply crazy. Yet, the judge nodded and signed.

Another requirement is standing. You must have suffered or be about to suffer an injury that would allow you to sue. Many of the suing groups can't show any kind of individualized injury. The judges don't even care.

Nor do they care about the consequences of their usurpations of executive power. You have judges saying that cabinet officers can't have computer access to what's going on in their own department. Well, that seemed a little too insane, but the revised order said that the secretary can have access, but the secretary's people cannot, as if the secretary is going to sit down at a terminal and personally do data entry and deletions for the entire department. This is craziness. The judicial branch cannot micromanage the executive branch. But that's what these orders purport to do.

Advertisement

As a lawyer, watching this – much like watching a lot of the lawfare they have waged against Trump both in and out of office – is difficult because it's utterly insane. You need to understand that the stuff you see happening with Trump and his administration never happens in non-Trump court cases. Not ever. Not even a little bit. And for normal people – that is, not-lawyers – this must look even worse. Just a few months ago, you elected Donald Trump to do all the things he's doing, and now you have a bunch of handpicked pipsqueaks in robes ordering that he may be president, but he can't do any presidenting.

So, the question is, how should Trump react to this stuff? Exactly how he has been – by playing it smart and playing the long game that will get victory over these tactics and solidify his position for the future. That requires the patience to use the legal process to work this through. We're not going to fix it; we're going to let Chief Justice John Roberts get his own house in order. It's going to take time. It's going to be annoying. But it will be successful, and we will be much better off when it's over.

Conservatives, being the abused life partners of American politics, are always suspicious and on edge, and a lot of them were wondering why Trump just doesn't tell these ridiculous robed rejects to go pound judicial sand. After all, as it has been famously observed, Chief Justice Roberts has no divisions.

The regime media, and the Democrats, to the limited extent they are different, absolutely freaked out when JD Vance stated the obvious – Donald Trump could just refuse to obey these orders. The courts can't stop him through hard power; the fact is that the only power the courts have is the respect the other branches grant it, respect that is earned by observing norms and ruling fairly. The fact is that the ultimate power of one branch to simply refuse to accept the overreach of another branch is, itself, one of the checks and balances within our constitutional system.

Advertisement

Democrats, the regime media, and other dumb people will tell you that that's not a thing. This week, they're demanding total obedience to whatever any court says at any time instead of the opposite position they held before January 20, 2025. But even they agree that, at some point, the judiciary can overstep such that the executive is not obligated to obey. Imagine that some judge in East Dakota ruled that Pam Bondi was constitutionally obligated to charge Donald Trump with treason for talking to Vladimir Putin on the phone and ordered that a charge that he wrote be filed and then found Donald Trump guilty of it on an emergency basis at 3:30 in the morning on a Wednesday and that Trump must be taken into custody in the next 15 minutes. Sure, most of the lawyers on cable and social media would think this was cool, but they are idiots. Normal people and perhaps 20 % to 30 % of Democrats would agree that Donald Trump would not be required to honor that ruling and surrender at the local federal penitentiary. Everyone agrees that there's some line where the executive branch shakes its head and says, "No, you can't do that, judicial branch." The question is whether we are there yet.

We're not even close to being there yet. Donald Trump has not disobeyed these dumb orders, nor should he disobey them for now. While it's frustrating for us to watch the Democrats try to keep DOGE from uncovering their massive fraud, this is the smart way to proceed. It's smart to give the judiciary a chance to correct its own errors, and Chief Justice Roberts and the Supreme Court will do that. He's an institutionalist. There is no way he will put his institution at risk of being sidelined by jumping on the hand grenade that is these ridiculous rulings.

Advertisement

Trump is smart to let the judiciary fix its own mistakes. Keep in mind that part of the reason the Democrats sought these orders is to provoke Trump to act precipitously and to disobey the courts, thereby creating the constitutional crisis they claim exists but really doesn't. Instead,

Donald Trump should read the orders narrowly and work around them where he can. His people should appeal all of them and let the system do its job. Eventually, these silly decrees will all get tossed out and there will be established precedent banning such antics in the future. SCOTUS has no desire to referee a couple of hundred stupid district court orders on micro-topics, like requiring the DOGE people to put new coversheets on all the TPS reports before they go out.

It's going to take time and it's going to be frustrating. For the enemy, that's a feature and not a bug. We just have to be chill; it's a Zen thing. But that doesn't mean we have to do nothing. Administration leaders like JD Vance should continue to point out the obvious – that these antics are lame and that the executive branch holds all the cards. We should mock these ridiculous rulings, which will make normal people mad at the Democrats. Using his superpower of making his enemies take up the banner of the worst causes possible, Trump has the Democrats loudly siding with bureaucrats and corruption. Finally, the administration and its supporters should loudly publicize the unethical aspects of this campaign, like the connection between some of the judges and NGOs, as well as partisan anti-Trump comments by some of these judges that demonstrate partiality. When a judge rules, he puts his credibility on the line, and some of these judges don't appear to have much. Let America see their bias in living color.

Mostly, we need to calm down and wait. They're not going to stop us. These orders will fall. It won't be tomorrow, but it will be soon enough. When it's all over, Trump is going to be in an even stronger position because this weapon will be taken from the Democrat arsenal. And that's a big problem for them because they really don't have much else to throw at us.

2.2.14 Wisdom From the Founders: Ignorance and Freedom (2025-02-14 08:10)

"If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be."—Thomas Jefferson

Another brilliant quote from Jefferson. First of all, to be "free," a people need to know what "freedom" is and, more importantly, where it comes from. Licentiousness is not freedom, yet that is what the Left, in the guise of the Democratic Party, is trying to teach American today. As Edmund Burke so wisely pointed out, "It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things, that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters.” People aren’t “free” if they can’t control their own passions and lusts; they are enslaved by them, and will eventually be destroyed by such.

Freedom comes from God, Who is the source of all things. “All men are created equal, and endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness.” That is from the American Declaration of Independence, of course, written by Thomas Jefferson. Notice that the “Creator” “endowed” us with certain rights, and one of those is “Liberty.” Freedom’s source is God. He defines it, tells us how to obtain it, the restrictions thereon, and how to maintain it. It’s why He is the greatest enemy of the totalitarian Left. The less we know about this freedom (“ignorance” in the Jeffersonian quote above), the less chance we have of obtaining freedom, or being “in a state of civilization.” Barbarians—those who live selfish, uncivilized, unvirtuous, ungodly lives, cause others to live in fear. Those who live in fear do not live in freedom.

Thus, Jefferson is 100 % accurate. No society ignorant of the true Source and nature of freedom, has been, or ever will be, truly free. It is absolutely no surprise, to the wise, that the farther America, and the world, has moved away from the principles Jefferson enunciated in the Declaration of Independence, the more barbaric, and less free, people have become. They don’t know God. Thus, they won’t know, or have, true freedom.

Elon Musk recently said, “If you get a trillion dollars of economic growth, and you cut the budget deficit by a trillion - between now and next year - there is no inflation... And if the government is not borrowing as much, it means that interest costs decline. So, everyone’s mortgage, their car payment, their credit card bills, their student debt, the monthly payments drop. That’s a fantastic scenario!”

Both Donald Trump and Elon Musk are/have been businessmen and thus know how to operate within a budget, and indeed, that any business or organization must do so. Politicians rarely worry about it because they are spending other people’s money and have an endless supply. Government can either borrow what it wants or print money. Both of those scenarios are, except in emergencies and for only very short periods of time, very harmful and inflationary to an economy. Witness the Biden years.

What Musk is proposing in the quote above is common-sense economics for government, something every government should have, but rarely does. Frankly, Trump didn’t do it very well his first term, but he seems serious about it now. But cutting government spending is the last thing the Democrats and the Deep State want. Government spending buys votes—the highest priority to any politician, especially to Democrats. Also, Democrats, being Marxist Leftists, believe that government is the solution to all of mankind’s ills, especially if run by them. Economizing government is utterly anathema to those people. Thus, they are screaming, hollering, crying, cursing, lying, and doing everything they can to hinder what Trump and Musk are trying to do.

But, from what I gather, the American people—by and large—are in favor of this much-needed government diet. Most people have enough sense to realize that every entity must have at least a measure of frugality and cannot wastefully spend money it doesn't have. To be $36 trillion in debt is obscene. Only the ignorant don't know that. They are the ones who will be enslaved to government.

Advertisement

And they will continue to vote Democrat. They want their free lunch. Seventy-five million of them voted for the most incompetent, freedom-denying, yea, frightening Presidential candidate in our nation's history. Yes, ignorance and freedom are, as Mr. Jefferson said, directly related.

But the rest of us don't want to pay for it any more.

The Left, i.e., the Democratic Party and the Deep State, have a vested interest in keeping the American people ignorant of the above common sense economic principles. They have controlled the Department of Education for generations now, and thus countless millions are completely ignorant of the basics of economics, and other principles of limited government, virtuous republicanism, and the true source and proper restrictions upon freedom. Mr. Trump's biggest battle with the Left will probably be over the Department of Education. He has called for the DOE to be "closed immediately." The Left will fight that to its dying breath. Ignorance is the only thing that keeps them going.

An ignorant people—either willfully or unwillingly ignorant—will eventually be enslaved by a totalitarian government, by demagogues who will buy their votes with their own money to their own destruction. No nation can be, ever has been, or ever will be ignorant and free. Jefferson had it exactly right. And that applies to America as well. It is one of the major, most important battles that we face today, and we'd better win it or future generations will only know government tyranny. That so many want that, and vote for such tyranny, shows how far into ignorance and decadence America has already fallen.

2.2.15 Mythologies About Musk (2025-02-14 08:11)

Here are some of the untruths told about Elon Musk and DOGE:

"Musk has no right to cut USAID."

Elon Musk and his team are not cutting any federal programs.

They are auditors. They were given legal authority under a presidential executive order creating the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE).
Advertisement

Its mandate is to identify waste, abuse, fraud, and irrelevance in the federal budget at a time when the U.S. is $37 trillion in debt.

The agency will expire on July 4, 2026.

Ultimately, Musk can propose program cuts, but Trump holds the authority to approve or reject them. He may or may not act on all, some, or none of the DOGE recommendations.

"No one elected Musk."

Like hundreds of government officials, Musk was appointed by an elected president to run an agency that does not require Senate confirmation.

Musk is as legally legitimate as the national security advisor and his National Security Council, none of whom require Senate confirmation.

Does the left believe former national security advisor Jake Sullivan, who made decisions far more pivotal than Musk, had no authority to do so because he too was neither elected nor confirmed by the Senate?

"It is a dangerous precedent to give a private citizen billionaire like Musk so much power."

In fact, Musk has far more legal authority than did FDR's best friend Harry Hopkins. Hopkins moved into the White House and de facto set U.S. foreign assistance policies toward Stalin's Russia.

Musk's position is more akin to past captains of industry like Henry Ford, Henry Kaiser, and William Knudson appointed by FDR to run the wartime economy.

None of them were either elected or confirmed by the Senate. All of them helped to save a poorly armed U.S. after the debacle of Pearl Harbor.

"Foreign aid is ending."

Hardly.

Foreign aid, which in all its manifestations in various cabinets and agencies is reaching nearly $80 billion per year, is not ending.

One of its distribution centers, USAID, may be vastly curtailed or bundled into the State Department. But the important bulk grants to allies like Israel or friends like Egypt or aid in times of famine relief and natural disasters to the needy abroad will remain. And these programs will be strengthened and saved precisely because they will be trimmed of skimmers and scammers.

"It is illegal to end USAID."

USAID was created by an executive order in 1961 by then President John F. Kennedy in response to congressional legislation codifying foreign aid and allowing the president to execute the statute at his discretion.

Nearly four decades later, in 1998, Congress passed another law reifying Kennedy's US-AID as a formal agency but still within the executive branch.

But neither law mandates that Trump bundle all or even most foreign aid in USAID. He can disperse money as he sees fit throughout the cabinets. And he can keep whatever funds or programs he chooses under the aegis of USAID should he wish.

Advertisement

"Trump cannot impound any USAID money legislated by Congress."

That legal question apparently depends on whose ox is gored.

Neither Congress nor the courts have ever, in blanket fashion, either approved and sustained a line-item presidential veto or outright banned any form of presidential impoundment.

But recently Joe Biden, as both vice president in 2016 and president in 2021, set a precedent that an administration most certainly can impound or delay congressionally passed funding as it pleases.

Infamously, Biden publicly bragged that on a trip to Ukraine, he had threatened that government by withholding $1 billion in approved U.S. foreign aid unless it immediately fired Biden enemy prosecutor Viktor Shokin.

That condition was never discussed in any congressional aid authorization (and was the sort of act the left would impeach Trump for in 2020).

More flagrantly in 2021, Biden abruptly and permanently stopped all construction on the border wall. And he impounded those congressionally approved construction funds through a variety of gimmicks.

Biden, remember, without Congressional approval, gratuitously canceled student loan obligations, issued blanket loan amnesties, and promised to ignore or work around court prohibitions of his illegal acts.

"China will be delighted by USAID cuts."

False. China will be likely upset by the Trump cuts.

Beijing finds its own concrete development projects far more effective than USAID imposing American cultural agendas abroad. Beijing likes self-destructive American aid like LGBTQ activism, transgender chauvinism, and anti-conservative American media.

Does anyone believe China was angry that the USAID created a vast gender studies program at the University of Kabul or had the U.S. embassy there advertise its pride activism, or itself snagged $40 million to engineer deadly viruses?

So, China will be quite unhappy that organs like the New York Times and the BBC are having their USAID subsidies ended. After all, they, along with China, so often vilified their shared existential nemesis – Donald J. Trump.

2.2.16 Sorry, Liberals. DOGE Is 100% Legal. Here's Why. (2025-02-14 08:12)

I want to revisit the hysteria, controversy—whatever term we use—about Elon Musk and his role in the Department of Government Efficiency—or DOGE—using that term for the executive officer of Renaissance Florence. The Italian word “doge” is a meme, so to speak.

There's a lot of controversy about Elon Musk, and let's just dispel some of it right at the start. He is not a freelancer. He was appointed a government official. Donald Trump, by an executive order, created the Department of Government Efficiency, and he made Elon Musk the head of it, along with Vivek Ramaswamy, who now has resigned.

Elon Musk has statutory authority. This Department of Government Efficiency is not a Cabinet agency. He does not have to be approved by Congress. And it only is going to last until July 4, 2026. It's not a permanent agency, but he has the same power, or lack of such, as the national security adviser, who does not have to be confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

He's more legitimate—or he has more statutory legitimacy—than earlier presidential advisers, like Harry Hopkins, who moved into the White House under the FDR administration, or Bernard Baruch, who basically ran two world wars, in terms of domestic production, under Woodrow Wilson and FDR. So, let's just dispel the idea that he's doing anything unusual.

As far as the executive orders that created the DOGE program and eliminated the U.S. Agency for International Development—that was perfectly legal in itself. USAID was created by John F. Kennedy in 1961 by an executive order. There was a statutory direction for the president to disperse foreign aid into a comprehensive body, but it didn't say USAID—he could do whatever he wanted.

And so, Donald Trump has decided to end autonomous USAID and fold it into the State Department for disaster relief or poverty relief or famine relief.

But let's get straight what Elon Musk is trying to do. He's going through all of these agencies and finding waste and fraud. And he has executive authority to do so. The Democrats are suing on the principle that they have approved funds for some of these agencies and Donald Trump is not spending them. And they are also arguing that Elon must exist by an executive order and not a congressional statute.

And this is very ironic, to tell you the truth. If you look back at executive orders, the number of which have been issued by Democratic and Republican presidencies, you see two general terms: The two Bushes and Donald Trump are not that much different than the 16 years of Bill Clinton and Barack Obama.

Where you see the big divide in the number of executive orders is a break between FDR and Harry Truman, and to a lesser extent, Herbert Hoover and Coolidge, and the present. And believe me, during the Roosevelt years and Truman years, that was an all-time record of executive orders, and that got Roosevelt in trouble, of course, with the Supreme Court.

As far as impounding funds, Joe Biden set the precedent. You all saw him on tape when he said, "SOB—the son of a— I went in, over there, to Ukraine and I said, 'You're not getting this billion dollars until you do this.'" Well, that money had been approved by Congress.

And when he became president, there was a statute that said, "Here's the money to build the wall."

And Joe Biden canceled the wall. That was illegal. But he came up with all these—"Oh, we have to do environmental studies, or on endangered species." But he didn't spend the money. All Donald Trump is doing is saying, "I don't believe the Impoundment Control Act is legal. We'll see what the Supreme Court—but I'm just following the precedent that Joe Biden did."

But now the shoe's on the other foot.

And so, again, there is a statutory authority for Elon Musk to do what he does. He has the executive order justifying his agency, his 20-some employees. And more importantly—there's another thing no one talks about—Elon Musk is a controversial figure and everybody is attacking him. And whom are they not attacking? Donald Trump.

So, while the media is trying to make a split—Time magazine had a cover of Elon Musk behind the presidential desk in the Oval Office, Donald Trump didn't get angry about that. He said, "I didn't even know Time magazine was still in existence." Why? Because Elon Musk, in addition to all of these executive duties he's doing to cut back wasteful spending, he is redirecting animus away from the president to him.

2.2.17 Here's Why Obama Created DEI (2025-02-14 08:13)

I want to talk today about the controversy over diversity, equity, and inclusion, but in a little different strain. I want to compare it with affirmative action.

Affirmative action was created during the civil rights era, 1964 and '65, and then, now, it has been with us almost 60 years. But remember what it was originally designed for—to address the historic racism and oppression of black Americans through slavery and Jim Crow, de facto segregation in some of the Northern states, but de jure segregation in the South.

And it said that because of that African Americans had not been given equality of opportunity. Statute never said anything about quotas or equality result. That's something that came in later. But the point I'm making, affirmative action was envisioned for this historic minority that made about 12 % of the population.

It was challenged in the courts for years. And it was often challenged by not just so-called whites but Asians as well because their SAT scores—to take the example of college admissions—or their GPAs were often 200 or 300 points, in the case of the SAT, and GPA, 4 versus 3.2, in the case of GPAs.

By that I mean, African Americans were being admitted with less impressive statistics than whites, but especially, Asians. And then something happened to this paradigm. When the Obama administration came in, they saw that that constituency was not big enough for the type of woke agenda that they were envisioning.

So they recreated it. They used a word, “diversity.” And diversity then would morph in, during the Obama years, to “diversity, equity, and inclusion.” They added the “equity and inclusion” so you didn’t obsess on race, which was the obsession. But they didn’t want you to think about that. So then, all of a sudden, anybody was diverse on one qualification: They were not white.

That posed millions of problems because who is white in a multiracial society? Everybody has different heritages. Is it one-quarter, one-sixteenth? Should we use the one-drop rule of the old Confederacy? How do we stop fakers like Sen. Elizabeth Warren, etc.?

But all that aside, you can see what Barack Obama was trying to do. He was trying to say that the number of people who had been victimized was no longer 12 %. It was 30 %. And it was based on the idea of systemic racism. If you could not find overt racism in the 21st century, then you had to put adjectives in it. It was systemic. It was institutional. It was insidious. It was like air.

You can’t see air, but you know it’s there. So you had to have air detectors, like DEI detectors, and they would tell us you have to have trigger warnings or safe spaces or microaggressions. This was all an effort to build a victimized class. And what happened was, in the old days, there was an economic element to affirmative action.

It was clear that African Americans’ income was not comparable to non-African Americans. But under DEI, you could be an immigrant from the Punjab, you could come in from Argentina, you could come in from Taiwan, you could come in from almost any area and there were actually 16 different ethnic groups with higher incomes than whites.

So what happened? People began to say two things: “This person who we are hiring because we want to be diverse actually has more money than the people who are being excluded and has more opportunity,” No. 1. And No. 2, “They have no history of systemic exclusion.”

How does somebody who comes across the border from Oaxaca on the first day claim that he’s been a victim of insidious American racism? How does somebody who comes from Taiwan make the argument that he has been a victim of systemic racism in the here and now?

So, you had all of these immigrants coming in, and remember, DEI was, by intent, to coincide with a record number of immigrants—55 million, 16 % of the population.

So what did we do? We created a new group and the result of it was—for a while, eight years—we got record numbers of Democrat voters among Asians, who had been traditionally conservative, under Hispanics, blacks, Native Americans. And then it blew up. And Donald Trump blew that up because he exposed the ridiculousness of it.

These people are trying to divide us into a Marxist binary between victimizers and victims. But the people in East Palestine were victims. The people in North Carolina were victims. And some of the victimizers are not white. And so, it's so convoluted now. And it makes no sense in terms of economic advantage or historic racism or bias, or who is what.

Let's just get rid of it and start to treat people as people and make identity politics incidental and not essential to who we are.

2.2.18 The Left Can't Stop Creating Drama (2025-02-14 08:14)

A long time ago, the French foreign secretary, Charles Maurice de Talleyrand-Périgord, once remarked of the restoration of the French kings after the French Revolution. "Unfortunately," he said, "they have forgotten nothing and they've learned nothing." Meaning, the same thing is going to happen again and again.

That's applicable to today's angry, almost addicted Left, if you think about it. We have suffered now from almost a decade of Russian collusion, laptop disinformation, five criminal and civil suits, 91 indictments, efforts to get Donald Trump off the ballot. I could go on and on in a nauseating fashion, but they all have had two results.

One, the people are now bored and weary with all of these psychodramas and melodramas. And two, they're starting to see them as substitutes for substantive criticism or substantive discussion. In other words, when you have nothing to say about the border policy of Donald Trump or nothing to say about his new Jacksonian foreign policy, you revert back to form.

And that's what we're seeing right now. They have forgotten nothing and they have learned nothing. So let me give you a few examples. You would think in these first hundred days of Donald Trump there would be robust debate about economic policies, border policies. There is not.

Now we're talking about Elon Musk went like this, and he went like this to the crowd, this, and they said he was a Nazi. And then, of course, the internet almost immediately was awash in imagery of Elizabeth Warren, Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama. That swept over the entire world, almost, that Elon Musk was giving a Nazi salute. There was no evidence he did not and that ate up a 24-hour cycle.

Pete Hegseth is going to be confirmed. He weathered all of the invective. It's clear the Left failed to stop him.

There was no discussion in those ad hominem attacks on really critical questions for all of our security concerns. Are we short artillery shells? Is the traditional triad of submarine-based, missile-based, and airplane-based nuclear deterrent, does it still work? Are we short Javelins? Should we be looking more at drones after the wars in the Middle East and Ukraine? None of that came up.

It was, "Were you drinking? Did you have adultery, adultery, adultery?" He's admitted he was a flawed person in his personal life for many years. And now, all of a sudden, he's on his way to be the new defense secretary.

And what happens? Is there a great new debate over a defense issue? No, we're told that his former sister-in-law, a very strong Democrat that his brother divorced, has now gone to a Democratic welcoming law firm to say that she heard his former wife say that he was cruel, or he was dangerous, or he might beat her, or he drank too much.

Samantha Hegseth, his second wife, has said it was not true and that her former sister-in-law was simply trying to work for the Democrats to stop this nomination. And the divorce settlement shows that neither one had any complaints about spousal abuse. And yet, again, that ate up another day.

Then Gen. [Mark] Milley came out of the woodwork. And now they're releasing interviews that he thinks Donald Trump is a fascist and is the greatest threat in history to the United States.

Are we having any discussion with Gen. Milley about the chain of command? Should we look at the Joint Chiefs [of Staff], the structure of them, to make sure that no one in this advisory capacity tries to interrupt the chain of command, as did Milley?

Should we make sure the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who's an adviser only, does not call up his Chinese counterpart and warn him that he will tip him off if Donald Trump gives an order he disagrees with? No, we just heard "fascist, fascist, fascist," and then that disagreed. Sometimes these distractions, these psychodramas, melodramas are very—what's the word—trivial.

Now we're discussing: "Is Donald Trump really president? He did not put his left hand on the Bible. Yeah, Melania had the Bible, but he didn't reach for it. That must tell us something." That took over 24 hours.

And, of course, we had Bishop Budde, I think her name is Mariann Budde. She was going to give this national prayer sermon. She gave it and then she hijacked her own sermon and started haranguing Donald Trump about being too harsh and he has to be merciful in the treatment of transgenders and illegal aliens.

Nothing about an open border where 80,000 to 100,000 people are killed through imported fentanyl. Nothing about criminal aliens that hurt and maim and kill Americans. Nothing about cutting in front of the line and hurt legal applicants. Nothing about overwhelming social services so that our poor don't have the access that they previously had.

No, it's just a, what? A performance art, virtue signaling way of getting attention. And indeed, the bishop went through all of the talk shows, "The View," to highlight her confrontation with Donald Trump.

What am I getting at here in conclusion? The Left is out of ideas. They're like an addict that is addicted and fixed on their next, I don't know, melodrama. And they know that is destroying them. They know that people want substantive debate. They know they can't do that because they're on the losing end of that argument.

They know they should not continue with these psychodramas, the strife, strident, invective, and they can't stop. Like a zombie addict, they can't stop. In other words, to quote Talleyrand, again, "They've forgotten nothing and they've learned nothing."

2.2.19 Germany Is Self-Imploding (2025-02-14 08:14)

Today I'd like to talk about the crisis facing Europe, specifically its self-implosion across the spectrum—energy, population, fertility, defense. Germany, for example, has been systematically shutting down its nuclear plants and, for a while, its natural gas electrical generation plants.

It's relying, believe it or not, more on oil and coal. But the net result of all of this deliberate turn to wind and solar, at the expense of fossil fuels and nuclear, is that it costs about four times more to use electricity [1]in Germany than it does on average throughout the United States. That's not the only problem.

Germany is deindustrializing. And by that I mean it's losing about 200,000 jobs in its auto industry due to these high energy prices and regulations. Its green mandates, especially [2]electric vehicle mandates, have revolutionized the car industry, in the sense that they're not selling abroad as they did in the past.

In addition to that, Germany's disarmed. They only have about 125 attack aircraft. They have very few armored vehicles. Their active military is only about 180,000 soldiers.

They have 84 million people in the country. The fertility rate is getting very close to 1.4. I know we have problems here in the United States at 1.6, but 1.4.

And they don't have borders. They have had a million to 2 million [3]illegal aliens just prance into Germany, especially during the last years of the Merkel chancellorship. In terms of percentage of foreign-born, Germany has more foreign-born than does the United States, which doesn't have a border in the south, at least until [4]Donald Trump comes in. Twenty percent of the German population is foreign-born.

Why am I mentioning all of this? Because Germany represents the powerhouse, traditionally, of the European economy, and even culture, and it's starting to implode. The euro, the benchmark of European financial health, is about, right now as I speak at the end of December, one dollar to one euro, and sometimes even less for the euro.

That's very strange because when I used to run a travel company to go to [5]Europe—I remember in 2008, the euro was 1.6, almost 1.7 per the dollar. So what's happening is that Germany is, I guess we would call it, undertaking a slow-motion suicide.

But here's the irony. In September 1944, at the height of World War II, the secretary of the treasury under the Roosevelt administration, Henry Morgenthau, had a plan for postwar Germany when it was defeated.

He didn't want another war—the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71, World War I, World War II. He said, “Enough.” So what did he do? He submitted a plan that was going to deindustrialize Germany, depopulate Germany, change its borders. It was almost as if he was trying to turn it into something like Tacitus' description of first-century A.D. Germany, as a pastoral, agrarian society. In fact, he explicitly said that.

When Joseph Goebbels heard about this, he said, “Oh my God, this is a gift. We're losing the war. We'll tell all of the German people they want us to be permanently pastoral. We'll starve to death. And even if they don't like the Nazis, as we've destroyed the country, you're losing more, they'll fight.”

Thankfully, George Marshall, chief of staff of the Army; ex-President Herbert Hoover; and others went to the Roosevelt administration and said, “If you institute this plan, they're going to fight to the death. And we have bombed Germany. So when we get into Germany, you'll see that it's almost depopulated now.”

The net result was they canceled the Morgenthau Plan that would have permanently made Germany depopulated, disarmed, deindustrialized.

What's my point in bringing up this historical example? We the victors of World War II thought imposing a plan of deliberate deindustrialization, depopulation, disarmament, open borders, destroyed borders would be too Carthaginian, and so we backed off. And now we're here 80 years after the rejection of the Morgenthau Plan and the German people, or the German leadership, have essentially updated it and inflicted it on themselves willingly, not by coercion. That's a tragic irony and it's something we should all take a very close look at.

2.2.20 helper questioning my talents (2025-02-16 14:16)

I'm 40 years old, and had a history of owning all the nintendos, sega, playstations and xboxs (not Xbox Series S) . my helper who has a PHD in behavioral health who watches movies or walks in the park or walk in a shopping mall with me asks why i'm not at work. I had a bachelor degree in information technology management summa cum laude and an associate degree. I took Comptia and Cisco tests too. How do I make the helper think I'm smart? I have a needs trust. I had 14 jobs, but it ended in store bankruptcy, or the store moved or the cultural communication was bad. The employer was into animal farm and pink floyd. I had okcupid since 2006 or bumble since 2025. now I some of my IQ scores are impaired like my memory scores in the 1990s. I was playing the Wisconsin card sorting testg game in the late 1990s at a clinic. Women don't come up to me and love me or hang out for 40 years. I owned and played all the game consoles so I accomplished something, i live in a house, I am healthy and eat 3 times a day. so I'm not sure its a midlife crisis. I'm 40 and i haven't dated in my life! Is this a beginning of a midlife crisis? I don't know if I need women in my life? I'm confused because I see Taylor the Fiend on youtube and other mens problems with wives after 10 or 20 years of marriage. My parents are married for 45 years and most family members were married over 20 years.

2.2.21 Forget Defunding, It's Time to Destroy PBS, NPR and the Left-Wing Industrial Complex (2025-02-20 10:40)

Ken Burns makes some good movies. I don't call them documentaries anymore because they're riddled with errors and he doesn't seem to have any interest in correcting the record, just hammering the checks. "Ty Cobb was a racist everyone in baseball hated," is the gist of what was said in "Baseball," but it wasn't true, as Charles Leerhsen showed in his brilliant, "Ty Cobb: A Terrible Beauty." Burns didn't answer Leerhsen about where he got his false information from, or whether or not he'd tried to actually verify any of the claims he'd made in his film - being Ken Burns means never having to say you're sorry.

This indifference toward truth, not to mention reality, is just one reason the entire PBS/NPR infrastructure is not just unnecessary, but needs to be destroyed.

My closets are free from clutter from PBS tote bags and Rick Steves DVD box set from donating to fund my local station, or any station associated with the Public Broadcasting System. Most relics of the past I can justify at least the existence of in the context of the time in which they were created – unions, for example, were useful in improving workplace safety in a time when if you were killed on the job thanks to employer negligence or indifference, your family was pretty well screwed before them – but most have outlived their usefulness or failed to adapt with the times (like unions).

But it's not just that these publicly funded outlets are biased, it's that they are rotten to their core.

They are the playthings for billionaires. For all the whining about Elon Musk leftists do, they embrace the hell out of billionaires when no one is looking.

Laurene Powell Jobs, who “made” her fortune by marrying Apple co-founder Steve Jobs and outliving him, bought The Atlantic a few years ago to be her progressive plaything (it's amazing how leftists who inherit or fall into wealth have a compulsion to “do something” in politics, I suspect, in an attempt to fool the world into thinking they've actually done something with their lives too).

Recom

Jobs recently bought the PBS show “Washington Week,” now called “Washington Week with The Atlantic,” turning what was already leftist propaganda into branded leftist propaganda. If this accidental billionaire can afford to buy a show on the “public” channel, she can afford to pay to put it on a privately owned channel. Taxpayers don't need to be involved in the operation at all.

Newsbusters reports, “Laurene, one of Kamala Harris's biggest bankrollers and confidantes, isn't alone. David Rubenstein has bought himself several chat shows on PBS. As long as you're a progressive billionaire, no one in ‘public’ broadcasting objects – and nobody inside their bubble cares about conservative taxpayers if and when they object to funding this ideological boondoggle.”

I don't have a problem with rich liberals buying themselves shows, I have a problem with even one penny of anyone's tax dollars being used to support that proposition.

Washington Week is [1]Pravda for the progressive state on steroids, with its host, Atlantic chief tool Jeffrey Goldberg, living so far up the backside of the Democratic Party he can see what they ate before it gets digested. But the checks clear, so there's that.

DOGE needs to not only cut off taxpayer funding for NPR and PBS, the Trump administration needs to reclaim as much of the money they've already blown as possible.

In 2013, NPR built itself a [2] $201 million headquarters on some of the most expensive real estate in DC. If they have that kind of money, they don't need ours. Given the product they put out, they don't deserve ours either.

If these "public broadcasters" are going to be dominated by one side, the unpopular side, of the political spectrum, let those people pay for it or let them sell ads. Or let it die, I don't really care. I just don't want another penny for tax money to go to it.

The CEO of PBS made more than $1 million in 2020. [3]According to their filings, "Total expenses were $495 million. However, $178 million were donated broadcast rights and $136 million was depreciation, meaning cash expenses were $181 million (50 % of cash revenue), with the largest expense ($76 million or 21 % of cash revenue) being compensation for the 591 employees, who received an average compensation of $129,000."

To hell with them, cut them off. If they have to take a pay cut, good. If they go out of business, I don't care. They need to be made to sink or swim on their own.

When you mention defunding these propagandists to a leftist drone you inevitably get the standard, "It's really just pennies that they get from your taxes, an insignificant amount." Good, since it's so insignificant they can do without it.

The Trump administration needs to cut off taxpayer funds to every institution that is part of the left-wing industrial complex, which includes every sociology research grant and pretty much every non-medical penny sent to universities and NGOs around the world and in the US.

Make the left-wing donor class pick up the tab or lose the propaganda benefits they rely on from the garbage these dollars belch up. Make them put their money where their mouths are by diverting funds to these endeavors or killing them altogether. Either way, the American people win.

2.2.22 To Keep Winning, America First Must Leverage the Power of Information Operations (2025-02-20 10:41)

One of the glorious parts of the campaign that Trump 2.0 is prosecuting against the Deep State is the unprecedented way it exploits the Internet and high technology to take on what's essentially a mid-20th century government leviathan. After all, it's come out that the government's flunky retirements are handled on paper in a limestone cavern, and that Treasury is still running some of its systems on COBOL. Now, I'm not a computer geek, having kissed a girl, but I remember COBOL was a thing when I was in college, and when I was in college, [1]A Flock of Seagulls was a thing.

Moreover, the movement is leveraging outside talent, like X folk hero and heroine [2]@oilfield_rando and [3]@datarepublican, who use their knowledge and technology to interrogate and expose the hidden misdeeds of the Deep State. This is great stuff. This has to be encouraged. There are not just a few dozen or hundreds or even thousands of these kinds of savants out there. There are tens of thousands of more people who have the skills to conduct decentralized operations to support the administration's war on the Insultions that have made war on us. The Democrats flirted with this kind of mobilization of outside assets to do evil – there were groups of psychopaths who made it their point to hunt down innocent Americans for the crime of protesting on January 6, and it's hilarious that all the efforts have come to nothing thanks to President Trump delivering justice through the pardons.

This is an information battle as much as anything else – knowledge is power, and fast knowledge is superpower. We are trying to do a few things with information. The most important is to find and identify problems. That's one of the things DOGE is doing with its algorithms – uncovering the hidden problems within the system. But there are other problems out there that aren't hidden in the code. Tyrannical bureaucrats hassling patriots and defying the president, for example. While we can't identify and solve every single injustice out there, we can make a systemic impact by publicly highlighting and correcting selected problems. In other words, if we find something going on that's symbolic, we publicize it, and then we crush the wrongdoer – loudly and unequivocally.

What does this accomplish? It helps the individual patriot, of course, and that's important. But it also shows other potential resister bureaucrats what happens if the proverbial Eye of Sauron falls upon them. They will realize that there is a non-zero chance that, at worst, they go to jail, or they might lose their pension, or, at best, they might find themselves counting igloos in Nome, Alaska.

But there's another equally important part of this. Every time the administration comes down like a ton of bricks on some out-of-control pencil pusher out in the field, our side understands that we have won. We put a W on the board. Our morale builds. We see President Trump's promises being kept. We see that there is hope. We see that there is the potential to improve things. And we see that justice is done. The benefits, like helping the victims and terrifying the government flunkies, are important, but this is really an exercise in morale. It makes people understand that their work reelecting Donald Trump was worth it. He earns their trust.

Now, the administration itself is too busy to sweep the Internet looking for outrageous issues to spotlight. This is a job best done by outsiders. It doesn't take resources away from the official tasks and gives outside folks a way to make a difference. Plus, leveraging outside support gives the administration a huge combat power advantage. The Internet, combined with technology, allows motivated people to use these assets to maximize the ability of the administration to keep moving fast and to react quickly. As a movement, we should formalize this operation. We should have a formal structure that provides a clearinghouse for information for the administration but outside the administration and not subject to Freedom of Information Act requirements and other regulations. It should be a central point of assembly for information from outsiders who want to help, whether by reporting information or gathering it proactively.

What does this all mean?

Let's look at my personal favorite of all the departments, the Department of Defense – at least until we change it back to what it should be, the Department of War. The DOD is the biggest of the departments, and there are other factors that make it perfect for this kind of operation. It has a hierarchical chain of command, which gives leaders enormous powers over subordinates – and where there is enormous power, there's enormous potential for abusing that power. There's also the secrecy and confidentiality that tends to surround the military – the first rule of the military is don't talk about the military. This allows abusers to hide their abuse. And there's been a lot of abuse. I've been inundated with service members who claim to have suffered horrible persecution at the hands of their chain of command – COVID pogroms are just one example. No doubt some claims are exaggerated or even false, and that's why one of the most important tasks for the working group I'm advocating is to screen those out. But there are plenty of real examples of toxic leadership, racial and sexual bigotry under the DEI banner, gross incompetence, and outright corruption. You probably didn't hear about the Fat Leonard scandal, but a bunch of admirals were taking a bunch of money and hookers from a contractor. If the investigation wasn't so unprofessional and incompetent, we might've seen some very senior people in striped uniforms turning big rocks into little ones. There is waste with money flushed down the toilet. There is arbitrary and obnoxious hassling of service members for demonstrating traditional values. Did you know that in one command, the leadership refused to give command slots to Christians because Christian values weren't in line with the DEI party line?

That happened. It needs to unhappen. We need to spot that garbage and nuke the site from orbit.

Maybe there's a chaplain at some Air Force Base who can't mention Jesus because that's "not inclusive." Perhaps a soldier is being passed through an elite training course based on race or some other nonsense so the generals can point to a token Green Beret. Maybe $10 million of brand-new generators is just sitting there, rusting. All those are entirely plausible, but we'll never know about them unless we go looking for them. Once we go looking for them, we'll find them on chat boards, social media, or even through tips.

That's just an example of one of the many structures we must build within the America First movement to keep this all going past January 20, 2029. For so long, we invested in institutions that held seminars and wrote white papers, and there's a place for that. Those institutions were critical in preparing for the Deep State takeover under Trump 2.0. But that's not all there is. We need to harness the limitless potential and talents of our America First base. Of course, since USAID is getting a stake driven through its shriveled heart, it will not fund itself. We need our America First visionaries with a few bucks to invest in infrastructure that will allow us to keep the fight alive. Now, let's hope we can find some people to write the checks - I'm not worried about finding people eager to do the job.

2.2.23 JD Vance's Message to European Leaders: Listen to Your People, Don't Go Hard Left (2025-02-20 10:44)

Last week he spoke at the Munich Security Conference but he chose not to speak just necessarily about security issues—i.e., NATO contributions—but rather the larger problem with Europe itself.

And that controversy still continues today. Basically, what JD Vance said was:

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [1]Donate now

We have to get along—Europe and the United States—we are twins of the Western tradition. But, my God, it's getting hard for you. You go after and persecute people who object to abortion. You take American tech companies and try to censor them, even when they conduct interviews in the United States.

When Elon Musk talked to [2]President Donald Trump on X, you wanted to—you being the collective of Europeans—censor it. When an election didn't go the way that the Left wanted in Romania, they wanted to stop it. In fact, others have said within Germany that the Alternativ für Deutschland—if they were to be a majority party in the next election—they might cancel it.

So, he said, "This is not behooving of us."

They went crazy. Oh my gosh, the defense secretary, the minister of Germany got right up, "This is unsustainable, this is unacceptable." But nobody said it was untrue. It was absolutely true.

The so-called libertine, free-loving, open society of Europe is very closed. It's a one-party system, in the sense that they only allow left-wing views. It's to the left of the radical American Democratic Party.

[3]Germany should be very careful, and also should Europe, because the subtext of that speech wasn't explicitly voiced but it was there.

And his critics said, "Oh, he's just talking to the MAGA people at home." He wasn't. He wasn't talking to the French ministers. He wasn't talking to the MAGA people at home or the American people in general. He was talking to the people of Europe and they support him because we are going to see possible radical changes in the German government, some Eastern European governments, but especially, the French government, and maybe the British government the next time. And they're going to be national populists.

And he was telling them, "You have a right to stand up." And do what? His criticism was multifaceted: Close your borders. Legal-only immigration. Up your defense budget. Allow for [4]free speech. We've gone through the Biden nightmare at home. We know what it was like to go hard left. Don't go that way. Deregulate. Cut taxes. Free up the economy.

And they got very angry about that. It was almost as if they knew that was true but they could not admit it.

But here's the subtext I'm talking about. Germany and Europe better be very careful. Germany's fertility rate is 1.45. Europe's, in aggregate, is only about 1.5. We're at least 1.6.

We said years ago in 2014, "NATO, pay 2 % of gross domestic product and hold your own and pull your own weight." And now it's 10 years, 11 years later and we still have nine NATO countries that will not do it, especially Germany. They only spend 1.5 %. Their energy is four times ours. And BMW and Audi and Mercedes cannot compete.

Why? Because they've gone full Green New Deal, so to speak, and shut down coal, nuclear, natural gas plants. They have 16 % of the population was not born in Germany. France is almost as bad. And they do not assimilate, intermarry, and integrate like we do. They are looking at this huge Russian-Ukrainian war on their borders where maybe 1.5 million people have been killed or wounded or missing.

And they're critical of the United States that pays the greatest proportion of the NATO budget and who puts [5]Europe under its nuclear shield. And they are damning us.

They run a $240 billion surplus with trade. And how do they do it? Because we're lazy and unproductive? No, we are more productive and we have cheaper power rates and a more open economy than they do but they have asymmetrical tariffs. Add it all up and Germany is in a very dependent place. So is Europe.

JD Vance was trying to speak truth to power, so to speak. And they didn't want to hear it. And what's going to happen in the next year, people in Europe are going to rise up—these populist movements. And I think what he's telling all of them, this could be another start of a wonderful relationship because these fossilized, ossified governments do not reflect the people of Europe.

2.2.24 Trump's Counterrevolution in Washington (2025-02-20 10:48)

I want to talk about the Trump counterrevolution, not the revolution.

There's been a lot of false information—what [1]the Left calls misinformation, disinformation—about what's going on in these first 30 days. It hasn't even been 30 days. It's reminiscent of FDR's first hundred days, and they call it the MAGA revolution.

It's not a revolution. It is a counterrevolution. There's a big difference. This is a restoration. Let's use the word "Trump restoration."

We don't know really—we don't really appreciate what we've been through with eight years of the Obama revolution and the four-year, more radical third term of [2]Barack Obama, using or employing the wax effigy of Joe Biden. A revolution that we've experienced was a cultural, economic, political, social revolution.

It was very similar to the French Revolution under the Robespierre brothers. You should remember what they tried to do. They changed the days of the week. They renamed things. They tore down statues. They went after the churches. Does this sound familiar?

This revolution that we've experienced—everything was up for sale. Everything was negotiable. We invented a third gender and rammed it down people's throats. We tore down statues. We said 1776 was no longer the foundational date. It was 1619.

We changed the very mechanism that we vote. We went from 70 % of the electorate voting on Election Day to 70 % of the electorate not doing that, either through mail-in or early voting. That was a radical change that had no discussion. It was done by fiat. It was incredible.

We looked at girls sports and we destroyed it. We said that transgendered biological males that were now transgendered females could compete. They won over 600 medals they took away from hardworking female athletes. We had drag shows among young children. It was an effort to change [3]the entire Constitution. We forget that.

They were trying to bring in Puerto Rico as a state and Washington, D.C., to get four instant senators. They were proud, they said, that they were going to pack the Supreme Court. Hadn't been done—hadn't been tried since 1937. And it was an object of disgrace ever since but they were proud to try it again.

They talked about making states—the Senate look like the House. They wanted—and a lot of them were advocating, it was not fair that one senator in Wyoming, to take one example, is worth 250,000 votes but a senator in California represented 20 million. They wanted to change the makeup of the Senate.

They wanted to get rid of the Senate filibuster. Remember that.

They wanted to bring back neo-Confederate nullification. Six hundred jurisdictions, in the manner of South Carolina in 1832, or on the edge of the Civil War in 1860, when Confederate, neo-Confederate Southern states said, "The federal government's law does not apply to us. Tariffs, Yankee tariffs—no, no. We are going to override them." Andrew Jackson almost invaded the Carolinas over that—South Carolina.

And so these jurisdictions said, "Federal law doesn't apply here. We're exempt. We have our own laws. You cannot—federal immigration law does not apply here. It applies everywhere else, to you, you, you, but not to us."

So this was a revolutionary movement. Movies were different. Sports were different. Take a knee.

And [4]Donald Trump came in and it was not sufficient to say we're going to stop the madness of $37 billion. We're going to stop the madness of being short 40,000 or 50,000 military recruits because of this DEI coupled with the amelioration and Kabul. We're going to stop the appeasement [5]of China.

But that wasn't all. He said, "The government is broke. We're going to go through all of these agencies. And finally, for the first time in the history of this country, when somebody says they're going to cut federal spending and drain the swamp or cut the administrative—we're going to do it. And there's going to be no changing names, except to go back to traditional names, and we're not going to topple statues. And if you break the law and you're on campus and you're on a student visa, you're gonna go back home."

So we're in the midst of a counterrevolution. It's not revolutionary. You know what it is? It's a return to normalcy. It's a return to common sense. It only looks revolutionary to revolutionaries. But to the rest of the people, it is a counterrevolution to restore normalcy and bring the country from the far-left fringes back home again.

2.2.25 Dumb Things Socialists Promise (2025-02-26 22:47)

Socialism is popular!

A Pew study reports that more than a third of American adults view it positively.

How is this possible?

Little has brought more misery – first in the Soviet Union, then in China, Cuba, Nicaragua, now Venezuela ...

One reason young people support socialism is because their social media feeds show videos made by popular but economically illiterate people.

TikTok star Madeline Pendleton has 1.6 million subscribers. My new video shows her telling them: "Socialism is working better than capitalism 93 % of the time!"

Where does she get 93 %?

From a study published in 1986 by self-described Marxists in the Journal of Health Services.

The authors conveniently ignore the United States and other wealthy countries and compare socialist economies to "capitalist" countries like Uganda, Rwanda, and Somalia, some of which were at war.

It's so stupid. But based on that, Pendleton tells her followers, "We have all the data showing that socialism does work."

She also celebrates communism because of its "increased life expectancy."

That's nonsense, too. People live longest in capitalist countries like Japan (85 years) and South Korea (84 years). Even in the United States (79 years), where more of us die young because we drive more (car accidents), eat more, shoot each other more often, and try more dangerous drugs, we still live longer than people in China (78 years).

Socialism is also superior, says Pendleton, because of "the 90-100 % home-ownership rates."

"One hundred percent," of course, is just dumb, but China (if you believe the party's statistics) does have 90 % homeownership.

But not under socialism! They achieved that only after privatizing urban housing. Before 1998, when Chinese housing was still socialist, just 20 % of Chinese people owned homes.

Recom

Several social media stars rave about China. "Socialism worked in China!" says TikTokker Dante Munoz. "They lifted over 800 million people from poverty."

Again, it's true that in the last 50 years, China's GDP went from $156 per capita to more than $12,000. But that only happened after China gave up on real socialism and started embracing markets. Hong Kong, which adopted actual capitalism, raised per capita GDP to $50,000.

Before China reformed, millions of people died of starvation.

Another silly social media star, JT Chapman, tells his almost 2 million YouTube subscribers: "The central idea that unites all socialists is maximizing freedom ... democratization of power."

Democratization? In most socialist countries, there's only one political party.

A popular TikToker calling himself Rathbone tells his hundred thousand subscribers: "capitalism ... prioritizes profits over people ... (but) socialism ... prioritizes people over profits."

Likewise, Chapman says socialism offers the "guaranteed right to ... health care, food and shelter."

Well, socialism promises those things and claims to prioritize people over profits, but what people actually get is different.

As Cuban doctors put it in this video, "The Cuban health care system is destroyed ... People are dying in the hallways."

Yet Chapman claims, "Innovation can flourish even when people are not motivated by profit. The USSR gave the world the anthrax vaccine, artificial satellites and one of the earliest mobile phones."

That is true. But no one uses those phones today. Capitalism just creates much more.

Finally, Chapman says, "Ownership should be collective."

Collective ownership does feel good. "We'll share everything!"

But every attempt at collective ownership has failed.

One famous American example: 200 years ago, New Harmony, Indiana, abolished private property, promising a "community of equality."

The result was famine.

When people realized they could receive just as much barely working as they could working hard, many, naturally, worked less. Within a year, the commune experiment failed, and the property was returned to private hands.

What do these popular social media stars say when I confront them with these inconvenient truths? Sadly, I don't know. Not one would appear on Stossel TV to debate.

The bottom line: Incentives matter. No one washes a rental car. Few people care much about what belongs to everyone. It's just human nature.

Capitalism isn't perfect, but if we want a better future and freedom, capitalism is the only thing that works.

2.2.26 Supreme Court Blocks Order From Lunatic Judge That Would've Forced Trump to Unfreeze Foreign Aid (2025-02-26 22:50)

President Donald J. Trump clinched another legal win at the Supreme Court, temporarily blocking a lower court's ruling over foreign aid. Trump mandated a 90-day freeze, which U.S. District Judge Amir Ali ordered must be restored as the president didn't consider the "extraordinary harm" this action could do. It's lunacy that these little judges think they can dictate what the executive can do. This ruling should've been ignored; Biden dismissed the Supreme Court in student loan relief.

So thanks again to [6]@DianeAxe for sharing the link to the filing with Supreme Court. Many of the points I made below the Trump Administration highlights. Here's a great passage highlighting the constitutional significance too: 1/ [7]<https://t.co/IBLjuWh8ro> [8]pic.twitter.com/lJmxofSANb— Margot Cleveland (@ProfMJCleveland) [9]February 27, 2025

4/4 Those are main additional points to those I highlighted before. So now SCOTUS has two important cases to decide . . . all because district court judges entered inappropriate TROs.— Margot Cleveland (@ProfMJCleveland) [10]February 27, 2025

Recommended

Yet, Trump's team appealed and blocked Ali's judgment for now. Ali was confirmed because Sen. Mike Braun (R-IN), now governor of Indiana, wasn't present [11]to block this nomination. The vote on Ali's nomination was on November 24, 2024. Braun was absent, and Vice President Kamala Harris was licking her wounds in Hawaii. Braun's vote would've deadlocked the Senate and killed the confirmation, but Ali got confirmed on a 50-49 vote.

This circus over foreign aid could've been avoided if people showed up for their votes.

2.2.27 Trump, Vance Put the Mainstream Media in Their Place When Taking Questions at Cabinet Meeting (2025-02-26 22:53)

We saw a collective freakout from liberals in the media over the first Cabinet meeting of the second Trump administration on Wednesday. Elon Musk, who as White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt reminded, works with the president and Cabinet secretaries to get to the bottom of government fraud and waste, was present for such a meeting. As Townhall [1]has been reminding, then First Lady Jill Biden [2]not only attended by led Cabinet meetings during the previous administration. Any outrage is completely misplaced. The meeting was indeed held on Wednesday, [3]where Musk did [4]speak. While President Joe Biden could rarely ever be bothered to take questions, President Donald Trump and Vice President JD Vance had no problem taking them, and put the media in their place in the process.

The media has made much of Trump's handling of negotiations for an end to the Russo-Ukrainian war, which began three years ago on Monday. Russian President Vladimir Putin was emboldened enough to attack under the particularly weak and ineffective Biden-Harris administration, especially when it comes to foreign policy, and especially after the disastrous withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Trump [5]later reminded when taking questions that Biden "could have prevented that war," adding Putin "would have never gone in" and that "the war would never have taken place if I were president." Polling [6]conducted not long after Putin's invasion of Ukraine shows that voters agreed with Trump on that assessment.

In taking a question, Vance referenced the president's handling of foreign policy, which is not to advertise it to the world ahead of time. "I mean, look, as the president said, we're not going to do the negotiation in public with the American media. He's going to do it in private with the president of Russia, with the president of Ukraine, and with other leaders," he reminded. "I think that's how this has to go," he continued, as he "pushed back" against criticism, not just from the media, but also Democrats whom they're often aligned with. "Every single time the president engages in diplomacy, you guys preemptively accuse him of conceding to Russia. He hasn't conceded anything to anyone. He's doing the job of a diplomat, and he is of course the diplomat-in-chief as the president of the United States."

During that same Cabinet meeting, Trump [10]had actually announced that Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy will be at the White House on Friday to sign an agreement to develop rare earth and critical minerals in the country.

"We're going to do the best we can to make the best deal we can for both sides," Trump also later shared about an end to the war, which includes trying to "get as much back as possible" for Ukraine, a line he stressed. At that moment, Vance even joked to Trump that "sir, they want you to negotiate with them instead of about the peacekeepers," to laughter from those present.

Once the laughter subsided, Trump reminded that "it's possible" there may not even be a peace deal, though he hopes there is, "for the sake of humanity."

Trump also reminded the press about the damage that his predecessor had done and what he had "gotten away with" as "a disgrace to our nation." The president had a message for the press on this point too, in that they "don't write the fair thing," adding "but, you know, the good news is the people see it and that's why we won the election by so much."

At the very end of the meeting, as the press had been dismissed and were exiting, Trump and Vance even quipped about peacekeepers, with Vance asking, "Sir, how many peacekeepers are going to sit there?"

2.2.28 Pete Hegseth's Military (2025-02-26 22:58)

Did you notice that of all the controversial Trump nominees—Kash Patel, Pete Hegseth, Pam Bondi, RFK, Tulsi Gabbard—the Left went after Pete Hegseth the most vehemently? And he required JD Vance to break that tie. There was a reason for that. He is proposing radical changes in the Pentagon.

Remember where we are right now with [1]the Pentagon. We spend $820 billion a year. It's about 14 % of the entire budget and it's immune to criticism. It really is. And we are building $14 billion carriers. We're building $85 million F-35s. We have built $140 million F-22s. And we're watching, in Ukraine and the Middle East, the entire mode of 21st-century warfare being revolutionized.

It's more of—not that we're going to have bad quality, but it's more quantity than quality. They're flooding the zones with cheap drones—cheap drones on the ocean, in the air, and on land.

And we're not there yet. We're not doing it. So, what Pete Hegseth wants to do is change the entire manner of procurement.

What we have now is more or less a monopoly. We have Raytheon. We have the Boston military group. We have Northrop. We have General Dynamics. We have Lockheed. And the way it has worked is that four-star generals, who have very generous pensions, rotate out. They work for these consortia and then they use their contacts of subordinate officers to favor their procurement.

I'm not saying there's anything wrong with it but it's an inherent conflict of interest. And Pete Hegseth is going to stop that. And he can stop it in a number of ways. First is, he can just go back to what we used to do.

We used to say that a military officer cannot be secretary of defense in the civilian role. But the last two were fine men. Gen. [Jim] Mattis, I know him, whom I like, and also [2]Gen. [Lloyd] Austin.

We waived that. I don't think we should continue to do that. There was a reason we had a law. I wrote that we should waive it for Jim Mattis because I thought he was a superb [choice]. Looking back, I think it puts too much pressure on the military officers to distance themselves. So, it would be better to have that position as a civilian one.

Another thing we're going to do is, whether we like it or not, we're going to get rid of [3]diversity, equity, and inclusion. And he's already doing it and he's going to save, I think, billions of dollars. And that has already had a profound effect.

We have record number of recruitment, per day. It's accelerating, at almost 10,000 a month. And we were down 40,000 or 50,000 recruits. And [4]the military, instead of saying, "This is a crisis," said, "We really didn't need 40,000 or 50,000. So, we met our goals." No, no, no. We were down and now we're not down.

And you can see that socially, culturally, Pete is trying to associate with the rank and file. Lift weights with him, jog. It's going to be a people's person defense secretary.

He's also not going to tolerate retired admirals and generals that come out of the woodwork during election season, use their rank—they're still subject to Article 88 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which is enforced against lower-ranking officers. The statute says that retired or serving flag officers shall not disparage major civilian officials in the executive branch; Cabinet officers, vice president, especially the president.

And yet we've seen in these recent news cycles, I won't mention all of the generals' names, but they've called their commander in chief a fascist, a Nazi-like, a Mussolini character, an architect of Auschwitz, a liar, a cheat, who should be removed sooner—just terrible things, with impunity.

We're not going to see that anymore under Pete Hegseth.

So, the procurement will be different. Recruitment will be different. Retired officers will adhere to the code. There'll be no more—less conflict of interest. There's a lot of fat in that budget with DEI. And he's basically sending a message that we're not going to look at the superficial color of one's skin, or their religion, or their gender. We're going to look at the content of their character, and more importantly, even than that, the ability to fight well for the United States.

And I think he's gonna be very successful. He is gonna be very controversial. And that's why the Left went after him more than anybody else. And I think that the Pentagon budget will shrink and it will be more bang for the buck. And it's just all welcome.

2.2.29 Germany's Election Results and the Marginalized Conservatives (2025-02-26 23:00)

Hello, this is Victor Davis Hanson for The Daily Signal. There were elections recently [1]in Germany. And as many people and pollsters had predicted, the conservative parties, and there are two of them, won nearly, almost, 50 % of the vote.

The Christian Democratic Union, under Mr. Friedrich Merz, will be the—probably the new chancellor. And then there is the Alternative für Deutschland, the AfD. This is the more controversial conservative.

We in the United States wouldn't see them so controversial. But for European socialists, they are considered ultra-ultra-right. They believe in things like the ability to buy guns or to close borders. And in the United States that would be normative, not [2]in Europe.

But here's my point, even though they have about half of the support of all German voters, it's likely that the Alternative for Germany will not be represented. And the seats that will comprise the majority will be made up by either a socialist party or the green party, or both.

Here's my point, again, there's a populist, nationalist backlash, a counterrevolution to the craziness of Europe. And we know [3]U.S. Vice President JD Vance has outlined that craziness: low fertility, high energy prices, bans against fracking, open borders, dishonorment, deindustrialization, etc. But the conservatives will not have a voice under their parliamentary democracy, even though they earned a voice. And that's only going to make them more polarized.

But here's what I also want to talk about, Mr. Merz said in a speech that given the trajectory of America under [4]President Donald Trump, he's distancing himself and he doesn't really consider the United States an ally anymore, at least he said Trump's America.

Think about that for a second.

Now, I don't want to go through ancient history, but we fought two wars with Germany. And we defeated them both, but we also came to their rescue. I think we rescued them in World War I from kaiserism. And that allowed them to have a brief romance with democracy. And then we rescued them from Nazism. They paid a terrible price. But they did lose two wars they should have lost. And then we protected them in the Cold War.

But here's another point, we have right now about 40 bases and over 50,000 American soldiers in Germany. Germany spends 1.5 % of gross domestic product. People look up to it in NATO and then say, we don't have to meet the 2 % benchmark that's required of us over a decade because Germany doesn't.

Because it's disarmed. Because they will not frack. And they will not use [5]nuclear energy. And they are ambiguous about their coal. They are paying four times more in electricity. We've mentioned before their birth rate is about 1.45. They have open borders. Sixteen percent of their population is not native-born.

So, my point is, they're not in a strong position. And all they would have to do is look at the voices of dissent on the conservative side that are calling for cheaper energy, closed borders, freer speech, reindustrializing, strong defense. And they're not. Instead, they're blaming the United States. And as I said, when you have 50,000 soldiers protecting them in 40 bases, that should speak volumes.

More importantly, they don't have a source of energy that they can import, especially natural gas after the Nord Stream 2 pipeline was blown up. We don't know if Donald Trump can solve the Ukraine war quickly or not, or how quickly that pipeline can be fixed. But they're going to have to import oil from a very volatile—oil and gas, as they do oil—increasingly from the Middle East or from us, liquid natural gas terminals on our southern coast.

So, they're dependent on us on defense. They're dependent upon us on energy and on trade. They run, depending on how we calibrate a trade surplus, they're running somewhere between $70 and $100 billion surplus, predicated on the fact that they have 5 % to 6 % tariffs. We have 2 % to zero. It's an asymmetrical situation.

So, given the fact that there has been no GDP growth in Germany and all of the other maladies that I mentioned, and the fact that the bulk of foreign aid and military aid that has protected Ukraine has come from the United States, and given the fact that we have soldiers there and we allow them—in a mercantile sense—to run up a big surplus, don't you think Mr. Merz would say, "Yes, we have differences with the United States but it's a strong friend"? Or would you expect what he did say, that we were no better or no different than Russia in their relationship to Germany?

I have a piece of advice for Mr. Merz, I'd be very careful for what you say because there's no law that says the United States has to keep protecting you. There's no law that says the United States has to keep subsidizing you to the tune of $80 or $90 billion a year. And there's no law that says that we have to be, as we have been for 85 years, committed to having a sizable presence in NATO and paying 16 % to 17 % of the budget.

We want to do that. As JD Vance said, we want you to reform. We want you to be the powerhouse of Europe. We want you to be a partner in the Western. But if you don't want to, we're not going to force you. We're not going to force you. It's your choice, not ours.

2.3.1 Trudeau and Trump Had a Phone Call About the Latest Tariffs. Here's How It Went. (2025-03-05 19:20)

NEWS: Trump gives exemptions on tariffs to car companies in USMCA for one month— Katie Pavlich (@KatiePavlich) [1]March 5, 2025

Original story

After slapping new tariffs on Canada this week, citing a lack of results on the fentanyl flow into the United States and across the northern border, President Donald Trump spoke with Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau Wednesday morning.

"Justin Trudeau, of Canada, called me to ask what could be done about Tariffs. I told him that many people have died from Fentanyl that came through the Borders of Canada and Mexico, and nothing has convinced me that it has stopped. He said that it's gotten better, but I said, 'That's not good enough.' The call ended in a 'somewhat' friendly manner! He was unable to tell me when the Canadian Election is taking place, which made me curious, like, what's going on here? I then realized he is trying to use this issue to stay in power. Good luck Justin!" Trump posted on Truth Social.

"For anyone who is interested, I also told Governor Justin Trudeau of Canada that he largely caused the problems we have with them because of his Weak Border Policies, which allowed tremendous amounts of Fentanyl, and Illegal Aliens, to pour into the United States. These Policies are responsible for the death of many people!" Trump followed up.

On Tuesday Trudeau issued retaliatory tariffs against the U.S. and claimed Trump is trying to tank the Canadian economy ahead of annexation.

Justin Trudeau is acting all hurt and upset about the tariffs.

All that Trump did was make our tariffs match what Canada was already doing to the USA.

Reciprocal ... if Canada increases tariffs, we automatically increase tariffs. If Canada lowers tariffs, so do we. Simple. [2]pic.twitter.com/34wnxNXc2V— Wall Street Mav (@WallStreetMav) [3]March 5, 2025

2.3.2 Does Jeff Bezos Really Support Free Markets? (2025-03-05 19:22)

The Post has always been part of the big-government, left-wing establishment part of our country.

Bezos wants to change that.

He wrote to the newspaper's staff that editorial policy is going to change.

"We are going to be writing every day in support and defense of two pillars: personal liberties and free markets," wrote Bezos.

Opinion page editor David Shipley immediately tendered his resignation, and more staff shake-ups are sure to follow.

Bezos clarified in his communication, possibly anticipating accusations that this is just about him seeking favor with the new Trump administration, that this move reflects his personal convictions.

"I am of America and for America, and proud to be so. Our country did not get here by being typical. And a big part of America's success has been freedom in the economic realm and everywhere else. Freedom is ethical – it minimizes coercion – and practical – it drives creativity, invention, and prosperity."

But Bezos, founder of Amazon, has owned The Washington Post since 2013. If his commitment to free markets is so deep, so strong, why has it taken him more than 10 years to shake things up at this deeply entrenched left-wing megaphone?

Looking at Bezos' track record of political and philanthropic giving, we see no signs of a free market libertarian.

His personal political contributions, which can be reviewed on OpenSecrets, are largely to Democrats.

Checking out Amazon, in the 2023-2024 cycle, Amazon made $6,941,498 in political contributions. Of these, $5,154,937 went to Democrats and $1,062,201 to Republicans; $674,511 to liberal groups, $63,239 to conservatives.

Regarding Bezos' billions in philanthropic giving, no signs emerge that this is a man driven by the core importance of individual liberty and free markets. I run a nonprofit that supports these ideas, and I know the organizations that are in this space. They are nowhere to be found in Bezos' philanthropy.

On the contrary, the flavor of Bezos' philanthropic preferences reflects the mindset of a man of the left.

For instance, his $10 billion commitment to climate change via his Bezos Earth Fund.

One extract from the thinking: "The market economy can play a valuable role in shifting to a green future, but free markets alone can simply perpetuate past pollution and depletion."

The Bezos Scholars Program in the Bezos Family Foundation, founded by his parents, headlines its work with diversity, equity and inclusion – "We employ policies and practices that foster diversity, equity and inclusion."

It's very possible to see Bezos' move at the Post through the eye of a cynic. Yes, indeed, this is not a man of conviction but a man of money who will support the best ideas that money can buy. If Trump means free markets, that's what Jeff Bezos will support, regardless of what he supported in the past.

On the other hand, no one can deny that this a very, very smart, extraordinarily capable, and, yes, courageous businessman.

Advertisement

The media business as a whole is in shambles and needs shaking up.

New data from Gallup shows that the percentage of Americans who say they trust mass media a "great deal/fair amount" has dropped from 68 % in 1972 to 33 % in 2024.

Regarding confidence in newspapers, 18 % say that have a "great deal/quite a lot," and 48 % say they have "very little/none".

If Jeff Bezos is someone who started from modest beginnings, became very successful and very, very rich in America and then supported left-wing policies and politicians, he wouldn't be alone.

There are many like this. One can achieve great success and not really understand the source of their blessings.

Being able to learn and grow throughout one's life is praiseworthy.

So maybe Jeff Bezos, despite his multibillion and legendary success, remains a modest man who continues to grow.

Maybe now he sees the truth. I hope so.

2.3.3 The Truth Behind the Medicaid Melodrama (2025-03-05 19:24)

Get ready to be bombarded with ghoulish paid ads and Democratic politicians warning about grandmothers dying, children denied needed cancer treatments, and pregnant women suffering. The demagoguery is in full swing against Republicans' efforts to control federal spending on Medicaid and stabilize the nation's debt.

New York Gov. Kathy Hochul screamed last week that "House Republicans just voted to rip health care away from up to 1.8 million New Yorkers – all to bankroll giveaways for billionaires." Sen. Patty Murray (D-Wash.) parroted the message ("tax breaks for their billionaire buddies") and warned that "moms and babies will lose health care coverage." Rep. Delia Ramirez (D-Ill.) shrieked, "People will die."

These are lies. Helpless children, the elderly, pregnant women and the disabled are not going to lose their health care. And the Medicaid changes are designed to help all Americans, not just billionaires.

The economic impact of Congress not containing Medicaid spending is what's truly scary.

If the demagoguery succeeds and the Republican majority gives up on achieving a budget bill that curbs spending, everyone will suffer. Inflation will rise. Interest rates on car loans, credit cards and mortgages will likely go up. President Donald Trump's tax cuts probably would not be renewed, and some companies, suddenly facing unfavorable tax rates, would leave the U.S. for lower-tax locations, possibly taking your job with them.

But first, here's why the fearmongering filling the air waves is untrue.

Since 1965, Medicaid has provided a safety net for those in medical need, and no one is proposing "gutting" it.

A decade ago, then-President Barack Obama and Congress expanded Medicaid to cover healthy adults, whether they were willing to work or not. Rep. Nancy Pelosi boasted that everyone should have the freedom to pursue "your own happiness" of, for example, being a writer, or "whatever you want to do," without having to hold down a job and pay for health insurance. Pelosi's promise made working people into patsies supporting the freeloaders.

Now congressional Republicans are calling for a "work requirement" for healthy people who don't have to care for a child or elderly dependent. "Work" overstates the toughness. Anyone who is employed for 80 hours a month, or attends school, a training program or drug recovery program, and is low-income will still be eligible for free care. Just not moochers.

House Speaker Mike Johnson tweeted last week, "Medicaid is for single mothers with small children who are just trying to make it. It's not for 29-year-old males sitting on their couch playing video games."

The Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget estimates the "work" requirement would save $140 billion over the next decade.

Republicans are proposing another $100 billion in savings by allowing states to check eligibility for Medicaid more than once a year. The Biden administration put into effect a wacky rule in 2024 that barred states from checking eligibility more frequently, allowing some people to stay on Medicaid after their income was too high or they were no longer disabled or caring for a dependent. Let's spend Medicaid dollars on the truly needy.

As for Hochul's bombast that changes to Medicaid will bankroll billionaires, the truth is that current federal spending is "unsustainable," per the nonpartisan General Accounting Office. Without changes, everyone in the U.S. will be clobbered with higher inflation and interest rates.

Take it from Javier Milei, Argentina's president, elected in 2023. He campaigned with a chainsaw, pledging deep cuts to his government's out-of-control spending. At that time, his country had one of the highest inflation rates in the world. A year later, inflation is coming down fast.

Congress isn't taking a chainsaw to Medicaid, but Republicans are looking to slow spending growth. That will allow Congress to renew Trump's 2017 tax cuts, which are about to expire.

Before 2017, the U.S. was losing 10 multinational corporate headquarters a year to countries with lower corporate taxes. After Trump's 2017 cuts, the exodus stopped. Renewing those corporate tax cuts is essential to save American jobs. Possibly yours.

Hochul doesn't get that. Like several Democratic governors before her, she's oblivious to the damage done by uncontrolled spending and high taxes – a major reason swaths of upstate New York are wastelands.

When you hear the demagogues oppose Medicaid "cuts," remember that not making these changes is what is dangerous to you – your job security and your ability to afford necessities and even to buy a home. Don't fall for the phony sob stories.

2.3.4 The Only Immigrant Democrats Don't Support: Elon Musk (2025-03-05 19:26)

Have you noticed, everyone, that the crescendo of hatred toward [1]Elon Musk is becoming surreal?

We had a congresswoman from Ohio, I think her name was Marcy Kaptur, she recently said that she wasn't sure where Elon Musk's loyalties lay because he'd only been a citizen for 22 years.

He's a naturalized citizen. This is very interesting because, remember, [2]the Left says that people who are here illegally, and not citizens, should gain all of the protections and rights of citizens. They should be de facto citizens. Anybody who would question a naturalized citizen's loyalty, according to the Left, would be xenophobic, nativist.

I think Rep. Kaptur has actually voted for resolutions damning—if I could use that word—Republicans for being insensitive to the status of immigrants, whether legal or illegal.

This follows a whole series of personal attacks. We had posters in Washington, D.C., saying, "Eliminate Musk." We had a man arrested from Indiana online for promising, threatening to kill Elon Musk.

Here in California we have Rep. [Robert] Garcia, I think his name is. And he was on television and he said that Elon Musk was a d—. And when called on it, he said you had to bring weapons, i.e., against Musk, for this bar fight. WEAPONS.

Then we had this unhinged minister, Caudle—was that his name? I think it was. Steve Caudle from Tennessee. And he got up in his pulpit—and it was televised—and he said that Elon Musk was satanic, a devil, and sometimes you had to use violence to stop such devilry.

Add all of this up and you're getting to the situation in which the bar of what is permissible has been drastically lowered.

We have turned someone who has saved the U.S. space program and will probably save two astronauts, who otherwise would perish in space if it was left to the government program; who reinvented the entire auto industry; who opened up all of [3]social media with X—we have turned this person into a demon. A disloyal demon. A traitor. Someone that we smear and we slander all day long.

For what? For saying the following: that the $36 trillion in debt and the $1.5- $2 trillion, and [4]Joe Biden in some years had $5 trillion and $6 trillion deficits, are unsustainable. And through a series of revenue enhancements and drastic cuts of programs that are unnecessary, we can get near a balanced budget.

He takes no money. He's not confirmed as the head of a government agency, but, of course, there's all sorts of deputies and heads of agencies that require no confirmation, including the national security adviser of the United States of America.

So, what is my point? We saw this earlier with [5]Donald Trump.

Just a few days before the first assassination attempt, Joe Biden told a group of people that it's time "to put Donald Trump in the bull's-eye." He ranted and raved about semi-fascist and ultra-MAGA, as if they were somehow dangerous insurrectionaries and threatened the republic. At the same time he was saying this, The New Republic ran a cover story of Elon Musk as Hitler, with a Hitlerian mustache.

Remember, we had had retired generals who said he was Nazi-like. He was equivalent to people who had set up the concentration and, indeed, death camps at Auschwitz. And he was synonymous with Mussolini.

And what did that do? That lowered the acceptable discourse. And that lowering of discourse led to acceptable behavior, such as two assassination attempts.

So, all I would warn the Left is, I think it's time to stop this. Because if you continue this rhetoric, somebody—as this person in Indiana or this minister in Tennessee—is going to openly call for violence, if they have not already, against one of the most iconic Americans in our history. And when that happens, the responsibility is going to be on you.

So, it's time to tone down the rhetoric and stop comparing a Renaissance American citizen—A CITIZEN, A CITIZEN—to one of the worst mass murders in history.

2.3.5 Pentagon's Partisan Letter Against Trump, Hegseth Debunked (2025-03-05 19:27)

Hello, this is Victor Davis Hanson for The Daily Signal. Recently, there's been a lot of controversy because five former secretaries of defense—that would be [1]Lloyd Austin, Jim Mattis, Leon Panetta, Chuck Hagel, and William Perry—have all written a letter to Congress criticizing President Donald Trump's administration, and in particular, Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth and Donald Trump, for firing a number of officers, including the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Charles Brown.

And they said, "This is reckless, it hurts morale, and it will depress recruitment." Let's analyze that just for a second.

Recruitment reached near-record levels after the election of [2]Donald Trump. It's on the way up. It was depressed prior to that. Why would it be depressed? If you go through the Pentagon data, it's very hard to decipher.

They keep records on race, gender, sexual orientation, on promotion, on units, composition, but they don't like to do it on combat fatalities or the particular demographics that are not signing up, according to their past percentages.

If you wade through that, you will learn that recruitment was off among white males who die disproportionately at double their numbers in the demographic. So, it's an important demographic and they were not signing. Why? I think for two reasons.

Eighty-five hundred of them, in the majority, I think, were white males who refused to get the vaccination and most had natural immunity. That was a very poor decision to drum them out of the military. Now we're trying to get some of them back.

The second is, when you had that testimony by Gen. Mark Milley and Lloyd Austin about suggestions to read professor, now the discredited professor Ibram X. Kendi, [3]the DEI emphasis, the idea that we're going to run an investigation of the rank and file to see if there were white supremacists, white rage, white privilege—that depressed recruitment. And now, that has been swept away, recruitment is coming back up.

So, I don't quite understand their worry about recruitment.

What I'm getting at is, this is not the politicalization of the Pentagon. It's the depoliticalization. And it's not new. Generals have been fired by prior presidents.

Gen. David McKiernan—the theater commander of Afghanistan—fired by [4]President Barack Obama with very little explanation. Gen. Stanley McChrystal, an untoward remark, fired his replacement. And one of the signees of the letter, Jim Mattis, fired by Obama without much explanation. He was CENTCOM commander. He was doing a good job. He was fired. He signed the letter.

I could go on. There were three or four other generals that were prominent that Obama fired. So, it's not new. President Joe Biden came in and he fired all of the 18 political appointments on the defense advisory board. That just happens. I was on the nonpolitical American Battlefield Monuments Commission. As soon as Obama came in 2009, he fired all of us.

So, this idea that we're relieving commanders or defense personnel or advisory boards—it's not, it's not.

The next thing is, [5]the Pentagon has real problems. With this emphasis on DEI, they have flunked—they have neglected things.

We are short 155 mm shells. We are short certain types of cruise missiles—Javelins. Our munitions stockpiles are depleted. DEPLETED. We have failed three outside audits in the Pentagon since they were initiated in 2017.

We allowed a Chinese balloon to traverse the continental United States with impunity. I think the Red Sea and the Strait of Hormuz, the South China Sea, and the Black Sea were pretty much off-limits to international shipping for a time because we had lost deterrents. We didn't reply to over a hundred attacks on U.S. installations in Syria and Iraq.

So, there are fundamental problems in the Pentagon—budgetary, military—and they need to be addressed.

The other thing that I thought was strange about the letter is, very quickly, Lloyd Austin was AWOL for several days. He signed the letter. He could have been fired for that, lower-ranking officers were. Jim Mattis and Chuck Hagel were fired as defense secretaries. I mean, you could argue whether it was fair or not, but they were dismissed.

But more importantly, Leon Panetta signed this letter. He was one, also, of the 51 intelligence authorities that said, right on the eve of the election and on a few days before the 2020 debate, that Hunter [Biden's] laptop, which was in the hands of the FBI and authenticated, had all the hallmarks of a Russian information, which meant disinformation, campaign.

So, in other words, Leon Panetta is now decrying the politicalization of the Pentagon when he went out before an election and tried to use his fee days as a former CIA director and defense secretary to basically lie to the American people in order to arm Joe Biden before the debate so he could deny what was factual: The laptop was authentic. That affected the 2020 election.

So, where am I coming to in conclusion? Very quickly, this will all be adjudicated. Either the new Pentagon, for the first time, will pass an audit or it won't. Whether recruitment, which has reached almost record numbers since the election, 350 per day in the military—whether we restore recruitment or not, it will be adjudicated. Whether the defense cuts are wise or not will be adjudicated. Whether we have deterrence in the Red Sea, the Middle East, Ukraine will be adjudicated.

But before they are adjudicated, it seems to be highly irresponsible for a number of former secretaries to accuse the administration of politicalization.

I have one last statement. Gen. Brown was a political Joint Chiefs chairman, general. He, on a number of occasions, pontificated about race and gender. And that was not central to his mission. He gave editorialization to the American people about DEI. And more importantly, he followed from a Joint Chief who was very political.

Remember Mark Milley? He contacted his Chinese counterpart in the People's Liberation Army to warn him that if he, Milley, diagnosed Donald Trump as erratic, he would first warn the Communist Chinese general.

He also, remember, interrupted the chain of command. As chairman of the Joint Chiefs, he has no role in the chain of command. Milley usurped that role and told theater commanders to report to him first, not the defensive secretary. And then, upon retirement, he called the former president and active presidential campaign a fascist.

I could go on and on. But we know that we have seen numerous violations of Article 88 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, in which retired generals have called then-President and Commander in Chief Trump a fascist, Nazi-like, Mussolini-like, a congenital liar, and comparable to the architects of Auschwitz.

Bottom line: We don't need any more letters from so-called experts. They're always partisan. And they're to no effect.

2.3.6 Marxist-Leninist American Civil War 2? (2025-03-06 19:08)

We are already in a civil war, two entities fighting for control of the government. It's not a shooting war—yet—it's a cultural and ideological war between those who love America and want to keep her traditions of limited government, virtuous republicanism, and Judeo-Christian morality alive, against an enemy who hates America and wants to turn it into a licentious, morally putrid, Marxist totalitarian state. There is a war going on, all right, and only time will determine if it will turn into a real shooting conflict.

The Left is angry, infuriated, and they are full of hate right now (as always). The Left, by definition, has no conscience; nobody who murders babies, mutilates children for sexual perverts, or lets men beat up women for sporting pleasure, has one iota of decency, morality, or goodness in their bones. The Left, given its history with Lenin, Hitler, Stalin, Mao, Castro, Pol Pot, etc., believes in violence; some Leftists in America have already been advocating violence against Mr. Trump. What will the Left do? How far away are they from starting a true, violent civil war?

They aren't going to give up and they aren't going to change. There isn't going to be any mass Saul of Tarsus into Paul the apostle conversions here. America is a divided country now, ideologically worse than it has ever been divided before. And this isn't going to change any time soon. Indeed, it will take at least two generations TO change it because the current millennials have already been indoctrinated into godless Leftism, and they will teach their children the same thing. While patriotic, God-fearing Americans slept, the Left stole the education system for several decades, and we now see the result in the current Democratic Party and Leftist hate-America decadence. We didn't get into this horror overnight, and we aren't going to get out of it overnight. Unless and until patriotic Americans take over the education system, and start re-educating America's youth in the values of traditional America, we'll never save the country. And the Left will fight us all the way.

But I am concerned about the Left's coming reaction to their current plight. Are they going to just sit back and take it? Will they only fight politically, at the ballot box? How long before these people, who have no conscience or self-control, erupt into uncontrollable torrents of hatred and real physical violence?

Is another shooting civil war inevitable?

Leftists don't believe in God, at least the traditional God of America, the one of Judeo-Christian heritage. Each Leftist creates his/her own "god" and makes their own rules for their own behavior. And people who make their own rules are extremely dangerous because they have no standards of action except their own personal beliefs, their own judgment of right and wrong. They'll murder babies and mutilate children if THEY think it is "right" and acceptable behavior. This has been Leftism for the past 250 years. Robespierre, Hitler, Lenin, Stalin, Mao, and others Leftists operated on the same basis—they set their own rules, and thought it was acceptable to murder hundreds of millions of people to create the Utopia they wanted to create. That's the "moral standard" of modern Leftism.

American Leftists are no different from Leftists any other place on earth—a Leftist is a Leftist is a Leftist is a globalist totalitarian. Look at current Europe. Does anyone honestly believe American Leftists, Democrats, are different? Leftists will do whatever they can get away with. They are bottled up right now, but if they ever return to power, I fear their determination will be, "we have to make sure nothing like Trump EVER happens again." The frightening question is, what will they do to obtain power? And once they have the power they craved, they've proven across the globe that they'll stop at nothing to fulfill their goals.

Civil war might be the least of our worries.

I strongly disagree with most of what Franklin Roosevelt did (I wasn't alive then), and I disapproved of much of what Lyndon Johnson did (I WAS alive then), but I've never thought either man was deliberately trying to destroy America or change the country into a stinking, decadent cesspool of ungodly Marxist putridity like today's Democrats are attempting to do. FDR, LBJ, and the Democrats of yesteryear weren't intentionally endeavoring to wipe out the nuclear family and Judeo-Christian moral values, though neither FDR nor LBJ had the intelligence or far-sightedness to understand what the consequences of many of their policies would be.

But today's Leftist, today's Democratic Party leadership is completely different. They are totally anti-Christianity and anti-traditional American values of a virtuous, free republic. Their world outlook and philosophy is such that they are determined to destroy both Christianity and traditional America. Average Democrats can't, or won't, see it, but such is the goal of Democratic Party hierarchy. And make no mistake about that. They fully intend to change America into their utopian vision of what they think the country ought to be. And that vision does NOT include the Christian God and Madisonian republicanism. And freedom for you.

Today's Democratic Party is very different from that of FDR, JFK, LBJ, and is certainly not the party of Andrew Jackson, Grover Cleveland, William Jennings Bryan, or Woodrow Wilson. The Left now doesn't believe what these men believed and don't want what they wanted. They would reject Grover Cleveland and even JFK. The Democrats today do not want my America; they don't even want the America of their own party 100 years ago.

What's the solution? There is one, short of civil war, but it's not a solution any of us want. But I'll discuss it in an upcoming article.

2.3.7 Jasmine Crockett Outdoes Herself Yet Again, Claims Trump Wants to Send Black People 'Back to the Fields' (2025-03-06 19:14)

We've been covering how extremely anti-Trump Rep. Jasmine Crockett (D-TX) has been, [1]especially recently, throwing out all sorts of accusations about President Donald Trump. Just when it seems she couldn't go any further, she comes up with a worse comment. Democrats' performative tricks weren't merely limited to the outbursts in the chamber [2]on Tuesday night when Trump gave a speech before a joint session of Congress. Crockett did her own event, "24-Hour State of the People Marathon," meant to counter Trump's speech. It was then that she made some rather noteworthy remarks about Trump, immigration, and black people.

As Rusty Weiss at our sister site of RedState [3]shared, Crockett, gesturing wildly as she did so, went on a rant about how they have decided to go after immigrants, and things like that, and they've said, 'oh, they've taken your black jobs, they've taken your black jobs,'" adding, "not really."

"They are obviously jobs that they want us to go back to," Crockett continued. "Such as working the fields, all right?" The Reverend Dr. Frederick D. Haynes, III, whom Crockett was speaking to, could be seen nodding along in agreement. "Those immigrants that come into our country, they work the fields, something that we ain't done in a long time, and clearly, he is trying to make us go back to the fields!"

Rep. Jasmine Crockett continues going for gold in the Stupid Olympics, saying enforcing immigration laws is Trump's way of trying to send black people "back to the fields." [4]pic.twitter.com/TZliWzHYzP— Rusty (@Rusty_Weiss) [5]March 6, 2025

As Weiss also pointed out, such claims are reminiscent of the 2012 reelection campaign for Barack Obama, when Joe Biden was his vice president. Speaking before a crowd on the campaign trail, [6]Biden declared that Republicans were "going to put y'all back in chains!"

These fearmongering talking points about immigrants may sound nice to far-leftists to gin up their supporters, but that doesn't make them any more true. Democratic allies in the legacy media also repeat such narratives, though, as we saw at the very start of the second Trump administration, especially over CNN.

Recommen

Approximately one week after Trump was inaugurated, Jake Tapper went with similar talking points when speaking with Stephen Miller, who has worked for the Trump White House both terms and is now the White House deputy chief of staff for policy.

Tapper rattled off numbers about illegal immigrants working in agriculture and fearmongering on prices, even adding, "in many of cases, as you know, these migrants do jobs many Americans do not want to do," prompting a smirk from Miller. When Miller did get the chance to speak, he called Tapper out for raising an argument about exploitive labor.

"I'm sure it's not your position, Jake, you're just asking the question, that we should supply America's food with exploitative, illegal alien labor." He also went on to remind that "only 1 percent of alien workers in the entire country work in agriculture. The top destination for illegal aliens are large cities like New York, like Los Angeles and small, industrial towns, of course, all across the heartland."

"None of those illegal aliens are doing farm work," Miller made clear, also adding points about illegal immigration during the Biden-Harris administration while Tapper tried to talk over him. "The illegal aliens that Joe Biden brought into our country are not full stop doing farm work."

They are not! The illegal aliens he brought in from Venezuela, from Haiti, from Nicaragua. They are not doing farm work. They are in our cities collecting welfare," he added. "As for the farmers, there is a guest worker program that President Trump supports," Miller also offered.

□HOLY SMOKE: [7]@StephenM just scorched a combative Jake Tapper and his "who's going to pick the crops!" propaganda:

"Well, I mean, I'm sure it's not your position, Jake. You're just asking the question that we should supply America's food with exploitative, illegal alien labor.... [8]pic.twitter.com/dhBsJpN59W— Western Lensman (@WesternLensman) [9]January 28, 2025

Another fellow far-leftist congressman, Rep. Hank Johnson (D-GA), also gave remarks about black people, this time to do with education and Trump's plan to get rid of the Department of Education. "

"It's a recipe to make education unavailable to black people," Johnson claimed. "It puts us back to when America was 'great,' and we were picking cotton and doing the productivity that they're putting my Latino brothers and sisters who migrate here to do that work because we are not suited intellectually to do it anymore."

"But they would have us back, confined to doing that kind of work," he also said, going for even more fearmongering. "We gotta watch out for where we are headed."

The Democrats' comments have since become [10]a trending topic over X, with even other members of Congress, such as Rep. Brandon Gill (R-TX) chiming in with a post that tanked both Crockett and Johnson. Gill called the comments "deranged" and "completely off base," and also insisted that "they should apologize."

Thanks to President Trump, illegal immigration into our great country has virtually stopped. Despite the radical left's lies, new legislation wasn't needed to secure our border, just a new president.

2.3.8 Trump Administration Might Be Targeting the 'Crown Jewel' of the Global Warming Cult (2025-03-11 20:41)

Some folks told me that in 2013 the Arctic Ice Cap would disappear. By 2014, it added around 530,000 square miles of new ice. The weather is now their main talking point, even though we've had these seasons for extreme weather for generations. You might know them; they're called hurricane and tornado seasons. Even then, in 2013-14, it was the calmest hurricane season in 30 years. For tornados, it was the quietest in 60 years. Has there been more activity since then? Sure, but it circles back to our point: these things are cyclical. If industrialization causes so-called global warming, please explain the Medieval Warm Period. It lasted for 500 years.

Advertisement

In January, E &E News, which Politico owns—this is all before they were busted for having USAID as their sugar daddy—[1]were raising the alarm regarding the Trump administration’s plan to target the National Climate Assessment, which some view as the “crown jewel” of global warming research, aka hysterics and propaganda. Oh yes, the Project 2025, which no one cares about because it’s so soaked in conspiracy theory nonsense, was referenced multiple times:

Scientists and climate policy experts say the proposed changes — which are being pushed by aides to President-elect Donald Trump — run the risk of undermining a foundational reference for government officials. And they say it could make it harder to craft future U.S. policies to address global warming.

The goal of the next administration “is to undermine any policies aimed at accelerating the transition from fossil fuels to renewable energy,” said Michael Mann, a climate scientist and director of the Center for Science, Sustainability and the Media at the University of Pennsylvania.

The drive to reshape the National Climate Assessment is being led by one man: Russell Vought, a conservative warrior whom Trump wants to lead his Office of Management and Budget. [UPDATE: he is leading it now]

According to the Project 2025 playbook, Vought wants to produce a version of the climate report that includes more “diverse viewpoints.” That phrase often has been used by opponents of climate regulation to describe researchers who are known to cast doubt on peer-reviewed science and often are affiliated with industry or conservative think tanks.

Vought’s proposal would also increase his own power to shape the report and pick the researchers who are working on it.

OMB and the Office of Science and Technology Policy would jointly “assess the independence of the contractors used to conduct much of this outsourced government research that serves as the basis for policymaking,” he wrote in the Project 2025 report.

Don Wuebbles, an emeritus professor of atmospheric science at the University of Illinois who worked on all five of the previous National Climate Assessments, said Vought’s push to include more diverse voices was in fact cover to bring in “more biased” ones.

“It will make the U.S. look like clowns to the rest of the world,” he said. “They’re going to try to basically say, ‘We don’t know enough to do anything about the climate,’ which is nonsense.”

2.3.9 Rashida Tlaib Really Let Her True Colors Show on Monday (2025-03-11 20:44)

e’ve covered plenty how radical Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-MI), a member of the anti-Israel Squad, is. She was not only [1]censured in a bipartisan vote by the House in November 2023, but she’s also been [2]the lone vote against some common-sense bills, especially if such bills dare to show support for Israelis and/or not enough for Palestinians. Tlaib also opposes border security bills, though. Such was the case on Monday night, when the House voted 402-1 on the Subterranean Border Defense Act.

Such a bill, introduced by Reps. Eli Crane (R-AZ) and Lou Correa (D-CA), would “require annual reports on counter illicit cross-border tunnel operations,” [3]according to the bill’s text. There’s not much else to it, which is why all members who were there to vote, except Tlaib, could bring themselves to vote for it. There were 29 members, [4]coming from both parties, who did not vote.

Tlaib's opposition [5]has been a trending topic over X for Monday and Tuesday. She didn't post to either of her X accounts to explain why she was the lone dissenter. She did, however, post plenty about Mahmoud Khalil, the pro-Hamas agitator who is responsible for anti-Israel protests taking place at Columbia University, and who participated in such protests at its sister school of Barnard College. He is set to be deported, [6]though a judge has put a halt to that, with a hearing taking place on Wednesday. We've covered how many on the left have [7]rushed to defend the Syrian-born activist, but Tlaib is in her own category.

[8]In a quoted repost from the Senate Judiciary Democrats on Monday night, Tlaib posted a particularly hysterical message from her political account, though it was only one of many. "We all have to fight back against fascism. This is a test case and it couldn't be more important we stop this and bring him home," she claimed. "Mahmoud's rights are our rights. If they can illegally abduct him and shred his legal rights, they will never stop. Anyone this lawless administration disagrees with can be targeted," she added, going for the same fearmongering others have, though Khalil is under threat of deportation for very specific reasons.

A quoted repost of Tlaib from Rabbi Samuel Stern [9]singled out a particular part of Tlaib's post, specifically "Bring him home."

"She's using 'Bring him home' intentionally. There is no Jewish trauma that Rashida won't abuse for the sake of Palestinianism," the rabbi pointed out about the congresswoman. The congresswoman [10]has taken an anti-Israel position since even before the attack from Hamas on October 7, 2023, though she's still continued to attack our ally in the Middle East, even spreading falsehoods, [11]which led to bipartisan condemnation from both chambers and contributed in part to her censure.

Another post from the congresswoman's political account [12]was a repost from Sen. Peter Welch (D-VT), who was taking issue with President Donald Trump's [13]position on deporting Khalil and other pro-Hamas terrorist sympathizers. "This is the first arrest of many to come," a Monday morning post from Trump warned. "If you support terrorism, including the slaughtering of innocent men, women, and children, your presence is contrary to our national and foreign policy interests, and you are not welcome here. We expect every one of America's Colleges and Universities to comply," Trump's post also mentioned in part.

"Mahmoud Khalil is a permanent legal resident who is entitled to First Amendment protections like everyone in this country," Welch claimed, as if that's what this incident was about. Like many other leftists have done, the senator also went for hysterical fearmongering. "If Trump starts illegally revoking green cards from people because he doesn't like their speech, we're on the path to full-blown authoritarianism."

Then there's Tlaib's official account. [14]In a quoted repost of Mai El-Sadany, the executive director of The Tahrir Institute for Middle East Policy, the congresswoman engaged still more in hysterical fearmongering, also adding in anti-Israel narratives in the process.

"Free Mahmoud Khalil. This is straight out of the fascist playbook. Criminalizing dissent is an assault on our First Amendment and freedom of speech. Revoking someone's green card for expressing their political opinion is illegal. Protesting genocide is not a crime," Tlaib's post mentioned.

On Tuesday, [15]Tlaib shared another update, which is that she and 13 other radical leftists in the House have sent a letter to Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Secretary Kristi Noem demanding that Khalil be released.

"I'm joining 13 of my colleagues to demand that the Trump Administration immediately releases Mahmoud Khalil. Their illegal actions set a dangerous precedent. We cannot allow them to shred our constitutional rights to free speech and due process. Free Mahmoud Khalil," Tlaib wrote in her post accompanying the letter.

The letter also brought racism into it, and then went on to warn that all Americans should be concerned by claiming that "Khalil's arrest is an act of anti-Palestinian racism intended to silence the Palestine solidarity movement in this country, but this lawless abuse of power and political repression is a threat to all Americans." Speaking about Trump's message that "This is the first arrest of many to come," the letter also warned that "if unchecked, this authoritarian playbook will be applied to any and all opposition to his undemocratic agenda."

Advertisement

The Trump administration, including the president himself, [16]has made clear that pro-Hamas terrorist sympathizers from other countries will be deported to where they came from.

That only 14 particularly leftist members signed onto the letter was taken none too lightly by other radical leftists in the media. "[17]Only 14 Democrats Sign Mahmoud Khalil Letter as Everyone Else Cowers," decried a headline from The New Republic. In addition to Tlaib, many other anti-Israel Squad members signed on, including Reps. Delia Ramirez (D-IL), Ilhan Omar (D-MN), Summer Lee (D-PA), and Ayanna Pressley (D-MA).

Others included Rep. Mark Pocan (D-WI), [18]who once gleefully declared he wanted to fulfill the International Criminal Court (ICC) arrest warrant against Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, as well as Reps. Nydia Velázquez's (D-NY), Jasmine Crockett (D-TX), Lateefah Simon (D-CA), Al Green (D-TX), Gwen Moore (D-WI), Andre Carson (D-IN), Nikema Williams (D-GA), and James McGovern (D-MA).

2.3.10 Elon Musk Accuses George Soros of Bankrolling Tesla Protests (2025-03-11 20:48)

Elon Musk is accusing prominent Democratic donors George Soros and LinkedIn co-founder Reid Hoffman of financially supporting protests against Tesla. In a recent statement, Musk suggested that both Soros and Hoffman were behind organized efforts to disrupt Tesla's operations, fueling tension between the tech billionaire and high-profile political figures. The accusations have sparked a heated debate, with Musk claiming the protests were part of a larger political strategy to undermine his company's success.

Five Act-Blue-funded groups, a Democratic fundraising platform, are reportedly the masterminds behind the protests targeting Tesla. Musk said that Troublemakers, Disruption Project, Rise & Resist, Indivisible Project, and Democratic Socialists of America are leading the protests, which he claims are politically motivated.

In addition to Soros and Hoffman, Musk accused hedge fund tycoon Herbert Sandler of funding the protests.

"ActBlue funders include George Soros, Reid Hoffman, Herbert Sandler, Patricia Bauman, and Leah Hunt-Hendrix," he said, adding that ActBlue has also been under investigation for allowing illegal foreign donations. "This week, seven ActBlue senior officials resigned, including the associate general counsel. If you know anything about this, please post in replies. Thanks, Elon."

Musk claimed this is part of a broader effort to undermine Tesla.

Once considered a sought-after vehicle, Teslas are now experiencing a surge in trade-ins, with dealerships facing a significant return increase. Growing frustration over Musk's political shift during the Trump administration has led some drivers to add bumper stickers that read, "I Bought This Before Elon Went Crazy."

On Tuesday, President Donald Trump and Elon Musk addressed the press outside the White House, where several Teslas were parked for Trump to inspect—and potentially buy

Trump touted the electric vehicle, saying no production car is more "made in America" than Tesla.

"I love Tesla," Trump said. "Elon Musk has never asked me for anything. I didn't even know he was going to endorse me. I even ended the electric mandate and I kept thinking when is this guy going to call me and raise hell and he never called me. If I were him, I would have called."

Reporters inquired whether Trump's purchase of a Tesla was aimed at boosting the company's stock.

Musk also announced that Tesla would double U.S. vehicle production because of Trump's policies."As an act of faith in America, Tesla is going to double vehicle output in the United States over the next 2 years. Double."

2.3.11 Our Closest Friend Is Becoming Our Frenemy (2025-03-11 20:59)

He's in hot water with the Canadians. He's aroused a dormant nationalism. Justin Trudeau—who will step down as prime minister and hand the Liberal Party directorship and with it the prime ministership, under their parliamentary system, to [1]Mark Carney—was headed toward defeat.

That whole party was headed toward defeat when Donald Trump started to troll them—"Art of the Deal"—sort of goad them in bombastic style that they should be the 51st state in the union of the United States. They got very angry about it, especially when he brought up a series of outstanding issues.

And the result is that a Conservative politician, Pierre Poilievre, may lose the election. And that would be tragic because Canadians are basically saying, in their anger at us, that if you're liberal and you are anti-American, we'll vote for you, but if you're conservative and pro-American, they won't.

We've got to correct that. But Donald Trump does have a point on a number of issues.

No. 1, Canada runs up a $50 billion surplus with us. It usually has, except for a few years, always run a surplus. But it's getting bigger and bigger. It's based on a couple of facts: exports to us, a lot of gas and oil and electricity, and it protects, in two different ways, both with tariffs and with state subsidies, its agricultural and timber industries. And it puts tariffs as high as 250 % on things like American butter or milk or lumber and timber—things like that.

So, it's running up a sizable trade surplus. I think it's about the sixth nation in the world in terms of its surplus with the United States.

The second issue that Donald Trump has mentioned is the open border. Now, usually, we just think of [2]border problems with Mexico. After all, we've got this long, long, historically calm border—unfortified, no fence, no wall—with Canada. But lately, there's been some fentanyl—not as much, hardly as much as Mexico. Maybe 2 % of fentanyl comes across from Canada. But there have been terrorists and there have been illegal aliens. So, Trump wants that border secure.

Third, Canada is a [3]member of NATO. In 2014, there was an agreement that all NATO countries would supply 2 % of their gross domestic product and defense spending. Canada is one of the lowest—it's 1.3 %.

This is astounding because in World War II, the Canadian Navy was the third largest in the world. Juno Beach, on D-Day, was reserved for the First Canadian Army. It had one of the most successful armies on the Allied side. It has a wonderful military tradition, and yet, they just laugh at the idea that they're going to rearm.

And they're not meeting their NATO commitments. And to be frank, in some ways, they're subsidized by the United States with our North American NORAD shield. And they know that if any country were to threaten Canada—and I think that would be unlikely—the United States would step in and shield it and protect it.

So, there's a trade surplus. There's this problem with Trudeau that Trump does not—whom he does not like. And there's a problem with an open border. And there's a problem, as I said, with defense spending.

What's the remedy? I wish it could be solved, this divide, by the absence of Pierre Trudeau, but it won't. These other issues are outstanding.

We don't want Canada as a 51st state. [4]Donald Trump knows that. "Art of the Deal," as I said, trolling style, he knows that. Canada is a very left-wing country. Socialized medicine. State-run industries. Its GDP is not as great as similar-size California, which also has 40 million people, but its per capita income averages about like Mississippi. I don't think it's as large as Mississippi's per capita income.

But more importantly, if it was a state, it would get—the whole country as a state—it would get two left-wing senators and probably 50 left-wing House of Representatives.

So, let me just finish. How do we resolve it? All Canada has to do is lower its tariffs on certain American products and get the surplus down from $50 to $20 billion.

And then, it's got an excellent record of shipbuilding. And we have a problem in the Arctic Circle with China and Russia infringing on the North American parts of the Arctic. And all Canada would have to do is revive its hallowed shipbuilding industry. Why doesn't it just build 20 icebreakers? They used to be one of the best countries in the world in that type of shipbuilding and operation.

They could come to America and say, "Where do—how do we make an Iron Dome together, America? Here's key places in Canada where you might want to put missile defense places. Here's 20 ice-breaking ships that we will staff and keep the Arctic clear of China and Russian intrusions." That would help. They could produce—patrol the border just a little bit more, and we would have no problem.

But right now, our closest friend is becoming one of our frenemies, if not one of our enemies, and it should stop as quickly as possible.

2.3.12 Trump Has Many Reasons to Be Upset With Mexico (2025-03-11 21:02)

President Donald Trump has threatened all sorts of trade sanctions on Mexico, a 25 % tariff. But why is he doing this? And I think the answer is there's four things that Mexico knows it has been doing to us with impunity, especially under Joe Biden, that are not sustainable.

The first, it used to run under NAFTA $10- $20 billion trade surplus. Then it went to $40 billion, then it went to $50 billion. And then, during Donald Trump's first term, we renegotiated it. It kind of stayed static. Now it's over $175 billion.

But get this, it's mostly due to China evading tariffs on China by sending raw product materials to Mexico—computers, phones, appliances to be assembled by Mexicans, and then sent under free trade agreements with us, to the benefit of Mexico and China.

But $175 billion—that is the second-largest trade surplus of any country. It's getting close to China itself.

No. 2 is that we had this open border. Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador, the former Mexican president, said it was a beautiful thing that 40 million people—Mexicans—had come in illegally to the United States. Twelve million or more came in during Joe Biden's tenure. That was all done with the contrivance of Mexico.

Remember, Mexico looked at that open border as a win-win-win-win situation, No. 1. And Frederick Jackson Turner's theory of the safety valve—they thought that when people were dissatisfied and underserved in Mexico, especially southern Mexicans, who were indigenous and subject to a great deal of hostility and prejudice by Mexico City, they would go to El Norte rather than march on Mexico City. And they did.

No. 2, they felt that they would form an expatriate community. And that expatriate community, which, as Mr. Obrador claims, is 40 million people—I don't know if it's quite that large—but they're a powerful force for the Mexican government's point of view within the United States. There are 50 consulates that Mexico puts in the United States to develop that chauvinism and that pro-Mexican attitude among Americans, residents, and citizens.

No. 3, the remittances. Sixty-three billion dollars come to Mexico and that money comes largely from illegal aliens. But more importantly, it comes from people receiving state, local, and federal subsidies. So, you, the taxpayer—in terms of health subsidies, education subsidies, housing, food subsidies—are freeing up cash to send $63 billion back to Mexico.

There's another problem, and that is the cartels. They welcome in, with the connivance or neglect—I don't know how you want to term it—of the Mexican government, Mexican fentanyl product shipped from China.

So, China sends raw fentanyl. Factories that are controlled by the cartels disguise that fentanyl and lace it in drugs that are recreational and that people take in the United States without knowing that the high they're getting is coming from a cheaper fentanyl. And the result is 60,000 to 100,000 Americans are dying every year because of the cartels.

That is another issue that Trump wants to address.

Add it all up, if you add $20 billion, at least, that the cartels are profiting from American drug sales, as well as sending illegal aliens through coyotes and through guides into the United States, who pay the cartel for illegal crossings. And you add that $20 billion to the $63 billion in remittances and you add the $63 billion to the $175 billion in trade surplus, you're looking at almost $260 billion of American cash that's going to Mexico. And they all have that one thing in common, they all share a degree of illegality.

They are breaking trade agreements by reassembling Chinese products and running up a huge surplus. They are breaking immigration laws by exporting people here and then sending back cash— $63 billion worth in remittances. And they are breaking drug laws and immigration laws through the cartels.

Donald Trump, in this case, has far more cause to be angry with Mexico than he does with Canada. But what we are witnessing, in conclusion, is a complete reexamination of the entire North American paradigm of three once-close nations.

I want to add one thing. Mexico thinks that we're not serious, but they should look at the recent Pew international poll. For the first time, 60 % of Americans have an unfavorable view of Mexico. And if they think that having Mexican nationals shut down American freeways and wave the flag of the country under no circumstances which they are willing to return to while burning the flag under all circumstances they want to stay and that's going to win back American public approval, it's not.

So, if Mexican President Claudia Sheinbaum was wise, she would negotiate with Donald Trump, get that trade surplus from $175 billion down to $30 or $40 billion, stop all of the fentanyl, help secure the border, look at the remittances, allow us to put a tax on 10 % or 15 %, and I think we would have cordial relations again.[1]mp has threatened all sorts of trade sanctions on Mexico, a 25 % tariff. 2.3.13 The 5 Fables Surrounding Trump (2025-03-11 21:04)

Fable One: [1]Trump is appeasing Russia?

Who wiped out the Wagner Group in Syria? Who sold offensive [2]weapons to Ukraine first? Who warned Germany not to become dependent on the Russian Nord Stream 2 deal?

Who withdrew from an unfair [3]missile deal with the Russians? Who cajoled and berated NATO members to meet their military investment promises made following the 2014 invasion of Ukraine?

In contrast, who originally conceived [4]a Russian “reset” in 2009? Who publicly virtue-signaled pushing the red “reset” button in Geneva with the current Russian Minister Sergey Lavrov?

Which ex-European leader got a million euros a year working for [5]Russian energy companies?

Of the last four presidents, under whose watch did Russian President Vladimir Putin not invade another country?

Which American president, in hot-mic style, offered to (and did) dismantle U.S.-Eastern Europe missile defense plans in exchange for temporary Putin quietude (“space”) to aid his 2012 reelection?

Fable Two: A trade war?

President Donald Trump is not wildly slapping tariffs on Europeans.

He is simply saying that 1945 is now 80 years past and that the asymmetrical tariffs that Europe imposes on U.S. imports should be corrected. The massive trade surpluses Europe accumulates each year should give way to fairer, more balanced trade.

If Europe does not want tariffs, then simply calibrate its own tariffs on what America places on European imported goods, and work down jointly to zero tariffs on both sides.

Fable Three: America is bullying Europe?

The U.S. does not actively interfere in European elections and politics.

In 2024, Europeans, especially the British Laborites, bragged about sending over campaign “volunteers” to work against Trump and, earlier, his conservative predecessors.

British subject Christopher Steele sought to sabotage an entire American 2016 election with a falsified “dossier.”

The Ukrainian ambassador in 2016 wrote an op-ed all but endorsing Hillary Clinton and trashing her opponent.

In September 2024, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy was flown in on a Biden-provided U.S. military jet to Scranton, Pennsylvania—at a pivotal time in the most pivotal swing state—to surround himself with Democrat politicians.

His media-frenzied presence signaled a partisan campaign theme that a Kamala Harris win and the continuance of massive Democrat aid to Ukraine would ensure manufacturing jobs, such as the artillery shell factory he selected to visit.

As to NATO, Trump’s pressure from 2017 to 2021 finally pushed more NATO nations to rearm. But even 11 years after promising to invest a mere 2 % of gross domestic product in defense, nine of the 32 members still have not complied.

Fable Four: Negotiating with Putin is selling out?

In the long history of Western diplomacy with mass-murdering tyrants, Putin doesn’t even rank among the worst. Just ask his former reset partners Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt fueled mass-murdering “Uncle Joe” Stalin’s Red Army as a way to defeat Nazi Germany.

Richard Nixon flattered and cajoled the greatest mass murderer in history, Mao Zedong, to triangulate China against the Soviet Union.

Ronald Reagan offered to share missile defense expertise with Soviet Russia.

Europeans have hosted almost every Palestinian murderous terrorist leader, as a way either of deflecting terrorism from their own shores or emphasizing their general loathing of Israel.

Fable Five: Europe is going to save Ukraine?

Europe rushed to congratulate and celebrate with Zelenskyy after his pre-planned White House blow-up. They are loudly announcing that a supposedly isolationist and appeasing U.S.—which has sent more aid to Ukraine than all nearby European nations combined—will now be supplanted by a “new” muscular and rearmed Europe.

We sincerely hope so.

But on every recent international moral question—ganging up on a lone Israel to appease terrorist forces in the Middle East, standing up to China’s mercantilism, neo-imperialism, and domestic oppression of minorities, or Russia’s prior 2008 and 2014 invasions—European outrage has been muted, real consequences nonexistent.

We are now witnessing European heads of state sending the same old virtue-signaling support for the brave Zelenskyy, who supposedly spoke truth to power to the mean U.S. Orange Man.

But where does such performance art lead after the cult hero Zelenskyy had gnawed the hand that gorged him?

To multitudes of European tanks, skies full of European jets, and division after division of crack European infantry now heading east to “back up” Ukraine—led on horseback by its new Joan of Arc, Ursula von der Leyen?

Aside from all the present posturing and mock-heroics, the only way to save Ukraine is for the U.S. president, Donald Trump, to reflect joint Ukrainian, American, and European interests in stopping the war, forcing Putin as far back eastward as possible where he started in 2022, and creating a credible deterrent along with a DMZ/industrial corridor tripwire to stop another 2008, 2014, and 2022 invasion.

Anything else is empty carnival barking.

2.3.14 Shalom, Hamas! IDF Pounding Gaza With Massive Aerial Bombing (2025-03-17 22:59)

Enough is enough. Hamas' dithering, prevarication, and outright disrespect in the release of the October 7 hostages reached a boiling point. The terror group intentionally dragged their feet, which they've been doing ever since these mind-numbing talks started. In no way would Hamas ever fully agree to honor these ceasefire agreements. The transfer of the bodies of the hostages who Hamas murdered was also horrifying and used as propaganda props. Israel had enough: they began bombing Gaza tonight. The total obliteration of this terror group should be the only endgame. No more talking, no more ceasefires—and Jerusalem doesn't have a half-braindead president shilling for terrorists anymore from the Oval Office (via [1]ABC News):

Israel Defense Forces are conducting a series of "extensive strikes" throughout the Gaza Strip overnight on Tuesday local time, officials said in a statement.

Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defense Minister Israel Katz said the IDF is targeting Hamas terrorists throughout the region and will act with "increasing military force" against Hamas from now on.

"The IDF is currently attacking Hamas terrorist organization targets throughout the Gaza Strip, with the aim of achieving the war goals as determined by the political echelon, including the release of all our hostages - living and dead," the leaders said in the statement.

The strikes are targeting areas in Gaza including Rafah, Khan Younis, Deir al-Balah, Nuseirat, Al-Bureij, Al-Zaytoun, Al-Karama and Beit Hanoun.

In their statement, Netanyahu and Katz said the changes to the IDF's defensive guidelines come after Hamas "rejected all offers" on a conclusive hostage deal with Steve Witkoff, the U.S.'s special envoy to the Middle East.

The ceasefire between Israel and Hamas is over as Israeli fighter jets began striking the Gaza Strip after Hamas refused repeated hostage deal offers, officials said.

The Israel Defense Forces (IDF) began striking Hamas terrorist targets across Gaza "in order to achieve the war objectives set by the political leadership, including the release of all our hostages—both the living and the fallen," the office of Defense Minister Israel Katz said in a letter.

"This decision comes after Hamas repeatedly refused to release our hostages and rejected all proposals presented by U.S. President's envoy, Steve Witkoff, as well as the mediators," the letter states.

2.3.15 Is This the Aide Behind Biden's Controversial Autopen Signings? (2025-03-17 23:01)

A key aide to former President Joe Biden is under scrutiny following accusations that she overused the former president's autopen, a device typically used for signing official documents. This raised concerns about the authenticity of her signature on critical matters. In addition to this controversy, she faced a Hatch Act complaint for allegedly making illegal fundraising solicitations in her official government role. These allegations have sparked criticism over potential misuse of power and violation of ethics rules within the Biden administration.

Reports suggest Neera Tanden, Biden's former White House Staff Secretary, may have used the autopen to sign pardons while President Biden was golfing in St. Croix in December 2022. The Oversight Project pointed out that six individuals received pardons during Biden's vacation on December 30, 2022, raising concerns that the president may not have been present or fully aware that the pardons were being signed.

Last week, I [1]covered a report about documents signed by Biden's autopen that could be considered invalid, alleging that one of Biden's key aides may have abused the device to sign official papers. President Donald Trump has increased scrutiny over Biden's use of the autopen throughout his presidency, with sources close to the administration suggesting that the device may have been misused.

Trump claimed that Biden's autopen pardons are "null and void" "because I'm sure Biden didn't have any idea that it was taking place."

In response, Tanden, an ultra-progressive liberal, lashed out at Trump, urging lawyers to file lawsuits against the president.

"More importantly, does this mean everything with a Trump autopen signature is void in this Administration and the last? Because there's a lot by autopen in every Administration. Some enterprising lawyers may want to sue," Neera Tanden wrote on X on Monday.

Yes, this is a real post. Trump says the pardons signed by former President Biden are “void” because of the lie and conspiracy theory that Biden used an auto pen.

So does this mean anything Biden signed is fraudulent in Trump’s eyes? [2]pic.twitter.com/mFwgHncQbf— Stephen Anderson (@stephenreports) [3]March 17, 2025

Tanden was the president of the Center for American Progress, a left-leaning think tank that has championed progressive policies. Renowned for her outspoken criticism of conservatives, Tanden has long been seen as a symbol of the liberal establishment’s overreach. Her recent role in the Biden administration only reinforces the connection between her and the administration’s profoundly progressive agenda.

Additionally, Tanden was charged with violating the law by using social media to solicit campaign donations for Democrats despite being warned that such actions violated the Hatch Act. The Hatch Act restricts political campaigning during government hours, yet Tanden allegedly continued posting on social media, disregarding the warning.

“The absolute best thing you can do to prevent a MAGA sweep is to contribute to the campaigns of frontline House candidates,” an Aug. 28 solicitation Tanden reposted. However, she deleted it after the special counsel warned her.

2.3.16 A Perfect Storm Threatens Universities (2025-03-17 23:07)

Hello, this is Victor Davis Hanson for The Daily Signal. Have you noticed the dilemma that higher education is in? Recently, the Trump administration cut off $400 million in federal grants and aids to Columbia University for its inability to stop rampant, overt, and [1]shameless antisemitism on the campus.

It's widespread in higher education and the country's been appalled by it. But for some reason, higher education seems to equate Jewish Americans and, by definition, Israel with the white oppressor side of their Marxist binary, which is non-white oppressed versus white oppressor.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [2]Donate now

What I'm getting at is, it's almost as if people who chase Jewish students down, scream at them, yell antisemitic epithets, disrupt their classes have a free pass because they're self-described [3]diversity, equity, inclusion students.

There's other things that are going on that are even more serious, though. For a long time, the university has decided that it will make no more pretense that it's disinterested. It's partisan, and it's political, and it's left-wing, and it's proud of it.

We can see that in the way that speakers are treated at campus. If you go to a campus as an invited speaker and you speak in any fashion to express doubts about abortion on demand, transgenderism in general, [4]Green New Deal, unlimited support for the Ukraine war, you may find yourself the object of student disruptions.

We've had one, recently, at Stanford University. We've had the law school disrupted by students who tried to shout down a federal judge. But that's not unique. It's everywhere.

The university also believes that it's not subject to the 1964 and 1965 civil rights statutes. By that I mean, they have instituted racial, gender, and sexual orientation bias in admissions, promotions, hiring.

It's worse even than that. Theme houses—that's the word they use for racially segregated dorms. Safe spaces—that's the word they use for racially set aside zones on campus for particular people of a particular race.

In addition to all of that, there is no protection for anybody, really, to tell you the truth, especially on an elitist campus. If you're accused of a crime, especially sexual assault, sexual harassment, there's no guarantee that you will be accorded protections under the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments.

All of this is starting to change. We're in a perfect storm, as far as [5]higher education. There are fewer students because of declining fertility. Our fertility rate is 1.6 nationwide.

More importantly, people are questioning the value of a higher education degree. With the onset of diversity, equity, and inclusion therapeutic classes, the old reason to go to the university—to be roundly and disinterestedly educated—disappeared.

So, students did not get formal instruction in analytics, in English composition, in spoken and written fluency in English, etc., common historical knowledge, math and science literacy. And employers are starting to know it. They're starting to see that, if they're going to hire someone from Harvard, Princeton, Yale, or Stanford versus Texas Tech or SMU or Georgia Tech, they're not going to be better prepared. They're probably going to be less well prepared. And they're probably going to go to human resources on the first day of the job.

I'm exaggerating but you can see what I'm saying.

But there are other forces that don't look good for higher education besides fertility and the questioning among the American people of the quality and value of a bachelor's degree from our elite institutions. We're $1.7 trillion in student debt. And the Trump administration is looking at this. And there are certain recommendations on the horizons, as we speak, the university is not prepared for.

No. 1, the House and the Senate are trying to adjudicate how much they should tax the multimillion-dollar income on many of these multibillion-dollar endowments. It could be 15 % to 20 %.

We've mentioned cutting off federal funds for two universities that do not protect their Jewish students.

There's also another factor going on and that is National Science Foundation, National Institutes of Health grants. The federal government is now saying, "Don't charge us an overhead of 60 %, 50 %, 40 %. You universities don't do that with the Gates Foundation grants or other private sector grants. From now on, you're not gonna charge more than a 15 % overhead."

And when you add that radical reduction in surcharges to a possible and likely tax on endowment income, the universities, in many cases, the most prestigious and wealthy, may be looking at $300, $400, $500 million shortfalls in their annual operating budget, besides any punitive action that the federal government exercises because of their unwillingness or inability to protect Jewish students.

Do we see any reaction from college presidents? Is there a summit? Is there a sense of urgency? Is there some consensus that we don't charge the [6]federal government more than we do private grant-making institutions? Is there some notion that we should, I don't know, honor the content of our character rather than obsess on the color of our skin?

I don't see anything coming from the universities other than outrage. They have a rendezvous with destiny and it's here before they know it.

2.3.17 Yes, Mr. Khalil, Your Actions Have Consequences (2025-03-17 23:09)

There's been a lot of frenzy in the news about the detention of [1]Mahmoud Khalil. He's a former Columbia University student who was here on a student visa and then has married an American citizen and has recalibrated his visa to a green card.

He's an Algerian citizen who grew up in Syria and Palestine. And he's the spokesman for something at Columbia University called the Columbia University Apartheid Divest, in which it suggests that no university should allow any investments with the so-called criminal state, apartheid state, as they call it, of Israel.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [2]Donate now

Now, he was deported because his activity is in contrast to what the [3]State Department guidelines suggest. And that is, simply, that they do not want to issue visas—whether green cards or student visas or other sort of visas—to people whose activity is in contrast or against the interest of the United States foreign policy.

As I'm speaking, Hamas, who engineered the Oct. 7, 2023, massacre, still holds five American citizens as hostages. They will not release them, apparently. They're on record, for the last 25 years, as a State Department-designated terrorist organization.

So, the question is, is it fair for Mr. Khalil to go back to his home and lose his green card?

The Left and many on the libertarian right said, "This is a [4]free speech issue. He can say whatever he wants. Yes, he was the spokesman for the Columbia University Apartheid Divest group. So what? He can say that he doesn't like Israel, that Oct. 7 was a glorious occasion."

And if you look at the literature of his organization, it's very clear that, A, they have called Oct. 7 a wonderful event, and B, in the past they've called for the eradication and destruction of Western civilization. Now, he may deny that, but that's what his organization has done.

The president of Barnard College, the sister campus of Columbia University, about a week ago wrote an op-ed blasting Mr. Khalil's organization and said that they were responsible—that is, again, the Columbia University Apartheid Divest, of which he is their, I guess, official spokesman and negotiator—had caused over $30,000 of damage, vandalism to the Columbia/Barnard campus.

They have, on two occasions, forcibly entered halls on the university campus and refused to leave. They have illegally encamped on campus grounds, refused to leave. And he was the negotiator.

So, the question is this, it's very simple: Does he have a right, as a resident, to speak and do whatever he wants as long as it's not criminal? He does. Does the State Department have a right to consider whether to issue a visa or a renewal of this visa or cancel a visa, depending on whether the recipient is doing things in the interest of the United States, or I shouldn't say, is doing things contrary to the United States? And the answer is absolutely. Both sides are right.

In other words, [5]Marco Rubio and his State Department are just saying this: "We issue thousands of visas to all sorts of people who say all sorts of things, and that's perfectly fine. Obnoxious, obscene, whatever they want to say under the First Amendment because our courts have ruled that those who are residing in the United States have the same rights of free speech. However, we don't have to let people in the United States automatically. We make that decision on whether we feel they're in the interest of the United States or they pose a danger to the United States.”

So, both sides are right.

And all Mr. Rubio is saying is, Mr. Khalil, as the spokesman for Columbia University Apartheid Divest, has on numerous occasions supported groups that committed vandalism, that harassed Jews, and, most importantly, have called for the destruction of Western civilization and glorified a group that is designated by the U.S. State Department as a [6]terrorist group. Now, he may deny that, but it’s on record.

Marco Rubio and the State Department put it in a pretty good way. They said something along the following lines, and I’m paraphrasing:

If in 2022, when this Algerian citizen wanted to come to the United States as a guest and use our educational facilities to get a degree and he had just said the following, ‘I plan, while I am at Columbia, to be part of the Columbia University Apartheid Divest group. And I will condone or participate in takeovers of particular halls and facilities on the campus to prove my point or to advocate my position, which is to alienate, ostracize Israel. And if it comes up that there is another war in the Middle East, I will side with Hamas, a known terrorist organization, as the State Department has defined it.’ Do you really think that we would allow that visa to be issued?

And the answer is no.

So, yes, he can say everything he wants. But his activity has consequences.

It wasn’t what he said, but it was what he did. And he now gets his wish. He can go back to the Middle East and be a strong advocate for Hamas, in closer proximity to it.

2.3.19 Is the Jig Up for Elite Higher Education? (2025-03-17 23:18)

Over the last three decades, [1]elite American universities have engaged in economic, political, social, and cultural practices that were often unethical, illegal—and suicidal.

They did so with impunity.

Apparently, confident administrators assumed that the brand of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Stanford, and [2]other elite universities was so precious to the nation's elite movers and shakers that they could always do almost anything they wished.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [3]Donate now

By the 1970s, nonprofit universities had dropped pretenses that they were [4]apolitical and nonpartisan.

Instead, they customarily violated the corpus of iconic [5]civil rights legislation by weighing race, gender, and sexual orientation in biased admissions, hiring, and promotions.

Graduation ceremonies became overtly racially and ethnically segregated. The same was true for dorms and “theme houses.”

So-called safe spaces, in the spirit of [6]the Jim Crow South, reserved areas of campus solely for particular races.

Affluent foreign students often openly protested on behalf of designated terrorist groups like Hamas.

First Amendment-protected free speech all but vanished on elite campuses. Any guest speaker who dared to critique abortion on demand, Middle East orthodoxy, biological males dominating women’s sports, or diversity, equity, and inclusion dogmas was likely to be shouted down, or on occasion roughed up.

University administrators either ignored the violence done to the Bill of Rights or quietly approved when their rowdy students were turned loose on supposed conservatives.

But in their hubris, the universities began a series of blunders that may now end them as they once were.

They began gouging government agencies such as the National Institutes of Health and the National Science Foundation by grabbing anywhere from 30 % to 60 % of individual campus grants as “overhead.”

Yet they usually charged most private foundation grants a far more modest 15 % surcharge—as if a lax government did not object to overcharging.

They pushed for a vast expansion of the student loan program, whose portfolio of federally guaranteed loans reached $1.7 trillion. But once the federal government guaranteed student loans against default, universities began jacking up their fees and tuition well above the annual rate of inflation.

Elite universities did not grasp that the more they began warping their curricula with DEI gut courses, radical green agendas, and postmodern race and gender theories, the less time they had to offer students their once gold-standard general education curricula of Western Civ, history, literature, philosophy, math, and science.

Soon employers started to notice that the new therapeutic courses were also married to race and sex-based admissions.

The SAT and ACT were, for a time, dropped. So were comparative rankings of high school grade point averages.

Soon, once iconic degrees were no longer any guarantee of the ability to write and speak well, think analytically, or compute competently.

Employers often began to prefer graduates from those state schools where DEI was muted, admissions were competitive, and teaching remained rigorous and non-ideological.

Finally, after Oct. 7, 2023, growing antisemitism on campuses became unapologetic, overt, and violent.

Thousands of Middle Eastern guest students brazenly cheered on Hamas terrorists.

The campus Marxist orthodoxy that Jews and Israel were “victimizing white people” and Palestinians were noble “non-white victims” ensured that Jewish students were chased and physically attacked on campuses.

A disgusted public watched invertebrate administrators either greenlight the antisemitic violence or ludicrously deny it.

So, there was bound to be a public reckoning. And now it has arrived.

Congress will soon pass legislation that will tax the annual multimillion-dollar income from multibillion-dollar endowments at somewhere between 15 % and 20 %.

There will be no more “overhead” or “surcharges” on government campus grants allowed larger than 15 %.

Those two reforms alone could cost some of the richest campuses nearly a half billion dollars a year in lost income.

Racially offensive DEI programs will disqualify schools from federal support.

Foreign student guests who break U.S. laws or violate university rules will have their visas yanked and be shown the door to go home.

Campuses will have to abide by the First, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments of the Bill of Rights or forgo federal funds.

All these remedies enjoy broad public support.

For the first time in memory, a majority of Americans disapprove of current higher education. Only 10 % of Americans believe an Ivy League degree translates into becoming a better American worker.

In a nation of declining fertility, smaller numbers of youths choosing college, and a federal government $36 trillion in debt, universities have very little leverage.

They can return to the original mission of offering rigorous, meritocratic, and disinterested education, guarantee constitutional protections for all on campus, and slash their vast administrative bloat.

Or if not, they are free to continue as they are, ensuring only further mediocrity, public dislike—and eventual irrelevancy.

2.3.20 The Left's Lies Did Terrible Damage to America (2025-03-20 23:45)

. The last week we've been hearing a lot about these lies. I guess there's no other word for it. One of the most egregious was the idea that [1]Joe Biden was ever mentally or physically fit to be president.

I think everybody knew there was some sort of grand deal in 2020 during the primaries when these hard-leftist candidates—such as [2]Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren, Pete Buttigieg, etc.—had no chance of winning a general election. And Joe Biden was used, basically, as a waxen effigy.

Anybody over the last four years who objected to that and said that he was non compos mentis or obviously demented, tragically so, was branded an ageist or conspiracist or cruel. And yet, now after he left office, even the people who participated in this cover-up, media luminaries, have all now confessed that they knew he was unfit to be president. He was unfit.

This was the greatest cover-up on the American people since Woodrow Wilson's stroke was covered up by insiders, including his wife, Edith Wilson. There was a second lie, though, that was just as harmful.

We just learned that the German intelligence services had long ago concluded what every one of us knew, that Case One of the COVID-19 virus was found to be right next to the Wuhan virology level 5 lab.

Everybody knew that the Chinese Communist Party, and then later the People's Liberation Army, were operating a lab where they were engaged in very dangerous coronavirus gain-of-function research. And there was never an animal—a pangolin, a bat—that had this virus before a human case study of a human getting it.

So, we knew it came from there. But yet, anybody who said that was demonized and considered a conspiracist, a liar. And now, all of a sudden, everybody says, "Sorry. It was all a lie that it wasn't. You were correct."

And why did they do this? They did it because some had commercial ties with the Chinese government, lucrative in the corporate world. They did not want to endanger them. They didn't want to accuse China of killing millions of people and maiming millions more through this engineered virus.

Some of them were self-interested, like [3]Anthony Fauci and Francis Collins, that had transferred monies, expertise, and instrumentation, either through the National Institutes of Health, Fauci's own Institute for Allergies and Infectious Diseases, or, now we learn, USAID.

Whatever the reason, that was a horrendous lie to put over on the American people. And yet, now no one denies it. They all say, "Yeah." They just shrugged. "Yeah, it probably came from the lab. You were all right. We who trashed and demonized you and slandered you."

A third very quickly was [4]Russian collusion. Remember, this was this has-been, ex-spy Christopher Steele, who partly collated lurid sex lies and James Bond-like spy fantasies, along with Russian disinformation, and claimed that Donald Trump was working with the Russians to throw the election.

At the time, people said, thanks to Devin Nunes and Kash Patel and others, "Wait a minute. This was paid for by Hillary Clinton, this dossier, through the paywalls of the DNC, Perkins Coie, and Fusion GPS. And it was disseminated, in part, by the Justice Department under Barack Obama and, of course, the FBI under James Comey." And yet, nobody said anything about it. They said, "You're crazy. This is true." And now all of a sudden, no one believes Russian collusion. Nobody does.

Same thing with laptop disinformation. Right before the 2020 election, the last debate, Joe Biden was going to be tarred, legitimately so, deservedly so, because of what the contents of his son's laptop had revealed: pornography, drugs, but most importantly, collusion with the Biden family with foreign interests—Mr. Big, Mr. Ten Percent, etc.

So, what did he do? He got Antony Blinken, the future secretary of state. He called the interim FBI director, at one time, Mike Morell. They rounded up 51 intelligence authorities. And you know who they were. The perjurers John Brennan, James Clapper, the unhinged Michael Hayden, Leon Panetta. And they promulgated a lie.

And now, no one says that Russian disinformation was accurate.

I just want to finish with the border. We were told there was nothing that could be done with the border. Twelve million people flowing across was inevitable. We needed comprehensive immigration reform. That was all a lie. They deliberately destroyed the border. They wanted 12 million people to come. It was all a plan to change the demography, the constituency, to grow government, to increase social service as part of the liberal project.

What do all these lies have in common? One, nobody's ever apologized for them. Nobody's even tried to defend them. Nobody's tried to deny them. Nobody's tried to sustain them.

They all did terrible damage to the United States. It'll take years to find 12 million illegal aliens. We don't believe any of our agencies anymore—our health agencies, our investigatory, our intelligence agencies.

And finally, it destroyed [5]the media. No one believes any of the legacy media. They promulgated and advanced all of these five ruses. They never apologized. [They made fun of anybody who questioned them. And then, now, we're supposed to shrug and say, "You were right. They were all lies. We forgive you." No, we don't. We don't.

These lies did terrible damage to the United States. And the people who are responsible for them have never apologized.

2.3.21 The Left's Tesla Terrorism Agenda (2025-03-25 20:38)

. I'd like to talk today about what I think I would call terror porn.

Terror porn is analogous to Hitler porn. Hitler porn, of course, is when you castigate or denigrate a public figure by comparing them to Hitler. Sort of like The New Republic putting a cover with [1]President Donald Trump with a Hitler mustache dressed up as a Nazi leader. And that, we saw that all during the campaign in various manifestations.

But right now there's an effort to sort of legitimize terror, and here's what I mean. As we scan the news, Tesla dealerships, Tesla charging stations, individual Tesla owners are either being doxxed or targeted for violent acts. We've had cases where Tesla drivers were pushed off the road and confronted by left-wing activists. We've had Molotov cocktails thrown at dealerships and we've had Tesla charging stations that were attacked.

What is the point of all of this? The point is to send a message that anyone who would buy a Tesla or drive a Tesla or even have Tesla stock should not because by the use of this violent activity, they're trying to drive down [2]Elon Musk's popularity and indeed his viability.

And this is what's very ironic about it. One of the ways that the Left is doing this is not just to use all of this left-wing money that comes through nongovernment organizations, foundations, political action committees, and filter it to these various groups, but to have mainstream spokespeople engage themselves in terror porn.

I'll give you some examples.

The late-night comedian Jimmy Kimmel said something along the lines, "Well, we shouldn't burn Teslas." But then he had this pregnant pause, "We shouldn't burn Teslas." Meaning, of course, you should do that.

[3]Gov. Tim Walz, we talked before, has sizable investments in Tesla stock in Minnesota, of which he is the governor. He's in charge of protecting that investment for the taxpayers. He went on stage and bragged that his app said that the Tesla price was going down, down, down. He called Elon Musk an a——. He was back at it again. We mentioned earlier he'd called him a nepo baby and a South African, questioning the legitimacy of his American citizenship, apparently.

Then we had Rep. Jasmine Crockett, who is online in Zooms and other venues trying to help organize “Stop Tesla” with a little qualifier: We don’t quite want violence—even though she knows that almost all of these efforts have a violent aspect to it.

You would’ve thought that astronaut Mark Kelly might have wanted to comment on the spectacular rescue of two astronauts that were brought back to Earth on the SpaceX super rocket. Instead, he didn’t do any of that sort. Instead, he cut a video showing that he’s getting rid of this car because he said he didn’t want this Tesla anymore because it was made by an a——. There must be some type of Democrat talking points that says you’re supposed to call Elon Musk an a——.

What is going on? What’s going on is this is the legacy of asymmetrical law enforcement over the Biden years.

If you were a protester on the abortion question and you were peaceable, peaceful, and you protested peacefully, but you were trying to limit abortion, [4]the FBI was unleashed on you.

If you were a rioter in 2020 and for the month, the end of May, June, July, August, September into October you participated in burning a federal courthouse, a police precinct, an iconic church, you were part of the movement that destroyed $2 billion in property, resulted in 35 deaths, 1,500 police officers, and you were one of 14,000 people arrested, the chances that you were going to be arrested if you were 14,000 and then subsequently arraigned, indicted, convicted in jail were minuscule. It was just a fraction. In comparison with the Jan. 6 protesters, many of whom four years in prison and over 900 of them were convicted.

So what I’m getting at is, there was a message to the Left and it said, “If you engage in street violence, that is considered legitimate political protest, legitimate political protest, and there will not be legal consequences.”

A final note, [5]Sen. Chuck Schumer, we’ve talked about before, is a very funny person and he poses as a sober and judicious senior spokesman of the Democratic Party and he is the Democrat, now, minority leader in the Senate.

He was the one, remember, as I’ve said on at least one broadcast, that said, “You, Justice Neil Gorsuch; you, Justice Brett Kavanaugh, have sown the wind and you will reap the whirlwind and you don’t know what’s hit you.”

He returned to that type of threats again when he recently said that, in defense of his activism—and remember, the far Left says he’s not activist enough—what he said was, “You shouldn’t get angry about me. I got all of these left-wing judges appointed that were cherry-picking to stop the Trump agenda through executive orders.” But here was the keyword, and he said, “We are sending people into Republican districts to disrupt and have consequences for their votes.”

So what I’m getting at is there’s a two-tier system. There’s the front-line soldiers who were burning Teslas and intimidating Tesla owners. Then there is the sober and judicious Democrat functionaries, the architecture of the progressive movement, who, with a wink and a nod, says, “We’ve gotta protest. We’ve gotta organize. But let’s not get violent.” But in fact, they are greenlighting violence themselves.

2.3.22 Left-Wing Judges Try to Stymie Trump (2025-03-25 20:39)

Ostensibly, [1]President Donald Trump and [2]Vice President JD Vance won an overwhelming victory, and you can define that in a variety of ways. Not just a plurality, but I think it would be called a referendum on America.

After all, they were the first ticket on the Republican side to have won the popular vote in 20 years. They won an overwhelming majority in the Electoral College. They retain control of the House of Representatives. They won the Senate. There’s a 6-3, supposedly, conservative majority on the Supreme Court. They won all of the swing states.

So, they came into office with this momentum from the American people that was expressed through a national election. And yet, they are now stymied.

Almost all of their initiatives are facing two types of opposition. The first is, in a pre-planned way, liberal organizations, lavishly funded by what they themselves might want to call oligarchs, have funded massive lawsuits against the Trump administration, stopping executive orders.

Remember, this idea that executive orders were a rapid and effective way for a president to rule didn't come from Donald Trump. It came from [3]former President Barack Obama. He recalibrated the use of executive orders when he lost the majority in Congress and he said, "I have a pen and I have a phone. And I'm gonna act accordingly." And he did so.

But what we're seeing now is that these liberal organizations are targeting left-wing judges.

Judge Ana Reyes in Washington—who was described as a Biden appointee, as the first Latina, LGBTQ—she just ruled to stop the Pentagon's new policy, not having or forbidding transgendered people in combat units.

Judge Jesse Furman, another lower district judge, he just put out a stay not too long ago rescinding the deportation of Mahmoud Khalil.

And Judge James Boasberg stopped the deportation of this very dangerous Tren de Aragua gang of South American criminals who came here illegally.

Now, what was the argument that the Trump administration was using that incurred the wrath of liberal activists? All they wanted to do was say, "We don't know the effect of transgendered people in combat units. This is a new phenomenon. For now, we're gonna put a stay on it." That was the Department of Defense and the Trump administration.

We don't know how these people from South America and these gangs got here. But we do know they came illegally. And they are residing illegally. And they're in very dangerous gangs and many of them have committed crimes. So, if it was—if they broke the law to come here, we want to enforce the law to have them go back.

Khalil, I think, as we've seen news accounts start to recalibrate the idea that he was just a neutral, semi-partisan, not very active supporter of [4] Hamas, is not true. He was the official spokesman for the Apartheid Divest at Columbia University/Barnard College. He supported the massacres on Oct. 7. He was a big supporter and adherent of Hamas, which is a terrorist-designated organization.

And so, what we're seeing is liberal groups trying to keep people who are supporting the terrorist Hamas or supporting these gangs inside the United States.

This is very analogous—cherry-picking left-wing judges is very analogous to what we watched all during the 2022-24 lawfare period.

You remember Judge Arthur Engoron, Judge Juan Merchan, and Judge Lewis Kaplan—he was the judge in the E. Jean Carroll case. And we had the Alvin Bragg judge and the Letitia James. They were all—like these judges, they had two things in common: They were left-wing activist judges, appointed by either [5]former President Joe Biden, Obama, or former President Bill Clinton. And they had minor to major conflicts of interest where people in their family were big, either had worked for a prior Democratic administration or themselves were activists.

And what did they do? They tried to put Donald Trump in jail.

That same lawfare has now been transmogrified and put into a more concerted effort to stop everything that Donald Trump is trying to do. And what he's trying to do, remember, is not radical. It's just simply to enforce immigration law. It's just simply to bring back the country to the middle.

Will this succeed? I don't think so. I think the district courts will over—the appellate courts will overturn it, if not, then the Supreme Court. But they know that. The point is, they want to delay, delay, delay.

Donald Trump is already a lame-duck president. He only has four years left. And he has got less than two years before the midterm elections. Their plan is to drag all of these executive orders, which are backed by a vote of the people who elected Donald Trump, is to drag them through the courts and stop him. Create a sense of chaos. Make the Republicans, in general, and Donald Trump, in particular, overreact. And then, cause chaos, controversy, constitutional crisis. And eat up these precious four years.

As of now, it's succeeding, but time will tell and we'll weigh in next time.

2.3.23 The Lengths Democrats Are Willing to Go to Stop Trump (2025-03-25 20:41)

I want to apologize to you.

I have been writing columns and have suggested to you in these videos that [1]the Democrats didn't have an agenda. In other words, they were just nihilists. But I went back and looked at everything they've said, everything they've written, what their surrogates and the media have done, and I discovered they do have a counter-agenda. They really do. And it's organized.

And I want to give it a fair hearing right now. So, I wrote down 10 things that I think are thematic of the Democratic agenda that offers an alternative to [2]President Donald Trump.

The first is that Donald Trump must be considered, as Chris Matthews just said, a Mussolini-like figure. He must be opposed in every aspect. He must be demonized. Everything he does is evil.

And by extension, the same is true of [3]Elon Musk. You must consider him an alien that should go back home to South Africa. That he's not a true American. He's only been here 23 years.

You cannot talk about his Tesla revolution that pretty much saved the idea of an electric vehicle. You cannot talk about the successes of SpaceX. You cannot talk about saving social media by opening it up and getting the government out, i.e., the FBI colluding with the old Twitter. You cannot talk about giving free internet service to Ukraine.

He's evil. And everything he does must be opposed. And we must continue that to the point where he is depersonalized.

The second thing I've noticed, very quickly, is Immigration and Customs Enforcement is wrong. You have to stop ICE from deporting anybody, even if they're a criminal.

Open borders are completely normal. We let in 12 million people under President Joe Biden. We have no apologies whatsoever. No major Democrat has come forward and said, “We made a mistake. We’ve overloaded communities, like the San Joaquin Valley or the Rio Grande Valley or the inner city. It’s cost us perhaps a trillion dollars in social costs. We apologize.”

No. Everything about open borders was wonderful. And we will try, as Democrats, as much as we can to stop ICE from deporting even criminals. Sanctuary cities are immune—600 of them.

Radical Palestinians are to be favored over Israel. We see that with the controversy over Mahmoud Khalil. We in the Democratic Party feel that Israel is a settler country.

Now, this is the only issue that the majority of Democrats are clearly for. About 70 %, 65 % of Democrats favor the Palestinian cause. So, there’s no ambiguity about it now.

Democrats feel that Israel is the culprit. And if there’s antisemitism on campus, it’s sporadic or it’s done by people other than the pro-Hamas green card holder or student visa holder.

There should be no cuts. No cuts in the federal government. We have a $1.7 trillion deficit. Joe Biden probably racked up $7 to $8 trillion in additional debt, but $36 trillion is no problem. We’re not going to discuss it.

All we know is there should be no layoffs. Everything that USAID was funding was fine. And the federal government was running perfectly until Donald Trump came. There was no abuse, fraud, anything. We have never talked about fraud and abuse in recent years. And there was a reason why we’re perfectly happy with these massive deficits.

Ukraine—Donald Trump with his “Art of the Deal” antics, threatening to cut off, cutting off, restoring aid to Ukraine, it’s a mess. We have to go back to the Biden approach. We’ll do whatever it takes for as long as it takes. So, we need to up the amount of aid, maybe $300 or $400 or $500 billion to Ukraine, and enable it to defeat Russia. And if that costs 2 or 3 million casualties, we don’t care.

We offered no alternative ceasefire plan, no strategic resolution, nothing other than to feed the Ukrainians to defeat [4]Vladimir Putin and bleed out the Russian military forces, even if it takes the last Ukrainian to do so.

DEI should have never been cut out. We still have to emphasize that we are a country of white rage, white privilege, white supremacy. And we in the Democratic Party will find ways to work around these executive orders, but maybe we will have to reclassify the titles of diversity, equity, inclusion officers, but we will not give up on it.

We had a recent air traffic controller supervisor who was leaking the test questions to DEI applicants. This is the type of activity we endorse.

We have to be much more radical in our opposition. So when Donald Trump speaks before Congress, we must shout him down. Rep. Al Green is an iconic hero. Most of us refuse to censor him. He shook his cane and disrupted Congress. That's good. Rep. Jasmine Crockett is the new spokesman of the Democratic Party.

And in association with that, also, it's very important for us to use the F-word, the S— word, the D— word. We're going to make videos where we use this profanity. We're going to shout out that in Congress. The point is that to appeal to the lost middle-class supporter, we have to sound earthy. And we plan on doing that.

And finally, we've got to create chaos. So, anything Donald Trump, as I said, anything that Elon Musk does, any Cabinet members' initiatives, we have to go hysterical.

And the point is this, we prefer slow decline. We understand we had $36 trillion in debt. We understand we were running a trillion-dollar trade deficit. We understand our military was shrinking. We understand that we were investing over a trillion dollars in a commissar [5]like DEI. I could go on. But that was a slow decline. It wasn't controversial.

With the open border, yes, it was open, but nobody, there was no hysteria. We just let in 12 million people illegally. We even flew them in at night so it wouldn't bother you.

The point is slow decline. Quiet, calm is much preferable to loud restoration. Why cause all these problems? We were declining very slowly. We could have gone on like this for 20 years. But why did we have to suddenly think that we needed to stop and to arrest the decline?

That's pretty much it. A 10-point agenda by the Democratic Party.

2.3.24 On the Left, They Knew They Were Lying to Us All Along (2025-03-25 20:43)

For years, [1]the Left has advanced utter untruths for cheap partisan purposes that they knew at the time were all false. And now when caught, they just shrug and say they were lying all along.

- Once it was known that the first [2]COVID-19 case originated in or near a Chinese communist virology lab engineering gain-of-function deadly viruses—with help from Western agencies—the Left went into full persecution mode.

They damned as incompetent, racist, and conspiratorial any who dared follow logic and evidence to point out that the Chinese government and its military were both culpable for the virus and lying

A million Americans died of COVID-19. Millions more suffered long-term injuries. Still, the left-wing media and the Biden administration demonized any who dared speak about a lab origin of the deadly virus. The lies were designed to protect the guilty who had helped fund the virus's origins, such as Drs. [3]Anthony Fauci and Francis Collins.

The [4]Biden government also tried to use the lab theory to ridicule a supposedly pro-Trump "conspiracy." Western corporate interests deeply invested in [5]China did not want their partner held responsible for veritably killing and maiming hundreds of millions worldwide.

- Almost as soon as Joe Biden was inaugurated, the Left knew that he was physically and mentally unable to serve as president.

Indeed, that was the point. Biden's role was designed as a waxen figurine for hard-left agendas that, without the "old Joe Biden from Scranton" pseudo-moderate veneer, could never have been advanced. His handlers operated a nightmare administration: the destruction of deterrence abroad, two theater wars, [6]12 million illegal aliens, a weaponized justice system, [7] hyperinflation, and $7 trillion more in debt.

- By 2017, the public knew three truths about the so-called Christopher Steele dossier.

One, it was completely fallacious—fabricated by a has-been, ex-British spy Christopher Steele. He childishly had cobbled together lurid sex stories, James Bond spy fictions, and Russian-fed disinformation to destroy the Trump candidacy and later presidency. Two, it was paid for by the Hillary Clinton campaign. She hid her checks behind the Democratic National Committee, the Perkins Coie law firm, and Fusion GPS paywalls. Three, the FBI under James Comey hired Steele as an informant. It helped disseminate his concocted files and was also instrumental in trying to subvert the Trump campaign and later administration.

- No sane person ever believed that [8]Hunter Biden's laptop was the work of "Russian disinformation." Its contents a year before the 2020 election were verified by the FBI, but it kept mum about its confirmation.

The pornographic pictures, the evidence of prostitution and drug use, the electronic communications implicating Joe Biden in his family's illicit shake-down operation of foreign governments—all were never challenged by anyone who was associated with the laptop's contents. Yet future Secretary of State [9]Antony Blinken, along with former interim CIA Director Mike Morell, sought to fabricate a colossal lie to arm their candidate, Biden, with plausible denial in the final presidential debate before the 2020 election. They rounded up a rogue's gallery of 51 now utterly discredited former intelligence authorities to lie to the nation that the laptop was likely fake. All knew the FBI had verified the laptop. But they also knew that their titles would empower their lies that the Russians likely invented the laptop to aid the sinister Trump. And the ruse worked like a charm. In the debate, Biden cited their lies chapter and verse to claim the incriminating laptop was fake. A lying media damned Trump as a puppet of Russian President Vladimir Putin. Biden, little more than a week later, won the 2020 election.

- The Biden administration deliberately destroyed the southern border and welcomed 12 million illegal aliens. And then it lied that Biden had no power to stop the influx.

The media fabricated the excuse that "comprehensive immigration reform" was needed to enforce federal immigration laws already on the books. Upon inauguration on Jan. 20, Trump, in a matter of days, stopped what Biden had deliberately engineered for years. Biden's handlers wanted new millions of poor illegal aliens, dependent on social services, to swarm the borders. They saw them as future voters and constituents to fuel their victim/victimizer Marxist binaries. And they now quietly see their efforts as a huge success, knowing that it will be nearly impossible to find the millions of illegal aliens they welcomed in. All these lies have divided the country and permanently damaged the U.S. The perpetrators have neither apologized for their lies, nor tried to either deny or substantiate them. No one involved has ever been held legally accountable. The legacy media permanently ruined its reputation and will likely never be seen as credible again. The Biden administration, overseer of many of these lies, will be regarded as the most duplicitous and dishonest presidency in modern history.

2.3.25 What More Can Musk Do? (2025-03-25 20:44)

[1]Elon Musk is in the news, again. It should be triumphant news accounts of what he's done.

This huge Starship rocket, the largest and most powerful rocket in history, launched successfully with its Dragon capsule and it's docked at the Space Station successfully to drop off an international crew of four and to bring back the stranded astronauts that were supposed to be only there days and for a variety of reasons we can't get into—some of them political, perhaps—they didn't get a chance to return for months.

In other words, Elon Musk has developed the most successful space program in the history of space travel. He's superseded Boeing that couldn't pull it off. He's superseded NASA itself. So, this should be, again, a celebratory moment. Instead, he is at the height of his own popularity.

Recently, former Vice President candidate [2]Tim Walz on the Democratic ticket has been touring the country. He's called, associated Elon Musk with being a Nazi, fascist. He said the salute was a Nazi salute. I don't think it was at all. But more importantly, he recently said that Elon Musk was a foreign-born, South African, nepo baby. Nepo baby, nepotism baby.

The vast treasure that Elon Musk has created did not come from his father. It came from his brilliance in SpaceX; taking over Twitter and reopening social media; Tesla, the first and most important and most successful of the electric vehicle industry; and of course, Starlink that gave internet, and I'm speaking on Starlink as right now, gave internet to people who live in rural areas such as my own.

He didn't inherit anything. He inherited a slight fortune, perhaps, but he did it all on his own.

And Mr. Walz, are you comparing your behavior, your record in the late campaign with Elon Musk? Almost everything you said was contradicted, it was untrue. Your whole life story was fabricated. Your role in Minnesota was disastrous. And now you're descending into xenophobia and suggesting that a U.S. citizen is South African with dual loyalties just because you disagree with what he's doing.

So, what is causing this unpopularity? We know what it is. Elon Musk is applying his talents, he's not being diplomatic about it, to reducing this vast [3]federal spending that is threatening to bankrupt the country.

We're $36 trillion in debt. We're borrowing $1.7 trillion per year. The interest alone is costing us $3 billion a day. And no one is doing anything.

He is going through the entire federal budget in hopes that he can find a trillion dollars and with increased revenues, given an economic incentive, just maybe in a year or two for the first time since the millennium, we'll be able to balance the budget.

At the same time Walz was sounding off about Musk, former astronaut and now U.S. Senator from Arizona, Sen. [Mark] Kelly was cutting a video in which he drives up in his Tesla, says he wants no more of it because Elon Musk is an a-hole. And more importantly, he says that Elon Musk is cutting [4]Social Security and Medicare. He's not. Health benefits and Medicare, Medi—he's not. There's no evidence he's doing that unless somebody brings it to his attention that there is massive fraud. Even Barack Obama said there was fraud in Medicare and Social Security.

But then he made this performance art video and then he shows his new car, which is a Chevy Suburban—I think they get about 15 or 16 miles to the gallon. What did that Tesla that he is driving and he used to virtue signal was a car of the future given its small carbon footprint—what happened to it? Did it change? Did it all of a sudden not work? No. He's blaming the car, but he's already paid the money. The money is already in the coffers of Tesla. So, it's an—and why use the profanity, which seems to be characteristic of the [5]Democratic Party?

And finally, we're getting very, it's getting to a very dangerous crescendo of hate. Go on the internet. There is now an industry of people posting photos of their Cybertruck, their Y model, their X model being keyed and vandalized by young people in an organized fashion. There are chargers, Tesla chargers that are being destroyed. There's Tesla dealers that are being attacked. All against Elon Musk.

Go back two or three years ago and he was an iconic Renaissance figure, we were told by the very people who are now calling him disloyal or not purely or not completely an American. This is one of the strangest phenomena of our time. And it should cease.

And the reason it should cease is if this rhetoric continues and this organized—it really is a—domestic terrorist campaign against Tesla increases, somebody's going to do something stupid because they are lowering the bar of what's permissible. We know what that stupid is. It's a direct attack on Elon Musk himself.

2.3.26 Is the jig up for elite higher education? (2025-03-25 20:46)

Over the last three decades, elite American universities have engaged in economic, political, social, and cultural practices that were often unethical, illegal — and suicidal.

They did so with impunity.

Apparently, confident administrators assumed that the brand of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Stanford and other elite universities was so precious to the nation's elite movers and shakers that they could always do almost anything they wished.

By the 1970s, non-profit universities had dropped pretenses that they were apolitical and non-partisan.

Instead, they customarily violated the corpus of iconic civil rights legislation by weighing race, gender, and sexual orientation in biased admissions, hiring, and promotions.

Graduation ceremonies became overtly racially and ethnically segregated. The same was true for dorms and "theme houses."

So-called "safe spaces," in the spirit of the Jim Crow South, reserved areas of campus solely for particular races.

Affluent foreign students often openly protested on behalf of designated terrorist groups like Hamas.

First-Amendment-protected free speech all but vanished on elite campuses. Any guest speaker who dared to critique abortion on demand, Middle East orthodoxy, biological males dominating women's sports, or diversity/equity/inclusion (DEI) dogmas was likely to be shouted down, or on occasion roughed up.

University administrators either ignored the violence done to the Bill of Rights or quietly approved when their rowdy students were turned loose on supposed conservatives.

But in their hubris, the universities began a series of blunders that may now end them as they once were.

They began gouging government agencies such as the National Institutes of Health and the National Science Foundation by grabbing anywhere from 30 to 60 percent of individual campus grants as "overhead."

Yet they usually charged most private foundation grants a far more modest 15 % surcharge — as if a lax government did not object to overcharging.

They pushed for a vast expansion of the student loan program, whose portfolio of federally guaranteed loans reached $1.7 trillion. But once the federal government guaranteed student loans against default, universities began jacking up their fees and tuition well above the annual rate of inflation.

Elite universities did not grasp that the more they began warping their curricula with DEI gut courses, radical green agendas, and postmodern race and gender theories, the less time they had to offer students their once gold-standard general education curricula of Western Civ, history, literature, philosophy, math, and science.

Soon employers started to notice that the new therapeutic courses were also married to race and sex-based admissions.

The SAT and ACT were, for a time, dropped. So were comparative rankings of high school grade point averages.

Soon, once iconic degrees were no longer any guarantee of the ability to write and speak well, think analytically, or compute competently.

Receive Daily Headlines FREE Sign up today!

Employers often began to prefer graduates from those state schools where DEI was muted, admissions were competitive, and teaching remained rigorous and non-ideological.

Finally, after October 7, 2023, growing antisemitism on campuses became unapologetic, overt, and violent.

Thousands of Middle Eastern guest students brazenly cheered on Hamas terrorists.

The campus Marxist orthodoxy that Jews and Israel were "victimizing white people" and Palestinians were noble "non-white victims" ensured that Jewish students were chased and physically attacked on campuses.

A disgusted public watched invertebrate administrators either greenlight the antisemitic violence or ludicrously deny it.

So, there was bound to be a public reckoning. And now it has arrived.

Congress will soon pass legislation that will tax the annual multimillion-dollar income from multibillion-dollar endowments at somewhere between 15 and 20 %.

There will be no more "overhead" or "surcharges" on government campus grants allowed larger than 15 %.

Those two reforms alone could cost some of the richest campuses nearly a half billion dollars a year in lost income.

Racially offensive DEI programs will disqualify schools from federal support.

Foreign student guests who break U.S. laws or violate university rules will have their visas yanked and be shown the door to go home.

Campuses will have to abide by the First, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments of the Bill of Rights or forgo federal funds.

All these remedies enjoy broad public support.

For the first time in memory, a majority of Americans disapprove of current higher education. Only 10 % of Americans believe an Ivy League degree translates into becoming a better American worker.

In a nation of declining fertility, smaller numbers of youths choosing college, and a federal government $36 trillion in debt, universities have very little leverage.

They can return to the original mission of offering rigorous, meritocratic, and disinterested education, guarantee constitutional protections for all on campus, and slash their vast administrative bloat.

Or if not, they are free to continue as they are, ensuring only further mediocrity, public dislike — and eventual irrelevancy.

2.3.27 Ted Cruz Shares His 'Remedies' on What to Do About Judicial Overreach From District Judges (2025-03-25 22:06)

The judicial overreach from district judges constantly ruling against the Trump administration and whether or not the U.S. Supreme Court will get involved has certainly been in the news lately, as Townhall. It's gotten to such a level that Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) weighed in with his Monday episode of "The Verdict," the podcast co-hosted with Ben Ferguson.

In discussing the newsworthy topic, Cruz issued several key reminders about these judges, as Ferguson asked for a "remedy" and a "strategy to fight back," reminding that "it's very frustrating," especially those who voted for President Donald Trump's agenda, which a majority of Americans support,

As Cruz reminded in response, "to be clear," the judges "were in every single case, elected by no one." For every one of these judges, they were appointed by the president and then confirmed by the U.S. Senate, with Cruz stressing that "no federal judge is elected."

For unelected judges, there is a few examples of checks and balances. There's impeachment, with Republican congressmen bringing forth plans to do just that, though Cruz was not optimistic about such an option.

"Impeachment, unfortunately, is not going to be effective against this abuse of power," Cruz shared, explaining how it's the similar process as impeaching an executive officer. While it only takes a majority in the House to impeach a judge, which could happen, "impeaching, however, it is not removing the judge," Cruz reminded. "It is the equivalent of bringing charges. It is the equivalent of indicting, like a grand jury indicts, which is to bring criminal charges against someone, impeaching is the same thing."

Even if Republicans in the House were to unify, however, "the chances that any of these judges would be removed for issuing these nationwide injunctions are 0.00 percent," Cruz made clear.

In the Senate, Cruz reminded, you need two-thirds to convict and remove the person in office, in this case a federal judge. "Now, we do not have 67 Republicans in the Senate. We only have 53 that means we would need at least 14 Democrats, and that's assuming every Republican stood together. The chances of 14 Democrats voting to convict any of these radical left-wing judges for issuing nationwide injunctions against Trump are zero; and understand why. The Democrats in the Senate hate Trump," he said, going on to add how these Democrats, so full of hatred against Trump, reacted to his address before a joint session of Congress earlier this month. "These are the same people that sat there and refused to applaud for the president, refused to applaud for the mothers of women raped and murdered by illegal immigrant criminals. These are the same Democrats that refused to applaud for a 13-year-old kid fighting to overcome brain cancer."

Further, Democrats are actually quite supportive of these judges and what they're doing. Arguably the most prominent example was Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-NY) with his comments last week. Democrats, Cruz reminded, are "cheering on these injunctions," as "they want more lawlessness, and so impeachment is not going to be effective."

Cruz also spoke further about the power of Congress beyond impeaching judges, which has no chance of resulting in removal. "Now, secondly, another remedy is that Congress can restrict the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and Congress has broad authority to restrict the jurisdiction of the federal courts," the senator added. "Actually, Congress could abolish the district courts. There's nothing in the Constitution that creates district courts. The only court created in the Constitution is the Supreme Court of the United States, and Congress created the lower courts, the district courts and the courts of appeals to process the volume of cases.

But Congress has broad authority to limit the jurisdiction of the federal courts, but again, to exercise that authority in the Senate, you would have to overcome the filibuster, which means you would need 60 votes. We have 53 Republicans. The chances of any Senate Democrats voting to limit the jurisdiction of federal judges issued a nationwide injunction? If it's not zero, it's damn close to zero. So those remedies are quite limited," the senator highlighted, speaking of that example.

However, Cruz did speak to examples he's more hopeful about, which provide hope for the future. Such remedies include, as the senator sees it, "sunshine, drawing attention to it."

In his role as chairman of the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Federal Courts, Oversight, Agency Action and Federal Rights, Cruz will be chairing hearings focused on such remedies.

"And one remedy to consider, [is] should we return to a system where you have a three-judge district court to consider challenges to the constitutionality of federal statutes? I think there's a lot to be said for returning to that," Cruz offered. And, while he expects Democrats to be opposed, he added that "I think focusing on it, discussing it, shining a light on it, is important to counteract lawfare."

That brings us to "the real remedy," which "is nominating and confirming good principal judges to the federal courts, to the district courts, of appeals, to the Supreme Court, and then reversing these injunctions on appeal."

That also brings us to the Supreme Court. "The legal process, it's going to take the Supreme Court stepping up. I don't know if they're going to do so. There are opportunities right now, multiple opportunities right now, but the most likely mechanism to rein in this abuse is going to be appellate review, because the Senate Democrats will oppose just about anything else," Cruz further explained.

Ferguson chimed in to speak further about "a genuine frustration," especially towards Democrats, and a hunger for real results.

Americans are right to feel frustrated, Cruz laid out, given that from 1963-2023, of the 127 injunctions issued nationwide, just over half were issued against Trump during his first term, 64 to be exact. There's already been 37 injunctions against Trump in the first two months of his second term, Cruz further explained, aptly highlighting how "the numbers are dramatic."

The numbers are "pretty encouraging," though, when it comes to bringing sunlight to how it's Democrat-appointed judges going after Trump. Only five injunctions were by Republican-appointed judges, with 92.2 percent of injunctions against Trump in his first term coming from judges appointed by a Democrat, leading Cruz to point out that "the pattern is very simple." He further explained how "they're forum shopping, they're going and they're looking for friendly judges. They're going and looking for radicals who... hate the president and who will issue injunctions trying to fight back."

As "frustrating" as forum shopping might be, Cruz acknowledged, there's also remedies. Again, appointing better judges is one option, "the longer-term remedy," as Cruz put it. That "shorter-term remedy" is the appeals process.

The senator brought up a particularly hot button issue of birthright citizenship, with the president having signed an executive order not long into his second term to bring an end to the practice. Many judges have ruled against Trump there, and the administration has asked the Supreme Court to weigh in.

Cruz brought up the example of Trump v. Casa as one of those cases. "Now the legality of that order is contested. People disagree on that, and that is going to let it be litigated. Well, three different district courts issued preliminary injunctions in response. Now, where were those courts? One was in Seattle, one was in Maryland, one was in Massachusetts. So, there's a reason they're going to blue states and they're finding really left-wing judges," Cruz explained. "The Supreme Court has a chance to address the issue of nationwide injunctions," he added, reminding how the administration has asked the Court to get involved, specifically "to partially stay the preliminary injunctions, and she argued the nationwide injunctions were over broad." As the senator explained it, Acting Solicitor General the United States Sarah Harris "asked for them to be limited to the plaintiffs in each case, or at most, the residents of the states challenging the order. So, it should not be nationwide, it should only apply to those litigating."

It's being actively litigated now. "Now, it's possible the Supreme Court will decide it on its emergency docket, which is the docket where you get emergency appeals from injunctions, or it could wait for full merits briefing, and that could take months or even years. But these cases could provide a mechanism, and I hope they do provide a mechanism to limit and rein in these nationwide injunctions that are clearly being abused," the senator added.

Ferguson also asked for Cruz's insight as to if injunctions create precedent. As he asked, "if there is a loss by a judge who does one of these injunctions, does that then have precedent over other judges around the country, or can other judges then just say, 'well, I'm going to take up the torch and buy more time and be an activist as well?'"

As Cruz explained, "it can definitely be the latter," but also, "it depends on where the loss occurs." If the Court of Appeals, for instance, reverses the injunctions, all district judges in that circuit are bound to follow. The Supreme Court would bind judges across the country. Thus, the senator revealed, "the real answer, hopefully, is to get this to the Supreme Court and get a good Supreme Court ruling limiting the power of judges to issue nationwide injunctions. This is clearly something that is being abused, and it is crying out for the Supreme Court to rein it in."

What are the odds, then, that the Supreme Court will actually do that reining in, so Trump "can do his job," as Ferguson wondered?

While the issue is already at the Court right now, it comes down to if five justices are "willing to rein it in." A majority have to agree to take up such a case, though we have an example from earlier this month of how Chief Justice John Roberts and Justice Amy Coney Barrett sided with the three liberals in a 5-4 decision. The Court refused to vacate a ruling from a lower court, thus a ruling from a district judge forcing the Trump administration to reinstate billions in foreign aid remained.

"We have seen in some of these early cases, sometimes the answer is yes, sometimes the answer is no, and, and so it's going to come down to Chief Justice Roberts. It's going to come down to Justice Amy Coney Barrett and Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh, and we'll see how they rule," Cruz pointed out. "I feel very confident that Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito are more than ready to rein in the abuse of nationwide injunctions, but I don't know if there are five justices or not."

2.3.28 New Report Uncovers Shocking Incompetence in SBA's Pandemic Fraud Detection Process (2025-03-25 22:08)

A recent Government Accountability Office (GAO) report has [1]exposed shocking levels of incompetence by the Small Business Administration (SBA) in its investigation of pandemic fraud. According to SBA officials, the agency's four-step process for managing fraud risks in its pandemic loan programs—specifically the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) and COVID-19 Economic Injury Disaster Loans (COVID-19 EIDL)—was supposed to follow a thorough system. Yet, the GAO found significant failures in oversight, leaving taxpayers vulnerable and millions of dollars in fraudulent loans unaccounted for. This failure highlights the SBA's inability to protect taxpayer funds and demonstrates the risks inherent in poorly managed government programs.

According to the GAO report, the Small Business Administration (SBA) demonstrated a staggering incompetence in investigating pandemic fraud. The SBA used a four-step process to manage fraud risks in the COVID-19 Economic Injury Disaster Loan (COVID-EIDL) program, which involved screening, data analytics, human-led reviews, and Office of SBA Inspector General (OIG) referrals. Despite overseeing over $1 trillion in loans and grants to over 10 million small businesses during the pandemic, this fraud prevention process wasn't fully implemented until more than half of the PPP and COVID-EIDL funds had already been approved. For the COVID-EIDL, more than $210 billion of an eventual $385 billion, 55 percent, had already been disbursed before the complete process was implemented. Over $525 billion of an eventual $800 billion, 66 percent, had already been approved for the PPP.

More from the report:

The four-step process as applied to COVID-19 EIDL and the PPP had weaknesses, as several audit entities, including GAO, SBA's OIG, and SBA's independent financial statement auditor, have previously reported. For example, as part of its screening step, SBA compared loan applications against the Treasury's various Do Not Pay (DNP) databases and public records. A June 2024 SBA OIG report found, however, that SBA awarded and disbursed funds to potentially ineligible entities listed in DNP without sufficient evidence to support the loan decision. In response to this report, SBA agreed, among other things, to review and address those loans and grants with an alert in the file that was not previously addressed. According to SBA's OIG, the proposed action did not fully meet OIG's recommendation to review all loans identified as potentially ineligible. In its work, GAO identified a weakness in SBA's process for referring cases of likely fraud to its OIG—that is, step four of its four-step process. As part of its referral step for COVID-EIDL, SBA submitted almost 3 million referrals to its

OIG. SBA OIG officials told GAO that of these referrals, about 2 million were not actionable because they did not contain enough data elements to allow for further investigation or had quality issues, such as duplicates or incorrect information. Without an effective referral process, the SBA OIG is not able to fully investigate instances of likely fraud and make follow-on referrals to, for example, the Department of Justice for prosecution, as necessa ry

Despite the four-step process, it proved ineffective. One of the steps involved referring potentially fraudulent applications to the Inspector General (IG) for investigation. However, the IG could not thoroughly investigate nearly 2 million of the 3 million referrals because the SBA failed to provide sufficient or accurate information in its referrals. The estimated total fraud from COVID programs exceeds $200 billion. Sen. Joni Ernst (R-Iowa) previously found that $5.4 billion in loans were made to people using fraudulent social security numbers. "The scale of incompetence at the Biden SBA is absolutely staggering," Ernst said. "Even when bureaucrats thought there might be fraud, they failed to take the basic steps required to investigate these claims. I will not let these criminals get away. I will be working with SBA Administrator Kelly Loeffler and DOGE to hold these criminals accountable and recoup every cent stolen from taxpayers."

2.3.29 Being Good with Schizoaffective (2025-03-28 14:13)

Can someone explain to me what's great under this illness. There must be some bipolar somewhere. I drive okay. I write on bluray.com forums. I'm on internet movie database, make reviews and lists. I'm on discogs making reviews and lists. I'm on RFGeneration adding videogames. I'm on goodreads adding book reviews. I must have 1000 reviews and 100 lists. then i was on giantbomb, gamespot making lists and videogame reviews. Giant Bomb and Gamespot went independent. I followed Gamespot profiles. I was on Letterboxd making it smooth (cool) with lists and reviews.

I meet with a vendor to go places. The bipolar seems to be hyper mania with extra energy with the soda. I collect the best albums i find off besteveralbums or discogs. I was collecting 80 anime boxsets.

I play videogames mainly platformers and racing or fighters. I use Kinhank emulation station a lot for the convenience. The books i read fade in my memories. I read CompTIA books and Cisco books.

It's hard to meet women other then staff members. The phone numbers i use are family and friends known for 30 years in my childhood. I had cousins play videogames with me, go to state fairs, county fairs. I didn't buy anything material, just food or rides.

I'm not working 40 hour work weeks. I work 20-25 hours weekly when i had 14 jobs.

2.3.30 How Donald Trump Is Reshaping America in Just 7 Weeks (2025-03-30 00:59)

How should we characterize the first seven weeks of the Trump administration because we get so much information and misinformation?

Almost a day doesn't go by where [1]The Wall Street Journal is predicting that we are headed for a recession, that our allies are furious at us, that the economy is on the brink.

So, what are we gonna make of all this? I think it's time to take a deep breath and envision the first seven weeks is something like the following: [2]President Donald Trump is in a race. He's in a race to enact fundamental, disruptive change, a counterrevolution, and it's going to be rough for a while, as he pointed out.

But the things that he has already done are going to have, shortly or maybe even midterm, fundamental advantages for the United States. The question is, can he message and can he explicate and explain what he's doing so people hang on? Because the eventual reward will be great.

Now, what do I mean? We're talking about tariffs, tariffs, tariffs, but even the mere mention of tariffs for all of these countries that have not been reciprocal and have imposed tariffs on us in a way that we would never think of imposing on them, that idea that we might return to parity, it's had an enormous effect.

Some $4 trillion of announced investment from the Europeans, from the Saudis, from the Chinese, from the Mexican government, from the Canadians even. That will create hundreds of thousands of jobs. And that is in the process of working out.

When Donald Trump entered office in 2017, we were only pumping about 9 million barrels. When he left, we were pumping 12 million. The Biden administration immediately cut back. And then it decided, before the midterms, "Hey, Americans like affordable oil." So then they continued the Trump plan and got up to 12, almost 13 million barrels.

Already in just seven weeks, we have increased the amount of oil produced per day in the United States by about a third of a million barrels. And we're on schedule to get up to about 14 million barrels by the beginning of the year. And that is coordinated with an increase in Middle East production as well.

So, we're going to see a moderation of energy prices, which may explain, already, why the inflation rate was not nearly as high as was predicted.

If we look at the border, it's amazing. We were told that the border problem was unsolvable without comprehensive immigration reform. And there were 10,000 people swarming up per day. We don't even—nonchalantly, nobody talks about it anymore. But it's a revolutionary achievement. There's nobody going across the border illegally, or at least, it's statistically insignificant.

The big issue right now is the Left is [3]cherry-picking judges to prevent, not the deportation of somebody who's working, who's never been arrested, who's been here for five or six years, but criminals and people who already have been ordered out of the country or pro-Hamas, pro-terrorist supporters.

But the point I'm making is, what we're doing now is Phase Two. The border is essentially solved, as far as security, and in seven weeks. Now, we're having a difficult task of trying to find out who these 12 million people were that [4]former President Joe Biden deliberately and with intent—malicious intent—allowed to come into the country.

But the point I'm making is this is an incredible success.

There's a final point that I want to make. We hear about Elon Musk is not authentically American. He is a nepo baby. And we hear Rep. Jasmine Crockett, D-Texas, threatening his person, along with threatening Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas.

All of this chaos and nihilism coming about [5]Elon Musk and what he's doing, but what he's finding out, almost every day, in the Treasury, in the IRS, in the Department of Energy, in the intelligence communities, is a vast unreported siphoning off of hundreds of millions of dollars, if not billions, to favorable and mostly left-wing entities, both abroad and here in the United States.

And already, he has cited areas where the Cabinet officers can cut $200 billion. That's a fifth, only after seven weeks. He's got a fifth of the way to go. He thinks he can cut a trillion dollars without touching entitlements. I don't know if he can.

But let me just sum up. If Donald Trump is able to fulfill this promise of commitment by foreign entities of $4 trillion in investment— $4 trillion—if he is able to cut a trillion dollars within a year or two, if he's able to solve the Ukraine war, and if he is able to have a general peace in the Middle East, that will be the most substantial presidency—if he does nothing else—that we've seen in 50 years.

Final word, everybody, keep calm. There's events in process that if they are brought to fulfillment and fruition, this country will be a radically different and radically better place.

2.3.31 From Profanity-Chic to Terrorist-Porn (2025-03-30 01:01)

Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz addresses the concerns of audience members about the actions of President Donald Trump and Elon Musk at the Pablo Center in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, on March 18, 2025. (Richard Tsong-Taatarii / Minnesota Star Tribune via Getty Images)[1]

[2]The Democratic Party is polling about 27 % approval—and sinking.

In 2024, it lost [3]the White House, the House of Representatives, the Senate, and both the popular vote and the Electoral College, 312-226.

In 2024, [4]Donald Trump won over 46 % of the Hispanic vote, including a majority of Hispanic men. Trump also likely captured 26 % of the black male vote, doubling his 2020 total.

In 2024, Trump increased his [5]2020 vote total in every single state. And he won 89 % of all the counties in the United States.

On every issue, Democrats sided with strident leftist movements rather than [6]the majority of Americans.

They supported globalism over nationalism, high-priced green energy over lower gas and electricity prices, and an open border and 12 million unaudited illegal aliens over security and legal-only immigration.

They seem unconcerned with our $36 trillion debt or the deterrence lost abroad that led to two theater-wide existential wars.

Democrats stay mum about unfair trade and budget deficits. They prefer the Black Lives Matter fixation on the color of our skin rather than Martin Luther King's emphasis on the content of our character.

They support allowing biological men to overpower women in female sports events—in opposition to 80 % of the electorate.

Democrats faced choices after their catastrophic defeat last year.

One, they could have stopped the hemorrhaging of their base of 18- to 30-year-olds, black men, Hispanics, and independents by moving toward the center.

They even could have worked with Trump and perhaps sought to take credit for joint successes.

Instead, they doubled down on "resistance" through street-theater terror-chic.

Democrat senators cut a group attack video, each echoing the potty word "s—."

In a House ad, Democrat female members mimicked ninjas, kicking and punching at the camera, as if hitting their Republican opponents.

Former vice presidential candidate and Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz boasts about kicking the “a-” of Republicans.

“A—” is now the standard Democrat epithet for Elon Musk, as voiced by Arizona Sen. Mark Kelly. “D—” is the preferred Musk slur from Minnesota Sen. Tina Smith.

Xenophobia is also now Democrat chic.

Walz smears Musk, an American citizen, as a “South African nepo baby.”

Other Democrat representatives question Musk’s loyalty, asking, “Which country is he [Musk] loyal to?”

Or they further boast, “We’re [Democrats] going to send Elon back to South Africa.”

An unhinged Rep. Maxine Waters shouts that she wants first lady Melania Trump deported, given she too is a naturalized citizen.

But those theatrics have now escalated into near-overt support for violence.

Democrats are blocking the deportation of dangerous illegal aliens affiliated with the terrorist-designated Tren de Aragua.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [7]Donate now

They try to stop the deportation of resident alien Mahmoud Khalil—arch Hamas supporter, apologist for the murderers of Oct. 7, and a spokesman for the most violent student group at Columbia.

To stop Musk’s advisory Department of Government Efficiency and its identification of government waste, fraud, and abuse, leftist cabals are now terrorizing Musk’s Tesla brand nationwide.

They seek to destroy cars, dealerships, and charging stations. Individual Tesla owners are sometimes tailed, confronted, and threatened.

Democrats claim no formal role in such terror—but more or less seem to approve of its ends and means.

Left-wing comic Jimmy Kimmel winks and nods on national television about the current violent Tesla terrorist campaign.

Walz celebrates the resulting drop in the Tesla stock price. As Minnesota’s governor overseeing his state’s sizable investment in Tesla, Walz could care less about trash-talking his own taxpayers' investments.

Rep. Jasmine Crockett boasts that Musk "must be taken down."

She brags she wants to physically assault Sen. Ted Cruz, who "has to be knocked over the head, like hard" —adding "I think you punch, I think you (sic) OK with punching."

Crockett even mocked disabled and wheelchair-bound Texas Gov. Greg Abbott: "You all know we got Gov. Hot Wheels down there. ... And the only thing hot about him is that he is a hot-a- mess, honey."

Former Democrat House member and once-censured Rep. Jamaal Bowman claimed Musk was a "Nazi" and an "incompetent thief."

Democrat Rep. Al Green was censured by the House for disrupting the Trump joint address to Congress—and led away screaming and shaking his cane at the president in failed efforts to shut down the speech.

Senator Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, who once issued threats to Supreme Court Justices Neil Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh by name, now boasts, "We have people going to the Republican districts and going after these Republicans who are voting for this and forcing them to either change their vote or face the consequences."

Furious at their own increasing impotence, these contemporary Democrat Jacobins are dabbling with their own version of a reign of smut terror.

They are probably too impotent to derail the country, but they are certainly destroying themselves.

2.3.32 Trump Admin, Don't Try to Befriend People Who Despise You (2025-03-30 01:05)

Apparently, about 10 days ago, around March 15, the security team of the Trump administration—which included Pete Hegseth, the defense secretary; [1]Marco Rubio, the secretary of state; JD Vance, the vice president; adviser Stephen Miller; Susan Wiles, another presidential adviser; some intelligence officials; John Ratcliffe, head of the CIA; [2]National Intelligence Director Tulsi Gabbard—there's about 15 people on it.

And they were communicating from an inherited protocol from the Biden administration, an encrypted Signal of media vehicles, so that they could talk about national security questions, specifically, including whether to bomb the Houthis in retaliation for shutting down maritime transportation on the Red Sea.

But here's what happened. Somebody, and allegedly it's national security adviser Michael Waltz, who was one of the architects of this group chat that was supposedly encrypted, put Jeffrey Goldberg, the editor of The Atlantic Monthly.

I mean, this is insane. He is one of the most hard-left critics of the Trump administration imaginable. But he was on there. And he listened to these conversations, apparently, for about 10 days.

And then, when he was waiting and—he never notified anybody that they had mistakenly put his name on the inclusion list to this confidential information. He just sat there and didn't tell anybody, of course. He was waiting for a big scoop. And he got it when on March 15, they decided to bomb the Houthis.

And there was an internal discussion. [3]JD Vance said, "This is kind of against the MAGA initiative of not wanting to have optional military engagements." Some people said, "The Europeans benefit, they need access to the Red Sea. Here we are, again." But there was an internal discussion for and against.

As soon as he heard that, though, he learned that a few hours later there was an actual attack. He decided he was going to be famous or, in right-wing circles, conservative infamous.

So then on March 24, he published, "How I know all of this and they put me on this chat list." In other words, he didn't ever identify anybody and say, "This was a mistake. I don't have a national security clearance. Please don't put me on there." No. He just listened in, stealthily, through their mistake.

And what do we make of all this? Of course, the Trump administration people said immediately, "This was not classified information. It was just internal discussion." Goldberg said, "This was a complete lapse." And then, all proverbial hell broke loose.

Congress brought people in: "How can you do this?" Pete Buttigieg, of all people, said, "This is a massive screwup." [4]Hillary Clinton weighed in. This is a person who destroyed 30,000 emails—many of them, some of them classified—and of course, was using a private server to transmit classified information, which even James Comey said was felonious.

And then, we had Leon Panetta weigh in and critical. This is the Leon Panetta, of course, who was one of the "51 intelligence authorities" who lied to the country on Oct. 23, 2020, to arm Joe Biden in the debate.

But here's my point. Why would you ever put Jeffrey Goldberg?

He has a history. He was the one, in 2020, right during the campaign, to help Joe Biden—went back and said, in 2018, when [5]Donald Trump was visiting Normandy in France, that it was rainy and he said it wasn't safe to go to the Aisne-Marne cemetery to see the American dead. I was on the American Battle Monuments Commission, so I know that cemetery very well. And 19 people didn't deny Jeffrey Goldberg. But in a campaign-timed, synchronized manner, he said that Donald Trump said, "These people were suckers to die that way." And he said he had four anonymous sources that were in the room. He never identified any of them. Nineteen said he was not telling the truth.

Joe Biden, almost immediately, began cutting commercials and saying that this had something to do with his son. And his son had died. Remember, he kind of mixed up the details, that his son had died because he was in Iraq. And how dare Trump? And it really hurt Trump in the 2020 election.

A couple of other details, very quickly. This is the same Jeffrey Goldberg, remember, that my former colleague, Kevin Williamson, left the National Review—he trashed me on the way out, by the way. I don't hold any grudges on that. And he said he was going to work for Jeffrey Goldberg. And he announced it at a very high salary. And then, before he even started, Jeffrey Goldberg flipped, bowed to pressure, and said he was an anti-abortion person. And they fired him.

He doesn't have a very good record for veracity. Why would you ever, ever even consider having his name in your Rolodex? And the answer is, I don't know.

But as a general rule, if you're a conservative, you only deal with [6]hostile media—and that's 95 % of them—on the circumstances that you go in expecting a public debate. You don't talk to them off the record. You don't disclose them. Trust me, I've had this same experience.

Final note. This reminds me so much of 2010. Remember Stanley McChrystal, he was the commanding officer of all forces in Afghanistan. He brought in a similar Jeffrey Goldberg-type of person, Michael Hastings, a left-wing Rolling Stones reporter. Why, as a general in charge of intelligence, would you allow a left-wing reporter to be embedded with your intimate conversations?

And at one point, an unidentified officer said, "There's a phone call and it's Joe Biden," who was the vice president, but he called him "Joe, bite me." Hastings clinged on that, wrote a big letter. McChrystal allowed an officer—they chuckled, apparently, and they made fun of the vice president. They went back to Washington. He was recalled. And Barack Obama relieved him from command.

Remember, Article 88 says that no active or retired officer—high-ranking officer—can disparage the president, vice president, and Cabinet members.

I don't think that he meant that to be public. And he didn't say it. He just heard it and did not correct it. But that was grounds enough to relieve him from command.

Final footnote. We've had a lot of generals who've said a lot worse about the commanding officer. And none of them, whether active or retired, have faced any of the circumstances that Stanley McChrystal faced.

Bottom line, if you're in the Trump administration, do not, do not under any circumstances think you can be friends with people who despise you. And this is a lesson that I hope Mike Waltz learns. And I think he will. And that they should press on.

2.3.33 The Real Oligarchs Who've Been Running Our Country (2025-03-30 01:07)

Have you heard this word lately that's been bandied about, "oligarchs," "autocrats," "dictators," but mostly, "aristocrats"? In other words, that, supposedly, a small cabal of very wealthy people have snatched control of the government. And the Democrats, as the loyal opposition of the fighting middle class, is trying to stop it.

They use the word "plutocrats." Oligarch, just from the Greek word, the rule by the few. Plutocrat means the rule by the wealthy. Aristocrat means ruled by the so-called best—or those people who claim they're better born. But they're using all of these terms to castigate, apparently, the relationship between Elon Musk and [1]President Donald Trump.

But here's what's ironic. We didn't hear any of this during the Obama years, during the Clinton years, or during the Biden years. In other words, for 20 years, no one made mention that the country was controlled by oligarchs.

Let me just look at the list for you of the 10 wealthiest people in the United States: Elon Musk, Jeff Bezos, Mark Zuckerberg, Warren Buffett, Larry Page, Sergey Brin, Larry Ellison, Bill Gates, Mike Bloomberg. They all have one thing in common, they're all worth over $100 billion. And until recently, I would say the 2024 election, they were all against the Republican Party and were lavish donors for [2]the Democrats.

Why they're angry now is because Jeff Bezos' Washington Post—which was a vehicle, a money-losing, but still influential, vehicle for leftist and Democratic agendas—decided not to endorse either Kamala Harris nor Donald Trump.

Elon Musk—who voted for Hillary Clinton in 2016 when he was beloved by the Left because of Tesla, because of SpaceX, because of Neuralink, because of Starlink. Also, according to what he said, voted for Joe Biden in 2020.

Mark Zuckerberg, remember, put $419 million in his various PACs to absorb the work of registrars to great effect in the 2020 election.

Mike Bloomberg probably has the record, single record. He used $1 billion to try to capture the 2020 Democratic primary nomination— $1 billion.

So why are they so angry at the oligarchs when the oligarchs were synonymous with Democrats?

And I should point out that George Soros put in $125 million in the 2022 midterms. He has the all-time record. It's assumed that he has spent $22 billion for left-wing candidates and left-wing PACs and left-wing foundations.

Sam Bankman-Fried, the felon, he put over $100 million from 2020 to 2022, all on the side of Democrats and left-wing candidates. His mother was a bundler, a stealthy bundler for billionaires in Silicon Valley.

So, what's going on?

One last data point, in the 2024 election cycle, the Biden campaign, the Harris campaign, and the Trump campaign together raised $4.7 billion. But guess what? The Democrats raised $1 billion more than did Trump.

So, what is going on? There is an anger now that for the first time in 20 years, over three administrations—Clinton, Obama, and Biden—for the first time there are multibillionaires who are starting to question their Democratic loyalty: Larry Ellison, [3]Elon Musk, Mark Zuckerberg, perhaps even Jeff Bezos.

Most billionaires are still on the side of [4]the Left, but they don't tolerate any apostates. So they're angry they don't have a lock on the oligarch, so to speak.

I'll just finish with one reflection. Why did they start to bolt? Because the Democratic Party was so sure of the support of billionaires, they started making demands upon them and saying:

You're going to give this amount of money. And if you want to play ball with us, this is the monopoly that will control artificial intelligence. You are included. You're not. We're going to get the FBI to partner with you, [5]Mark Zuckerberg, and Meta, Facebook, to make sure you ban information injurious to the Biden campaign. You, Twitter, the old Twitter, you're going to have FBI.

And they revolted. And Donald Trump came along and said:

I welcome all of you because I'm not gonna tell you who to vote for or what to do, but I'm going to look at you in a nationalist-populist manner. You are the William Knudsens, the Henry Fords, the Henry Kaisers of the War Production Board. In other words, I'm gonna go to bat for you so that you do not have your wealth confiscated in China, so that people in Europe do not impose special taxes on you just because you're making too much money or try to censor your news. In other words, I'm going to try to enlist you on behalf of the country in a patriotic, nationalist fashion.

And they found that argument more persuasive than they did, "You better give to us and this is what you're going to do." And as a result, 30 % of the billionaires bolted and are either now neutral or they favor the Republicans. The vast majority, to repeat, still favor Democrats.

The Democratic Party is the party of the very wealthy, plutocracy, and the billionaire class, but they demand absolute loyalty and solidarity. And any defections or apostates then cause them to go—I don't know what the word is—ballistic that anybody would doubt their ability to control the big money in the United States. Big money in the United States is a Democratic phenomenon.

2.4 April

2.4.1 What Was the Purpose of Opening Our Southern Border? (2025-04-07 00:21)

Now that we've seen, in the first eight weeks of the Trump administration, a 96 % reduction in illegal entries across [1]the southern border—and this was done, remember, without the supposed need for comprehensive “immigration reform”—it's logical to ask what the last four years were about.

Why did we have a completely open border? Why did 12 million people come into the United States from all over the world under illegal auspices? What was the reason? Why would people do that?

And remember, right now, the United States has somewhere between 50 and 60 million residents that were not born in the United States. Twenty-seven percent of the population of California is foreign-born, of all statuses—citizen, legal, illegal.

That's an enormous challenge in assimilation, acculturation, integration. And we're not doing that, of course. But why would we do that? Why would we have 16 %, now, of the population of the United States as foreign-born? What was the rationale behind that, especially in the context of [2]illegal entries?

Looking back, what were the Democrats, what was then-[3]President Joe Biden, what were the handlers of Biden thinking? I suppose they thought that maybe people who were coming in without English, without high school diplomas—for the most part—without capital, and without skills would be dependent on federal largess.

I know you're gonna say people who are not here legally cannot get Medicaid. Well, they can get Medicaid in an emergency. In California, anybody can get Medicaid, which we here call Medi-Cal.

So many people came in illegally and got on Medi-Cal that the system is broke. It's $6.7 billion in the hole. Fifty percent of the population, of all births, are on Medi-Cal. And 40 % of the California resident population are on Medi-Cal.

So, was the idea to get people dependent on the government? And then that would make government grow and more redistribution and more higher taxes. A way of, what? Having equity? Taking from the small, supposed, greedy elite and making them pay higher taxes to fund this social welfare?

Or was it utopianism, globalism, 21st century-ism, end of the worldism? In which you think that borders are a 19th-century construct. We're all people of the same planet, as we see in Europe. So, let's just get rid of borders. Let's make it everything from Yucatan to the Arctic Circle, we can just go anywhere we want in this utopian dream. There's no difference.

Why is somebody who was born in Chiapas or Oaxaca or Michoacan to dire poverty and cartels and corruption, why doesn't he get the chance of somebody who's born in Malibu? Well, as social architects, maybe the Left thought he should have the chance. So, we'll just destroy the border.

Or a third reason why—was it more sinister? Did they think that after 2020, when the majority of states changed the balloting laws to such a degree that earlier mail-in and early voting had only constituted 30 % of those who voted, 70 % voted on Election Day—now 70 % of all American voters do not vote on Election Day. They don't go before somebody and show a driver's license. Did they think, under this system, they could bring in 12 million people and, in some cases, they could vote?

Now, that's a very controversial topic. [4]The Left says that they never do vote. I'm not suggesting that they do in numbers, although, I will suggest that although it's illegal at the state level, in most states, it's absolutely illegal at the federal level.

Sixteen local jurisdictions allow illegal aliens to vote in city council, school board elections, local referendums. It's a trend that the Left is trying to cultivate and mine. So, do they think that, eventually, the more people you bring in—so you have 50 or 60 million people who were not born in the United States—they're going to be a constituency? And equity being what it is and parity being—they deserve to vote.

Was that the long-term goal? Or was it a fourth reason, just simple nihilism, chaos? People were angry at the Trump years. Or they were angry at traditional America. They think it's racist and sexist. It doesn't provide diversity or equity and inclusion. So, what we're going to do is just flood the zone. Twelve million people. And we'll see how you like it. We're gonna put them in hotels in New York. We're gonna send them to the inner city. And we're not gonna send them to Malibu or Martha's Vineyard or Nantucket. But we're just gonna flood the zone and just make so much chaos that you'll have to deal with it, sort of like California. Deal with it.

I don't have the answer. I don't know what was behind it. But I do know that never in the history of the United States, [5]within four years, did the government, by intent, destroy the border, welcome in 12 million people, during the first year of a COVID-19 lockdown, where all of us had to be very careful, wear masks, and have proof of vaccination, with no audit at all of the people who were not here.

It's inexplicable. And it's so inexplicable that I'm gonna end today with I don't have any answers other than providing the possible choices and alternatives I outlined.

2.4.2 Other Countries Seem to Like Tariffs. So Why Are People Opposed to Trump's Tariffs? (2025-04-07 00:23)

April 3, [1]President Donald Trump announced it as "Liberation Day." And by that he meant we were going to be liberated from asymmetrical tariffs of the last 50 years. And it was going to inaugurate a new what he called "golden age" of trade parity, greater investment in the United States, but mostly, greater job opportunities and higher-paying jobs for Americans.

And yet, the world seemed to erupt in anger. It was very strange. Even people on the libertarian right and, of course, the left were very angry. The Wall Street Journal pilloried Donald Trump.

But here's my question. China has prohibitive tariffs, so does Vietnam, so does Mexico, so does Europe. So do a lot of countries. So does India. But if tariffs are so destructive of their economies, why is China booming? How did India become an economic powerhouse when it has these exorbitant tariffs on American imports? How did Vietnam, of all places, become such a different country even though it has these prohibitive tariffs? Why isn't Germany, before its energy problems, why wasn't it a wreck? It's got tariffs on almost everything that we send them. How is the EU even functioning with these tariffs?

I thought tariffs destroyed an [2]economy, but they seem to like them. And they're angry that they're no longer asymmetrical. Apparently, people who are tariffing us think tariffs improve their economy. Maybe they're right. I don't know.

The second thing is, why would you get angry at the person who is reacting to the asymmetrical tariff and not the people who inaugurated the tariff?

Why is Canada mad at us when it's running a $63 billion surplus and it has tariffs on some American products at 250 %. Doesn't it seem like the people who started this asymmetrical—if I could use the word—trade war should be the culpable people, not the people who are reluctantly reacting to it?

Sort of like Ukraine and Russia. Russia invaded Ukraine. Do we blame Ukraine for defending itself and trying to reciprocate? No, we don't. We don't blame America because it finally woke up and said, "Whatever they tariff us we're gonna tariff them." Which brings up another question: Are our tariffs really [3]tariffs?

That is, were they preemptive? Were they leveled against countries that had no tariffs against us? Were they punitive? No. They're almost leveled on autopilot. Whatever a particular country tariffs us, we reciprocate and just mirror image them. And they go off anytime that country says, "It was a mistake. We're sorry. You're an ally. You're a neutral. We're not going to tariff this American product." And we say, "Fine." Then the autopilot ceases and the automatic tariff ends. In other words, it's their choice, not ours. We're just reacting to what they did, not what we did.

Couple of other questions that I've had. We haven't run a trade surplus since 1975—50 years. So, it wasn't suddenly we woke up and said, "It's unfair. We want commercial justice." No. We've been watching this happen. For 50 years it's been going on. And no president, no administration, no Congress in the past has done anything about it. Done anything about what? Leveling tariffs on our products that we don't level on theirs.

It was all predicated in the postwar period. We were so affluent, so powerful—Europe, [4]China, Russia were in shambles—that we had to take up the burdens of reviving the economy by taking great trade deficits. Fifty years later, we have been deindustrialized. And the countries who did this to us, by these unfair and asymmetrical tariffs, did not fall apart. They did not self-destruct. They apparently thought it was in their self-interest. And if anybody calibrates the recent gross domestic product growth of India or Taiwan or South Korea or Japan, they seem to have some logic to it.

There's a final irony. The people who are warning us most vehemently about this tariff quote the Smoot-Hawley Act of 1930. But remember something, that came after the onset of the Depression—after. The stock market crashed in 1929. That law was not passed until 1930. It was not really amplified until '31.

And here's the other thing that they were, conveniently, not reminded of: We were running a surplus. That was a preemptive punitive tariff, on our part, against other countries. We had a trade surplus. And it was not 10 % or 20 %. Some of the tariffs were 40 % and 50 %. And again, it happened after the collapse of the [5]stock market.

In conclusion, don't you find it very ironic that Wall Street is blaming the Trump tariffs for heading us into a recession, if not depression, when the only great depression we've ever had was not caused by tariffs but by Wall Street?

2.4.3 Strategy to Trump China on the World Stage (2025-04-07 00:26)

I'd like to talk today about China. It seems to be on everybody's mind, but explicitly on [1]President Donald Trump's mind.

That's the one common denominator that explains his [2]interest in Panama and not to turn over our key transit from East to West Coast to China. China has no business there. And same thing with Greenland.

He's worried about the Chinese having access to the Arctic Circle. He's worried about their trade surplus. He's worried about circumventing unfair trade by assembling their products in Mexico. He's worried about them sending raw product of fentanyl.

He's worried about their surrogates, the sort of mad pit bulls, like North Korea and, increasingly, Iran, that he cuts the leash every once in a while and says—he being China—"Go to it. Cause chaos."

He's worried that China is intimidating countries in the Pacific and in Asia. Some of our strongest friends—Australia, South Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines, Vietnam. Saying things like, "The United States is in decline. You better cut a deal."

Essentially, they're like Japan in 1940 and they're trying to re-fashion something like the Japanese East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. That was a mercantile system aimed at the West, which soon they were to be at war at.

So, is it all depression? No. What Trump is saying is, for us to stop this, we've got to balance our budget. We can't spend $3 billion a day on interest. If we're gonna do this, we have to have trade parity. We can't keep running up a trillion, a trillion and a half dollars in trade surplus.

And when he looks at us at home, he says, the ESG, this [3]environmental, social, governance, that we don't look at productivity in stocks but whether they're politically correct or DEI and woke, that's anti-merit—it doesn't work. The Chinese love it. We will not be competitive.

If we look at the border, you can't have an open border with 30 million illegal aliens. That is a drag on productivity. You have to have security.

So, what he's doing is, in all these areas, is identifying the threat that [4]China poses and why we, with an open, transparent, and capital society, can achieve our preeminence or guarantee our preeminence, if we make changes.

And it's not necessarily a pessimistic picture. I'll just give you some statistics.

Yes, China has 2,000 fighters. We have 1,500. But fighters aren't the only story. There are bombers, there are logistic planes, there are intelligence planes. When you look at all of the [5]U.S. Air Force, we have about 1,500 more planes. And we have over 500 fifth-generation fighters. I think they only have about 60.

Yes, they are building 200 times more ships than we are.

Remember, we built the largest navy in World War II that turned out, by 1945, larger than all the navies in the world. We were building a liberty or freedom mercantile vessel, big 10,000-

12,000-ton vessels, every five days. We built 3,000 of them. We built 120 carriers of different classifications.

So, we were the shipbuilder and now China is. But when you actually look at our fleets, we still have 11 fleet carriers and Navy groups around them. They are over 100,000 tons. They're all nuclear. China has two and it's building a third. We have about 85 to 87 submarines. They have about 60. But every one of ours is nuclear. Not theirs. They only have about six or seven.

If you look at all of these statistics on economics, they have 1.4 billion people. We have about 335-340 million people, but we produce one and a half times of nominal gross domestic product as China. So, one American produces one and a half times more goods and services than his four Chinese counterparts.

If you look at per capita income, we're still ranked sixth in the world. China's 73. Americans have a lot more purchasing power per capita than Chinese.

So, what Trump—let me put this all together in conclusion. China is ascendant and we are static. Trump comes in and he's looking at things at home that will restore our global preeminence—fiscal discipline, secure borders, merit-based education, energy development. And he says, "Right now we still have the lead. And we will maintain this lead. But if we continue down the trajectory we're on, we're gonna be in big trouble."

Final note. We have 5,500 deliverable nuclear weapons. China has about 500. But they're billing six or seven a month. And they want to get up to 1,000 in five years and then keep going.

So, what Trump is doing, again, is he's saying, "Right now our system is much superior—energy, agriculture, productivity, GDP, per capita income. But the trends in the future are not good. And if we don't change, our rival will dominate the world. And I'm not gonna let that happen on my watch."

And I think that explains a lot of his, otherwise, sometimes, inexplicable worries, from Greenland to Panama, to the border, to our universities.

2.4.4 The European Left Takes Out Conservative Politicians (2025-04-07 00:30)

. There's two things that ring true about Europeans and their relationship to us Americans.

No. 1, they never feel or they never admit that they're emulated. They admit they're affected by the ill effects they think of America, but they're not influenced by us.

And No. 2, they're the stalwarts of democracy. We have these pathologies of swinging hard to the right, or we're yokels, or we're anti-democratic, or we're MAGA fanatics. But the Europeans are pristine [1]Democrats, we're told. And they're independent of America.

But something's happened that belies those two allegations or assumptions.

No. 1, suddenly, Europe is copying the lawfare of the United States. Remember that Letitia James, Alvin Bragg, Fani Willis, Jack Smith, and E. Jean Carroll, in civil and criminal suits, for four years tried to destroy President Donald Trump. And they had over $400 million in fines that were leveled at one point. And there were 91 felony indictments. I think [2]Alvin Bragg actually convicted him of 32. This was in addition to trying to remove him off the ballot in 20 states and raiding his home.

So, the Europeans wouldn't do that, would they?

The second thing is that this was a destruction or an attempt to warp democracy, not to let Donald Trump be on the ballot, to put him behind jail bars.

So, let me just tell you what's going on in Europe. In February, this conservative, which is usually in the media termed a hard-right, far-right group, in Germany, the Alternative for Deutschland, the Alternative for Germany—it won 21 % of the vote. It skyrocketed. In some areas of East Germany it won 40 %.

Whether you like it or not, it represents democracy. A lot of people are fed up with German energy policy, German immigration policy, German social policy, radical environmentalism. And what did the Germans do? They immediately said, even though they have 152 seats in their parliament, the second-largest, no party—no left-wing, right-wing, centrist party—will make an alliance with them to get a majority of seats under parliamentary democracy to run the government.

In other words, even though they had the greatest increase in their popularity, they were ostracized because somebody declared them unfit, even though they had a mandate of the people to be the second-most representative party of Germany.

In March, in Romania, a kind of an obscure conservative, right-wing candidate came out of nowhere, Calin Georgescu. And he, in the first round, he came in at the top. And he was predicted, this May, that he might be the elected prime minister of Romania.

And what happened? They declared him unfit. They said that he was—does this sound familiar—colluding with [3]Russian President Vladimir Putin. Putin's puppet. And therefore, they removed him from further consideration. They took him off the ballot.

There was no supreme court above that court, as there was in the United States, that said, "You can't do that." So, he's off the ballot. He can't be even considered, even though he was the largest vote-getter.

And then we come to this week's news that Marine Le Pen, the head of the most conservative party in France, who has got enormous momentum—enormous momentum because of the violence of radical Islamic groups inside France, the open borders, the dissatisfaction with the blank check given Ukraine, etc. I could go on and on. Many of the same problems that we're dealing with here—the far-left agenda.

It was probably scheduled to get more votes than anybody. And she had a pretty good chance, in three or four years, to replace French President Emmanuel Macron. And the high court did what? They said that she had expropriated funds, campaign funds. In other words, that she was blending—does this sound familiar—blending her own campaign with funds allotted from the European Union for other purposes. In other words, there was a distinction without a difference.

In other words, they only applied this law to her because they were terrified she was going to win in the next presidential election.

But that wasn't the end. Does this sound familiar? Then they—the court, without a jury—sentenced her to four years in prison, two years under house arrest, maybe two years suspended. So, they're going to take her out of the political atmosphere. Does that sound familiar? What am I getting at?

Given all these lectures we're getting from Europeans about the pristine nature of democracy there and our bastardized form here, they have, essentially, in three major countries [4]in Europe, eliminated any alternative to the orthodox, left-wing, socialist norm because they feared it was going to win. They always thought they were a fringe group, but now they think they're gonna win. So, they're de facto gone, the candidates.

And second, they're copying the left wing, chapter and verse, of the United States. They saw what they did to [5]Donald Trump and they said, "That is a good thing to do. We can do better." And they have done better. Where they were unable to destroy Trump and only made him stronger, the more they tried to destroy him, the Europeans succeeded.

So, how ironic that we are the bastions of democracy, at least we ward off threats to it in a way that's far more effective than the so-called guardians of democracy in Europe.

Today, even with President Trump's victory, leftist elites have their tentacles in every aspect of our government.

2.4.5 Don't Like Trump's Plan for the Economy? Let's Hear Yours (2025-04-10 21:05)

I'd like to talk about the economy and politics very quickly. Whether you like it or I like it or whether the administration likes it or whether the Congress or the American people like it, the success or failure of President Donald Trump will hinge on the status of [1]the economy.

It will overshadow the miraculous achievement on the border, where he went from a rate of about 2 million people a year to almost zero illegal immigration. It will even outrank the question of peace and stability in Ukraine or the Middle East. It'll outrank everything.

So, here's my question. There is now outrage, hysteria over the last 24 hours to 48 hours that Donald Trump has outlined his tariff program to bring down the nearly $1 trillion [2]trade deficit, and the stock market has taken hits.

So, here's my question, though, when Sen. Cory Booker stands up for 25 hours, does he give an alternate agenda on the economy? Does Rep. Nancy Pelosi talk about the economy? She used to. Does The Wall Street Journal, when they criticize Donald Trump, why don't they get a columnist and say, "These are the 10 points that are preferable in addressing our economic challenges"?

Now, what are our economic challenges? Well, the first is debt. We owe $37 trillion. We're paying $3 billion a day in interest. We're running a $1.7 trillion deficit.

So, if you were on the left and you were part of the machine that borrowed $7 trillion under [3]President Joe Biden, created these huge new programs, why don't you make an argument? Just say, "I believe in modern monetary theory. I believe, if we can just get down to 1 % or 2 % interest, you can service any debt because the bondholders, they're wealthy anyway. So, that's what we've been doing. And I don't—I believe money's a construct. It's just an idea. So, there is no such thing as, you know, red or blue ink—any of that. So, just keep spending. There's no problem— $37, $40 trillion."

Say that.

Or, if you're on the right, say, "I prefer to look at the debt in a different way. If you're going to cut, why select particular fraud, waste, and abuse areas? Why not just go across the board and treat everybody the same with a 4 % or 5 % or 10 % cut?"

Or, if you don't believe in cutting government to reduce the debt, then say, "Let's just go completely laissez-faire and let's grow the economy so it's growing at 4 % or 5 % gross domestic product. And it will solve the problem."

Or, if you're in the middle and you're an independent, why don't you just say, "We had three balanced budgets. We were reducing the debt because former House Speaker Newt Gingrich controlled taxes and former President Bill Clinton controlled spending. And he was able to find an incentive plan to increase revenue and Bill Clinton decreased spending. OK? Why not we go back and follow their model?"

But the problem is none of these areas—right, center, and left—nobody in these disciplines is offering any alternative agenda. It's just attack Trump, Trump, Trump, Trump.

Let's go to trades. So, we have, again, about a trillion-dollar trade deficit. We haven't had balanced trade for 50 years. Our opponents, challengers, allies, whatever you want to call them, feel that protected tariffs in China, in India, in Europe, in South Korea, in Japan have been very conducive to their economic miracle—postwar miracles. And they feel that there must be some wisdom in them because they continue to perpetuate them. They have not run deficits for a half-century. They're not, in terms of GDP, debt, quite like we are.

So, maybe you can argue that tariffs are just an American problem. An obsession. And they don't really matter. Or you can say that we should have reciprocal tariffs based on each one. But tell us what you want to do.

Why don't you just say that if you—and I have read this from scholars as diverse as the American Enterprise Institute, the Cato Institute. This is just a construct, trade deficits, they don't matter. Because the people, if they run up a surplus, they buy our bonds or they invest, and it's a circular process—just say that. Or, if you believe that trade deficits matter, then you say, "Well, the answer is not through tariffs. It's through greater productivity. And here's how I want to do it."

But again, there's nothing.

And then we get, finally, into foreign investment. [4]Donald Trump is bragging, I think justifiably so, that he may have $3 to $5 trillion in foreign investment. Nobody says a word about it. Nobody says this many trillion dollars will result in this many new jobs created. No, they just kind of ignore it.

So, give us a reason why. Just say, "You know, the new massive amounts of foreign aid will have no effect on either our trade deficit or our budget deficit. It's just a construct that Trump says." Or say that it will but it won't nullify the pernicious effects of [5]tariffs.

But what I'm getting at, in conclusion, is what if Cory Booker had said, "I'm going to speak for 25 hours on why Donald Trump's trade, debt, and federal workforce investment are all wrong. And here's da, da, da, da"? Or what if House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries said, "Here is our contract for America on the economy. The economy"?

No one is giving any alternatives. No one is talking in any way that they have an antithetical and a better plan than Donald Trump. So, what we're left with is just naysaying, nihilism, criticism. And the American people are confused.

If you don't believe that what Donald Trump is trying to do on debt, budget, workforce, trade, then come up with a better agenda. And show why it will work and why his will fail. But don't just scream and yell and cause all hysteria and go to street theater because that's no answer. It only amplifies the problem.

2.4.6 What Would It Take to Destroy the United States? (2025-04-10 21:07)

I was looking at the news this week and I thought of an experiment. What if you really wanted to destroy the United States? What if you'd had ill intention for America? What would you do? What agenda would you pursue?

And then I started thinking of civilizations. What was the stuff of civilizations that made them work? And it's basic: their borders, their finances, their unity, their fuel, their food. So, if you really wanted to, in civilizational terms, destroy the United States, the first thing I would do if I were an enemy of the United States is I would destroy the borders.

In other words, I would just let anybody come across our version of the Rhine or the Danube, as they happened in fifth century. And that's pretty much what we have done the last 40 years, but particularly, the last four years.

We talked about comprehensive immigration reform as needed to stop the influx, but [1]President Donald Trump, before the Biden administration and after the [2]Biden administration, had no such recourse. He just simply stopped it, temporarily. And he has now.

But what was behind all that? [3]Former President Joe Biden, apparently, thought that if he let in 12 million people, without audits or background checks—would it alter the demography? Would it give him new constituencies for big government? What was the thinking about it?

But it's caused billions of dollars in increased expenses. It's really damaged the inner city. It's damaged the Rio Grande Valley. It's damaged the San Joaquin Valley. We have all of this crime spike. Was it deliberate?

If you also wanted to hurt the United States, you know what I would do if I had nefarious intent? I would keep printing money. And I would call that, in fact, "Build Back Better." And the more inflationary it got, I would say it was going to be the "Inflationary Reduction Act." And in that process, I would borrow maybe $7 trillion within four years, maybe $8 trillion, and add to an existing $38 trillion in national debt, $37 trillion, so that the interest per day would be $3 billion. That would really hurt the United States.

You know what I'd also do? If I looked at the United States and I said, "Oh my gosh, they've got almost limitless supplies of natural gas, they've got almost more coal than any European country, they've got all of this oil. They once had a vibrant—they were the nuclear energy, they were the founders of nuclear power. They have all these dams of hydroelectric," I know what I'll do. I will castigate all of that and say it makes either the environment too hot, global warming, or it ruins the natural landscape with dams. Or it will kill us all through radiation.

Whatever particular complaint I'd have, I would stop it as much as I could. Dismantle nuclear power plants. Cut back on natural gas. Stop full drilling, fracking. Blow up dams rather than build them. And I'm talking about California, for example, where the result would be 40 cents a kilowatt. Would make it unaffordable. That way, if you did all of that, a quarter of all the people who paid their power bills would default. And that model would sweep across the United States.

The third thing that I would do—and I think it's besides debt and borders and fuel—I would sow disunity. And I would say that the content of our character is not as important as the color of our skin. And I would go back and reinterpret all of the hard-won progress of the civil rights movement and sort of get rid of it.

I would just say the color of our skin matters more than anything and so we're going to hire on the basis of superficial appearance. We're gonna have reparations to go back eight generations and adjudicate who might have had an ancestor that owned a slave and who didn't. And then I would say I'm gonna predicate graduations, dorms—who gets to go into a dorm, who gets to go into a library, a safe space—oh, on the basis of race. But I'm not gonna call it racism or segregation. I'm gonna call it [4]diversity, equity, and inclusion and mainstream it.

If I also wanted to create disunity, I would just say, from now on, after 7,000 years of civilization, there are three sexes, not two. And [5]women's sports must include biological males. Not that it was an important topic, but it would create enormous tension and disunity.

What am I getting at? It seems to me that in the last four years, if you had an agenda that was designed to hurt the United States, in terms of an influx of 12 million foreigners that were unaudited, an unprotected border, a repression on energy, a desire to print money rather than to cut expenses and save money and go toward a balanced budget, and a way to divide the people—if you wanted to do all that, you couldn't have done a better job than what we have seen from 2021 to 2025.

2.4.7 Scott Jennings Has a Key Reminder for Those Whiny Leftists Not Happy With How Trump Is Handling China (2025-04-13 13:46)

On Wednesday night, Scott Jennings [1]had a particularly brilliant moment going up against Tiffany Cross on "CNN NewsNight with Abby Phillip." That wasn't his only star moment from the show, though. Far from it. Earlier in the program, the panel discussed how [2]President Donald Trump announced a 90-day pause on tariffs, while he's still continuing to go tough against China came up, with Jennings issuing a key reminder about why we're so lucky to have Trump in office.

Advertisement

Jennings was pressed by CNN Business' Richard Quest as to why Trump didn't announce the pause sooner, to which Jennings came up with a calm and reasonable response. "I think, the answer that you would get from the administration is doing it this way gave him maximum leverage. It showed people that he was serious and it showed people that this isn't for show, that if you don't deal with us, we are willing to act here. But I think the answer is leverage, simply leverage. And now he's going to be able to deal with all these other countries and continue to isolate the bad actor, which is China," Jennings offered. It's also worth reminding that Trump's announcement about a pause comes as several countries want to come to the negotiating table. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent put the number at over 75 countries during Thursday's Cabinet meeting.

[3]@SecScottBessent: "We've got over 75 countries that want to come in" and negotiate a trade deal. [4]pic.twitter.com/HF5nQtHI2U — Townhall.com (@townhallcom) [5]April 10, 2025

But then, Ana Navarro, who is also on "The View" as well as CNN, had to jump in and rant and rave about Trump's handling of the situation. "Well, I don't think he's shown people that he's serious. I think he's shown people that he's crazy. He's mercurial. Honestly, if it was Kamala Harris behaving this way, they call her hormonal and hysterical, right?" Navarro claimed. It's indeed a hypothetical, though, as Jennings pointed out that "you'd have to get elected" to make those decisions before Navarro jumped in once more to cut him off. "But-well, yes. And if she had been elected and if Hillary Clinton had been elected, if any woman had been elected and been acting this way, they'd say it was menopause," she claimed, as if there couldn't possibly be other concerns with how Clinton or Harris would handle tariffs and dealing with China. "She would've never stood up to China," Jennings aptly pointed out. "So, this is a mood issue, right?" In a quoted repost of Townhall, Jennings also aptly stressed over X that "Harris would've never stood up to China. Never."

Harris would've never stood up to China. Never. [9]<https://t.co/KnJBcy9S41> — Scott Jennings (@ScottJenningsKY) [10]April 11, 2025

Navarro then proceeded to attack Trump, with an exasperated look on her face, even though she was the one who had such a nonsense response to Jennings' legitimate answer about the timing of Trump's announcement. "No, it's not a mood issue because his craziness and the way that he acts," Navarro continued to whine, as she then also brought up Trump's interactions with other countries to complain about that and even the Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE). Basically, Navarro just wants to complain about Trump any way she can.

It was later in that same segment, as the panel discussion devolved to discussing interactions with other countries on all kinds of levels, that Jennings fired back at Cross for saying he was "irrelevant" because he's "not a member of government," after also claiming that there was "a very colonizer" attitude that Trump has towards Greenland. "You got fired from your job, how relevant are you?" Jennings aptly fired back in response.

2.4.8 President Trump Has China Dangling Over a Massive Tariff Cliff (2025-04-13 13:47)

In some ways, this is the perfect issue for President Trump to drive liberals insane. It presents another opportunity for Democrats to get ahead of their skis since they have horrendous leadership, helmed by the likes of Jasmine Crockett, Chuck Schumer, and Hakeem Jeffries, aka Temu Obama. It's another chance for the liberal media to debase themselves. President Trump knows the political situation and the realities here. He knows his base. It's why he's not caving, though his enemies are presenting his 90-day pause as such, but it's actually the opposite. He has China firmly hanging over a massive tariff cliff.

Investors and market commentators are reading too much into short-term market movements in rates, currencies and equities.

I believe that it is much more likely that recent sharp moves in these asset classes is due to highly leveraged market participants being forced out of...— Bill Ackman (@BillAckman) [1]April 11, 2025

No gimp suit for me Cliff. If I were president, I would have started with a 90-day period for negotiations and then brought the hammer down.

By doing it President Trump's way, the entire world and their citizens got to experience the visceral impact of what massive tariffs...— Bill Ackman (@BillAckman) [2]April 9, 2025

The fact is that dozens of countries have voiced their willingness to re-negotiate trade deals, including South Korea and Vietnam, the latter of which is underreported and critical. Vietnam is a huge trading partner, but the markets might stabilize if the media reports on that accurately. Instead, it's this incessant panic porn factory that's kept chiefly everyone scared.

The elites don't get it.

REALITY CHECK: President Trump just brought more than 70 countries to the tariff cliff — using American leverage to renegotiate trade policy on AMERICAN terms — while STILL sticking it to China! [3]<https://t.co/ND1swohgKO>— Townhall Media JG (@JonGarthwaite) [4]April 11, 2025

🇰🇷 SOUTH KOREA VOWS TO ESCAPE TARIFFS THROUGH TALKS

Acting President Han Duck-soo says South Korea must use Trump's 90-day tariff pause to strike a deal:

"We must put in even greater effort"

Han also urged "special efforts" to protect the trade-dependent economy.

Source:... [5]<https://t.co/7e51WHD2E7> [6]pic.twitter.com/t9oJB3w7pG— Mario Nawfal (@MarioNawfal) [7]April 10, 2025

In less than 100 days, President Trump has:

- Inflation at 5 yr low
- Energy prices down 30 %
- Egg prices down 50 %
- Private sector employment surging
- Border secure
- Peace coming in Ukraine
- DEI dismantled
- Tax reform coming
- Regulations slashed— Bernie Moreno (@berniemoreno) [8]April 10, 2025

Yet, Trump has the support of the people: a YouGov survey found that well over a supermajority of Americans support tariffs to protect American markets exploited by unfair free trade deals. A similar number of Americans support beefing up and having a strong manufacturing base in America. Yet, when we have a president who sets into motion a policy to reset these trade dynamics, the media and the fat cat Democrats lose their minds. It's why the White House pushed a catchy phrase: don't be a 'Panican.'

Independent reporter Michael Shellenberger noted that the COVID pandemic exposed how America is overly reliant on offshore goods. The Trump goal is to re-create a high-skill manufacturing base here in America, and maybe bring some low-skill jobs back too—the pandemic has us relying on shoddy, Chinese-made personal protection gear. More importantly, having a home-grown semiconductor base here for microchips.

The political elites hate the change Trump is initiating. It's partially grounded in the Democrats' overt hatred and disgust of working people, with the party becoming a bloated, snobby, over-educated, overwhelmingly white, and wealthy coastal and urban enclave. And no, I don't care about race. Still, it's a little funny when the super white people start lecturing everyone about racism, especially when non-white working-class voters start voting Republican.

What happened this week was classic Art of the Deal. The big kahuna to accelerate this change is getting China to bend. They export everything here. It's not the same vice-versa, which means Trump's tariffs will devastate Beijing. Shark Tank's Kevin O'Leary said the Chinese don't play by the rules, and the tariffs should be higher—400 percent, not 125, which is where they're at. Trump isn't backing down, and CNN's Nia-Malika Henderson said the part the political class wanted to keep quiet out loud: is it worth upsetting the global market over HVAC jobs:

Nia-Malika Henderson: "Is it worth it to upend the global economy for HVAC jobs?"

Here's what Crockett said about rural America:

Jasmine Crockett: Trump should "sell off...other buildings" that are "definitely not in DC," but instead in "other places where...there's no other purpose...in some random rural town."

Stop being Panicans, guys. The working class hasn't abandoned Trump over this policy. The only people infuriated are the wealthy and college-educated, which is a lot of words to describe the typical Democrat.

A shocker for me given the tariff war: The GOP seems to be in their best position ever for the party who cares more for the needs of people like yourself.

A tie on a metric that Dems have historically led by double digits.

The reason? Huge GOP gains among the working class.

When these numerous bilateral trade re-negotiations happen and the tariff structure is reassessed, expect a lot of liberals to look stupid again. There is no argument one can sell to explain why other nations can slap high tariffs on us but we can't, nor is there an argument to suggest we, the United States, with its bountiful natural resources, can't make a great many things here at home again. Labor unions love this policy. Shawn Fain, the pro-Kamala president of the United Auto Workers Unions, has done a 180-degree turn on Trump regarding this policy.

Stay the course. Stand fast. Whoever said this would be easy and painless was never an American citizen. She puts up a fight, even more so when she's been degraded and taken advantage of by globalist elites.

2.4.9 Meta Whistleblower Alleges Company Provided U.S. User Data and Technology to China (2025-04-13 13:49)

A former insider at Meta has come forward with explosive allegations that the tech giant shared sensitive data and proprietary technology with China, raising serious national security concerns. The whistleblower claims that American user information was improperly accessed or exposed, potentially putting millions at risk, while Meta executives looked the other way. The revelation adds fuel to growing criticism from Republicans who have long warned about Big Tech's entanglements with foreign adversaries and its lack of accountability to the American people.

Earlier this week, former high-ranking Facebook employee Sarah Wynn-Williams testified before Congress that Meta, Facebook's parent company, knowingly put Americans' private data at risk by cooperating with the Chinese government. She told Sen. Josh Hawley (R-MO), chair of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime and Counterterrorism, that "Meta executives repeatedly undermine U.S. national security and betray American values."

During the Senate hearing, Hawley pressed Wynn-Williams on Meta's handling of Chinese user data, highlighting that Facebook planned to store Chinese user data in China, potentially making it accessible to the Chinese government. Wynn-Williams confirmed this, adding that Meta was aware of the risk that Chinese servers could also capture communications between American and Chinese users. When asked if Facebook was willing to accept that risk, she replied, "Yes," confirming that it was a deliberate decision following internal discussions.

Hawley claimed that Meta CEO Mark Zuckerberg "made censorship his business model," adding that the evidence the subcommittee has "in black and white is a company and leadership that is willing to do anything, anything, work with America's chief competitor, work with our chief adversary."

Wynn-Williams further accused Meta of cooperating with the Chinese Communist Party to censor content on its platform. She claimed that while at the company, she witnessed executives repeatedly make decisions that put Chinese business interests ahead of U.S. national security concerns.

On Thursday, Hawley sent a letter to Zuckerberg, demanding he testify before the subcommittee following Wynn-Williams' revelations that Chinese officials could "potentially access" the data of American users. Wynn-Williams also alleged that Zuckerberg was "personally invested" in Meta's business ties with China, noting that he committed to learning Mandarin and held weekly language sessions with employees.

"The American people deserve to know the truth about your company," the senator wrote.

2.4.11 Top 8 retro games of 1995 (2025-04-16 15:02)

Note: Though no one knew it at the time, 1995 was the beginning of a major change in the video game industry. Once dominated by Nintendo and Sega, 1995 saw the release of the Sony PlayStation. Nintendo and Sega still dominated the conversation for much of the year, but change was coming.

Note (2): I realized today (11/13/2024) that the list I use to pull these games had placed Secret of Evermore in 1996 when it actually launched in the US in 1995. As a result, I initially omitted it from this list. I've now revised the list, placing Secret of Evermore in its proper place.

Honorable Mentions:

- Arcade: Marvel Super Heroes
- Sega Genesis / Super NES: Primal Rage, Spider-Man
- Sega Saturn / Sega CD: Panzer Dragoon, Lunar: Eternal Blue
- PlayStation: Gex, Rayman
- Super NES / Super Famicom: Breath of Fire II, C2: Judgment Clay, Earthbound, Secret of the Stars, Ys V: Lost Kefin, Kingdom of Sand

8. Kirby's Dream Land 2 (Gameboy)(Tie)

Building off of the original Gameboy title as well the NES classic, Kirby's Adventure, Kirby's Dream Land 2 offers excellent platforming levels along with an array of powers for Kirby to take advantage of. Complimenting these powers are three new animal friends that Kirby can ride, with each offering their own take on Kirby's acquired power(s). Kirby's Dream Land 2 is also compatible with the Super Gameboy adapter for the Super NES, meaning the title would have it's own color scheme and border when played via said adapter.

8. Super Adventure Island 2 (Super NES)(Tie)

You can read more about this title in my previous [1]two [2]entries covering the Adventure Island franchise, but in summation, Super Adventure Island 2 throws out most of what you knew about the series in favor of gameplay more in line with the latter Wonder Boy titles. This title is far more open world than previous entries and sees Captain Higgins armed with a sword and sporting a suit of armor. Levels will need to be revisited (via an overworld map) as you find new abilities. I'm a fan of both the Adventure Island and Wonder Boy series, and this title pulls positive elements for both.

8. Venom/Spider-Man: Separation Anxiety (Super NES)(Sega Genesis)(Tie)

The sequel to Maximum Carnage had some big shoes to fill, and while Separation Anxiety falls short of its predecessor, it is still plenty of fun to play through, due in no small part to the fact that you can now pick to play as either Venom or Spider-Man, or play along with a friend, utilizing both. Separation Anxiety brings back the hero cameos from Maximum Carnage, but reduces the variety by a bit. While this is disappointing, an entirely new array of enemies shake things up. My brother and I spent countless joyful hours playing through this and beat it a number of times.

7. Mega Man 7 (Super NES)

Oddly enough, Mega Man 7 almost didn't see the light of day. Finished in 1994, it was shelved in favor of the Mega Man X series, and was only released after backlash from fans of the series.

This is made more baffling by the fact that Mega Man 7 received largely positive reviews. While it wasn't compared favorably to the X series, it was compared favorably to previous entries in the Mega Man series. Mega Man 7 also includes numerous secrets to discover, including the Rush Adapter introduced in Mega Man 6, an upgrade that, in my opinion, completely changes the game for the better once it is acquired. Mega Man 7 is also the first time Bass and Treble are seen in the series.

6. Castlevania: Dracula X (Super NES)

Dracula X for the Super NES is an odd title. While not a direct port of the TurboGrafx-16 title, Rondo of Blood, it does share some levels and has a near identical plot. It doesn't include all of the levels from Rondo, but does add levels that are new to Dracula X. This was done due to the limitation of the Super NES compared to the TG-16 as well as licensing agreements involving Rondo of Blood. While Dracula X is an enjoyable title, I've never felt that the controls were as tight as they could have been, and some of the level design left me cold. Still, this is a traditional, level based Castlevania title, and it does play as such. Even with a few shortcomings, it is well worth your time to give it a chance, especially if you've never had the opportunity to do so before.

5. Chrono Trigger (Super NES)

Let's get this out of the way right here. While I genuinely like this game, I never got out of it what many others have. I've never been sure why given my love of this genre. It may be due to the fact that I didn't get to play this until it was re-released on the PlayStation some years later. Regardless, this is yet another classic RPG on the Super NES. Plot heavy with many numerous characters, Chrono Triggers sees you jumping through time to stop an upcoming calamity. Chrono Trigger is unique in that, at a certain point, you are able to challenge the final boss at a time of your choosing, allowing for a dozen different endings. Chrono Trigger remains a popular game even today, and is one I should truly revisit myself.

4. Addams Family Values (Super NES)

If you've been following my blog journey through the years, then you know I'll occasionally pick a game that most people would never mention. For 1995, this is that title. While most people probably considered this a cash-in on the movie, a write-up in Nintendo Power convinced me to try this game, and it is far better than it has any right to be. While the plot of the game is similar to the film, it is vastly expanded upon. Addams Family Values tasks you, as Uncle Fester, with tracking down baby Pubert, who is being held somewhere on the Addams estate by Debbie Jelinsky. Addams Family Values plays almost identically to A Link to the Past, with a vast overworld, multiple "dungeons," numerous items to find, and secrets aplenty. Truly, the only downside of this game is the use of a password system, given to you by a family member that is not always easily found. In the age of emulation and save states, this has become a moot point (even when using the original cart on a system such as the Retron5).

3. Super Mario World 2: Yoshi's Island (Super NES)

With Yoshi's Island, Nintendo showed that they were not afraid to play with their most famous franchise. Instead of simply offering a direct gameplay sequel to Super Mario World, Yoshi's Island instead puts you in the role of one of a number of Yoshis, trying to get Baby Mario to an imprisoned Baby Luigi, who is being held by Kamek and Baby Bowser. Yoshi's Island is wildly imaginative in its level design, and uses a pastel and chalk aesthetic that have allowed the visuals to age extremely well. While I don't prefer this title to Super Mario World (though it seems most gamers do), it is still an excellent game with ageless level design.

2. Donkey Kong Country 2: Diddy's Kong Quest (Super NES)

1000

As good as Donkey Kong Country is, I think that Diddy's Kong Quest is actually a superior experience. In this title, Donkey Kong has been captured and it is up to Diddy and Dixie Kong to rescue him. Diddy and Dixie play very similarly. Both are small, quick, and extremely agile. The primary (and maybe only) difference is that Dixie can float down slowly by spinning her hair, a lifesaver in a game with some very tight platforming sections. DKC 2 adds a few new gimmicks to the levels while pulling some from DKC. It also brings back the animal crates that were so crucial to surviving in DKC. It takes true genius to top Nintendo's in-house games, and Rare was up to the challenge with DKC 2.

1. Secret or Evermore (Super NES)

I've written about this game a [3]couple of [4]times now because it is a game I adore. I originally purchased Evermore because I came across it for $20.00 at Wal-Mart and it looked intriguing. I had no clue at the time that I was buying a game that I would complete numerous times and would still go back to play nearly thirty years later. Evermore is an action RPG title that plays much like Secret of Mana, though I feel that Evermore controls a bit better. You, as the main character, along with your dog (also controllable) are pulled into a fantasy world by an odd machine you encounter in an abandoned mansion. After initially landing at a space station, you are ejected to a jungle area and are off to determine what has happened to you and to find a way to return to your own land. Evermore is a sprawling game that sends you through multiple themed areas. Weapons, items, and magic (called Alchemy in Evermore) are all present, as you would expect of a game in this genre. I love this game. Again, it's one of those games that I come back to every couple of years because it gives me joy in a way that many games can't. Anytime I can put a spotlight on it anywhere, I jump at the chance, and I'm happy to do so here (again) by making it my #1 game of 1995.

2.4.12 Postgame Wrap-up: Soul Blazer (2025-04-16 15:04)

Growing up in the 1990's meant experiencing the joy of the Super NES and Sega Genesis first hand. Unfortunately, it also meant not having the money to acquire all those great looking games sitting on the shelf at Wal-Mart, K-Mart, Toys'R Us, etc... As an adult, I've made it a point to try to find those games I missed out on and give them a chance. One such game that I just recently played for the first time is the Enix / Quintet classic, Soul Blazer. It should also be noted that I played this via the Super Famicom cart (titled Soul Blader) using an English patch on a Retron5. I've found that Super Famicom games are vastly more affordable than their North American counterparts.

The Set-up:

You are the Blazer. A warrior sent by The Master to rescue the people and villages of the Freil Empire. The evil spirit Deathtoll has taken over the land and sealed the citizens away while also populating the world with monsters. Armed only with your sword, you must find a way to the World of Evil where Deathtoll dwells.

So, technically speaking, you are an unnamed entity, but the spiritual successor to Soul Blazer, Illusion of Gaia, does reference this game and refers to the main character as the Blazer, and that sounds much cooler than “Brando,” which is the name I used.

The Story:

Upon your arrival, the world is empty of all creatures, save the monsters sent by Deathtoll. You, the Blazer, must travel into the dungeons of Deathtoll and release the people/creatures of the world. As you do so, you gain new abilities and new allies that will be needed as you move on to the next region.

It's very empty

The story of Soul Blazer is fairly simplistic, but is at least a bit familiar if you've played other Quintet games. Quintet seemingly had a fascination with destruction and creation, and it shows up again in Soul Blazer. This isn't meant to imply a negative, but merely to point out a clear interest the developers at Quintet had when crafting narratives. There is a narrative running through the game, and characters that you'll encounter or encounter mentions of from region to region, but ultimately the strength of this game lies more in the gameplay.

The Gameplay:

Soul Blazer is played from a top down perspective and, as noted above, tasks you with freeing the creatures of each region you visit. Each region begins with your arrival in a deserted landscape. After exploring for a bit, you'll find your way to a dungeon that contains monster lair producing, you guessed it, monsters. Each lair produces a set number of monsters, and when those are eliminated, the lair turns green. Once this is done, you can walk over the lair to release a creature, trigger a change in the dungeon, or gain an item. More often than not, a creature will be released in the deserted area you started in. The game will show you where the person/animal is so you can visit them once you've exited the dungeon. Most of these will offer advice or, on occasion, a new ability. And the game is structured in such a way that you may need to exit the dungeon area, speak to someone, find a new item or ability, then re-enter the dungeon. This sounds tedious, but there three warp points in each region, one in the populated area and two in the dungeon area. Also, the dungeons aren't overly large, so it's truly not an issue to exit and re-enter when needed.

In regards to monster lairs, the game does let you know how many are active in your current area when you pause the game. This sounds minor, but is extremely helpful if you're wanting to be sure you complete everything. Also, in the first half of the game, you will come upon monsters that you can't yet defeat, meaning their lair will remain open until you obtain the means to defeat the enemies. Again, while this could be tedious, the game makes traveling from region to region very easy. You simply navigate to the region you want to go back to on a world map.

So, the question is, how do you defeat those numerous monsters lurking in the dungeons of Soul Blazer? Fortunately, the Blazer is armed with both a sword and magic spells. Your primary attack will be your sword, which will be replaced with a stronger sword as you complete the different regions. If you've ever played Zelda, then you know how the sword works. You push a button and it swings in an arc. I will say that in Soul Blazer, the arc is rather large, even hitting enemies that are partially behind you. The enemies sometimes have sketchy hit boxes so this is certainly welcome. Soul Blazer also includes a strafe mechanic. If you hold one of the shoulder buttons, your character will hold his sword out and continually face in the same direction regardless of the direction you're moving.

As mentioned above, there is also a magic element in Soul Blazer, but it's a bit odd. Your character has a light blue orb constantly circling him. It is this orb that provides your selected magic attack (there are multiple magic attacks to be found in the game). I was never a fan of this mechanic because it means having to line up the orb with whatever enemy you're hoping to attack with magic. Ultimately, this meant that I used one specific, multi-directional spell for the entire game as I found almost all of the others to be unreliable. This is truly a shame because the magic attacks are all rather interesting, but are somewhat neutered by the odd method of attack.

Finally, there are multiple items to be found in Soul Blazer. There's a standard healing item that will revive you if you lose all of your health, though it must be equipped to take effect, which is true of all items. There are story items that are used only in specific settings, such as the dream rod, which lets you enter sleeping characters' dreams to access new areas. There are also items that buff your defense and attack, which are probably the most useful, and are certainly the ones I used most of the time. There are three "Red Hot" items that must be found to advance at the end of the game as they provide a magic spell that is key to fighting the final boss. These items aren't too difficult to find, but do require some backtracking. There is a collection of items that, when all collected, can be traded for an incredibly useful item. These items can be very aggravating to find, given that at least two of them are placed randomly on the map with no indication whatsoever to indicate that they are where they are.

Conclusions:

The thought that kept coming back to me as I played through Soul Blazer was that I had forgotten how little hand holding games in the 16-bit era gave you. For example, the first boss. For this fight, you are in a room that has ledges on the north and south of the room which are connected by three conveyor belts. You begin on the south ledge while the boss is on the north ledge. The two conveyor belts on the outside move north to south while the one in the middle moves south to north. The wrinkle with this fight is that the boss turns to metal if you step foot on his ledge. You can get a hit in if you're quick, but it's tough and you'll almost certainly get hit yourself. I tried this fight a couple of times and lost so thoroughly that I was convinced I had missed an item. Except I couldn't find an item. Finally, out of desperation, I watched a YouTube video to see what I was missing. Turns out that the strafe maneuver I noted above, which you are specifically told about by a person you free in the village, is the key to the battle. You have to face the boss, hold the shoulder button, then advance on the middle conveyor belt, hitting the boss, then retreating to your side before he attacks with his fireballs. This way, you never touch his ledge and he never turns to metal. I think younger me would have figured this out, but current me had completely forgotten the strafe technique. Again, a reminder that this game was not going to go out of its way to correct me or subtly push me forwards.

This guy...

The realization that my 16-bit skills were woefully rusty aside, I did enjoy this game. It's not perfect, and I prefer the other Quintet games I've played (Actraiser and Illusion of Gaia), but it is a solid 16-bit game, and does deserve its reputation as a gem in the Super NES library. The rights to this game are apparently in question (the head of Quintet has apparently vanished as no one knows where he currently resides), so it's not widely available (though we got a remake of Actraiser, which is also a Quintet title, so who knows). This is a shame given that this is a fairly unique game that has elements of both Actraiser and Legend of Zelda in its DNA. In spite of the limitations, I would absolutely recommend this game to anyone that wants to scratch a 16-bit itch or play one of the more interesting games on the Super NES.

2.4.13 Postgame Wrap-up: Ys IV - Mask of the Sun (2025-04-16 15:05)

Being a fan of the Ys series of video games has not always been easy. While the series has seen regular English releases going back to 2005, there was a span of time from 1992 to 2005 that saw no English releases at all. While Ys III: Wanderers From Ys was released on the Super Nintendo, Sega Genesis, and TG-CD in the US, it would be the last entry to see the shores of the west until Ys: The Ark of Napishtim in 2005 (PS2 & PSP).

For some time, I had given up all hope of playing Ys IV and Ys V, both being Japanese exclusives available on the Super Famicom, but now, thanks to clone consoles (I'm still incapable of playing games on a PC, I need a standard controller) and language patches (God bless those people), many games, including these, were finally available to me. I've already written about [1]Ys V and, as this blog posts indicates, recently completed a playthrough of Ys IV. As noted above, much like [2]Soul Blazer, I played this game via a language patch, so there's a possibility that some of the translation may not be direct, but I can't imagine that it affects the game as a whole.

Interesting side note regarding Ys IV. Falcom licensed two versions of Ys IV, with Mask of the Sun being developed by Tonkin House, and an alternate version, subtitled Dawn of Ys, developed by Hudson Soft for the TG-CD. The titles share some characters and plot points, but are ultimately quite different. According to Falcom, Mask of the Sun is the official sequel, with Dawn of Ys taking place in an alternate Ys universe. Mask of the Sun has since been remade as Memories of Celceta and has seen release on multiple consoles.

The Set-up:

You are Adol Christin. Famous adventurer. Known far and wide as Adol the Red due to your ginger locks. Returning from your adventure as depicted in Ys II, you arrive in the town of Minea only to find a message in a bottle. Coming from the land of Celceta, the message pleads for help. Never one to turn down the chance for more adventuring, you board a ship bound for Celceta and set off.

You'll notice that I've stated that this game happens immediately after Ys II instead of Ys III. This is not a typo as, canonically, Ys IV takes place prior to Ys III. I've never been able to determine if this makes a difference, but it is worth pointing out. The Ys timeline is rather confusing. The most recent entry, Ys X: Nordics, actually takes place between Ys II and Ys IV.

The Story:

Upon arriving in the land of Celceta, you are warmly greeted in the town of Kasnan by being locked up. You are quickly released and immediately set out to discover what help is needed. Advancing to and through the town of Komodo, you'll encounter your first dungeon, guarded at the end by a Minotaur. Upon his defeat, the Minotaur reverts to a man, the same man that you were told was missing while in Komodo. It seems a witch is behind his curse, though that's very little information to go on.

Continuing, you'll find your way to the town of Highland, the home of Leeza, who wrote the letter that brought you to Celceta. It is at this point that the full plot of Ys IV truly gets rolling. Soon after leaving Highland, you encounter your antagonist, the winged being known as Eldeel who, up until recently (in the timeframe of the game), was a warm, kind being, but has shown none of that upon your introduction to him and his three generals. Clearly, there is a mystery to unravel here involving the forest of Celceta and Eldeel.

The Ys series has a rich lore, but not all of it exists within the games (and the lore is made more confusing by some of the games having never been released in English). The story of Ys IV is quite intriguing, but to fully appreciate it, you really need to be familiar with Ys I and Ys II, neither of which are extremely easy to find in English (at least, in their original release form as they have been remade for both the DS and PSP). Still, the stories told in the series are well worth the effort needed to seek out the information that is not so readily available.

The Gameplay:

While Ys III took the Ys series in a new direction by being developed as a sidescroller, Ys IV returned the series to its roots, being presented in top down fashion. Also returning in Ys IV is the run and bump attack method the series was known for at the time. If you're unfamiliar with the earlier Ys titles, to attack an enemy you simply run into it, though not straight on. The key to attacking in Ys is to hit an enemy slightly off center, or from the back, if possible, to cause considerable damage. There is no attack button, as simply colliding will cause damage. Unfortunately, this will also work against you if the enemy hits you from the back or side, or if the enemy is too strong, a factor you can't really know until it's almost too late. While there is not an attack button, I do need to note that swords found later in the game come with magic abilities. Pushing X will launch a magic attack. It's not particularly strong, but the attack does push enemies back and can help with crowd control.

Fortunately, you can acquire stronger weapons and armor as you progress through game, while also being able to level up Adol to increase your attack and defense. I learned very quickly that, in Ys IV, if you are having issues with an enemy or a boss, backtrack a bit and grind out a level or two. I was becoming very frustrated with a boss early on and finally swallowed my pride and spent a few minutes gaining one level. Once that was done, I beat the boss on my very next attempt. It's not impossible that I could have succeeded at the lower level, but after trying over a dozen times with no luck, I was no longer enjoying my experience. Leveling up was clearly the answer.

While I like the play style of Ys, it felt less smooth in Ys IV than what I experienced in the original two games (both the TG-CD versions and the DS remake). You're hampered a bit by Adol's inability to move diagonally, but, in my opinion, the primary issue is the speed and AI of enemies. When approaching an enemy in Ys IV, they will correct almost immediately so as to avoid a sideswipe. For me, the most effective method was to move in a circular motion as they got to me (or me to them). This worked, but took away all the fun of lining up with enemies to slice through them. Also, as noted above, enemies can mess up your day as quickly as you can mess up theirs. I died multiple times simply by misjudging the position of a common enemy and having it destroy me in a matter of a few seconds as a result (side note here: if you play this game, save...often).

I've been concentrating on the common enemies of the game to this point, and that's because the bosses in this game are an entirely different ballgame. Each have their own patterns, weak points, and strategies to make you pull your hair out. Okay, maybe that's a bit extreme, but excepting two or three, they are quite tough. Just to give one example, let's examine the boss I was speaking of above, which required double digit attempts. First of all, there are spears coming at you from the sides of the room. They appear for a few seconds before flying horizontally across the room. I figured out the hard way that you couldn't get close to them on the left, but could do so on the right. I still don't understand this. While that's going on, the boss will be moving horizontally at the top of the room. To damage him, you have to bait him to charge at you. While he's preparing to charge (he raises his arms), you can brush against his legs to damage him. After some time though, he morphs into a second form. In this form, he launches three orbs that will randomly arrange at the top of the room before shooting instant death lasers vertically. It's probably best to avoid these because, again, death. The will then fly at you, so that's fun, though not as deadly. He will also launch fireballs at you. Oh, and remember those spears? They're still flying at you from the sides of the room. Frankly, I nearly broke my controller. Again though, one additional level and the difficulty dropped quite a bit.

As for the non-combat portions of the game, you will journey throughout Celceta, visiting towns, buying supplies (there is a healing item, but you can hold only one at a time), and speaking with the citizens. Conversing with the citizens is extremely important as that's the only way to determine where you need to journey next and what your goals are. This is very standard for a RPG, but Ys IV handles it better than some titles I've played. Also, if you are familiar with the story and characters of Ys II, you'll notice some familiar areas and faces, which is a nice touch. I also want to note that Ys IV includes the ability to heal Adol by standing still, one of the first series to include such a mechanic. This doesn't work in caves/dungeons, but is great inclusion as it negates the need to constantly return to a town to heal.

A couple of additional notes in regards to the presentation of Ys IV. This is a very good looking game. The 16-bit sprites hold up well, and the larger, detailed bosses are very appealing (when they're not stomping you into dust). The areas you visit are varied and never redundant. The visuals don't compare with those on the TG-CD, but for a 16-bit title, they are quite well done. Also, the music is fantastic. The Ys series is known for having great musical tracks, and Ys IV does not disappoint in this department.

Conclusions:

I love the Ys series. I've played almost every title and have enjoyed them. While that is true of Ys IV, it did leave me the most divided of any Ys game I've played. When things are going well in the game, it's a pure joy to play. Gliding through enemies feels almost rhythmic once you get into the groove of it. That said, I feel like all too often your game can be taken completely off the rails due to one unlucky approach by an enemy. Towards the end of the game, I was taken out by an enemy that I was having no trouble defeating on a regular basis, but it caught me at the right angle and, in about three seconds, my game was over. This was not an isolated incident and had nothing to do with my level or equipment, it's just the price of the game design.

Ultimately, I did enjoy this game more than I was frustrated by it, but I can also see why anyone playing it would have the opposite experience. As I noted above, this game has been remade as Ys: Memories of Celceta (available on both the PS Vita and PS4). Having played both, I would have to suggest playing Memories of Celceta over Mask of the Sun, but if you are searching for a game to scratch a 16-bit itch, you can do far worse than playing Ys IV: Mask of the Sun.

2.4.14 My employment history part 3 (2025-04-19 16:54)

In 2020, I joined Fun.com in North Mankato in a chaotic October. I was pushing the cart shooter and passing 1000 people in the warehouse. I picked halloween costumes in aisles for a month. Then I put the halloween costumes on the conveyor belt to go to the packaging cubical. The packaging cubical had a PC with a touch screen and I would pick boxes from the shelf and pack the halloween costumes according to box size. Of course the box size was wrong and the computer and Windows XP scanner in the warehouse gave errors. I was going to the shipping lead and of course it was timed. That was under Covid in 2020 when I had Angela Dorling as Deed. I was in returns and they found I had brain damage and let me go under training as packing halloween costumes in little bags. I almost thought I had the halloween costumes in the bag, but they wanted it perfect for $10 hour every time with the security camera on my first day with no job coach or ANYONE going to bat for me. Nobody giving a fuck if I failed!

So in 2022, Rebecca from MRCI helped me find jobs. Taylor Corporation didn't want me, and I interviewed because I asked what the atmosphere was like. Taylor corp of course had indeed reviews of outdated equipment, managers playing musical chairs, and the CEO would not stay with the times in payment and equipment or labor policies (the employee bill of rights was obsoleted here). So they didn't like what the atmosphere questions, because even though I have a needs trust and don't need to work at all. The manager wanting high IQ geniuses, the insanity of asking "what's the atmosphere" like was frowned upon or having quirks for actually being qualified for MRCI. So for some reason, Taylor corporation picked someone else (they take grants, but not my grant)

Then I because I had a Deed grant that didn't expire, we went to the Bolton and Mink in 2022. Even though artificial intelligence was taking over by that point, and I had Flickr of my photos, and MRCI with me, they didn't want me for their low hitcounter youtube channel via being a cameraman. SoMN podcast on youtube. They had a couch, and bachelor level employees interviewing Mankato entrepreneurs on stories of their success. The microphone was in a padded room, and they had a PC workstation for Unity game engine for making advertisements or construction presentations. They asked me if I worked in Unity, and I said I created Unreal Tournament 99 and Unreal Tournament 2004 levels in Unreal Engine Editor that came with the game or Minecraft levels. And I showed my 2 million hitcounter flickr and my 4 million hitcounter blogspot blog.

In 2023, I started the track program. I went to walgreens in downtown Mankato. It was a 1950s Walgreen that was near all the crime between the store and Cub Foods I found expired food. So I had to swap out the expired food, stock toilet paper, stock food, stock toys stock candy like 2003 at holiday gas (circle k) in Roberts, Wisconsin. I replaced the shipping wheel carts.

In 2023, I was MSU when students learn about Marx and Lenin . So I was the cafeteria internship. And the students spoke of Marx and Lenin in the cafeteria saying there is no future for them whispering. Of course the security camera was active so I didn't say anything. I was in a city with 0 friends with no brothers and sisters so of course snapchat is banned, because the school is a public sphere under Jurgen Habermas and all the instructors use devil horns from Tune Town vinyl, because Tune Town sells death metal. It was bizarre like that and devil horns and pentagrams show up on Instagram, flickr and Sibley Park. Of course there is rumors that 32 degree free masons that had a lounge in Mankato were worshipping Satan and witchcraft. Then the Satanic temple wanted to build a temple in Belle Plaine, Minnesota. There was a Satanic monument in Belle Plaine.

In 2023, I was at Radio Mankato with Jeff Lang for 3 months where I take pictures. I was at LSI stadium for United Way and Leep amateur baseball games. I was also at Music on the Lawn and Alive After 5. Of course they didn't want to be my employer. My discogs that I had since 2011 and I spent several 50 hours on for free and they didn't want it.

Then I worked for free at the museum. Shelly brought up "The Way We Were" movie, because MSU is into Satan and Marxism-Leninism. DFL being the Marxist-Leninist party of course using illegal aliens as the new dictatorship of the proletariat in my opinion. Then I get kicked out 9 months later after adding dead people to obituaries and already dead 4H children. 100 % dead people entries for free. 3000 Excel 365 lines.

Then in 2025 no jobs. I applied for jobs, but nobody picks me. I was watching canadian prepper and full spectrum survival and j bravo and speaking of California turning marxism-leninism and World War 3, because our country is fucked all the way pass recognition. .

2.4.15 Trump's Counterrevolution Strategy: Flood the Zone, Drain the Swamp (2025-04-21 12:01)

Hello, this is Victor Davis Hanson for The Daily Signal. We're about—getting close to 90 days and even coming up close, in a week, 10 days, to the first 100 days of the Trump administration and this counterrevolution that he's waging.

I thought it might be wise just to see where we are as far as the political landscape and the dynamics of the progress of this counterrevolution. What is [1]President Donald Trump trying to do? I think I would sum it up as flooding the zone. And that is, he's going to try to propose and enact so many radical corrections or revolutions or reforms or recalibrations that his opposition doesn't know where to start.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [2]Donate now

So, abroad, he is looking at the Iran deal and he got rid of it. He put sanctions. He's got maximum pressure. And now, the Iranian economy is about defunct. And they want to negotiate about this nuclear weapon. I don't think they're going to negotiate it away, but we'll see.

And then, he's dealing with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy and [3]Russian President Vladimir Putin and trying to get a ceasefire. He's basically dealt with the Houthis.

On the domestic front, there is no more illegal immigration. He's basically stopped it. Now, the task is what to do with the 12 million illegal aliens that came under [4]former President Joe Biden. And what do you do with the 20 million-plus, maybe 30 million that were here already illegally but for a longer period of time?

At the same time, he's had a blanket mandate that in every Cabinet they will eliminate diversity, equity, inclusion and, by association, things like transsexual, biological males competing in women's sports.

Women—lowering the physical standards so women could compete and pass these very rigorous endurance physical tests so that they would be in combat units on an equal level. No problem that they can't. But they have to have the same physical requirements as men.

I could go on, but you see what he is doing. He's doing so many radical corrections in a way that a Romney or a McCain or the Bushes, even [5]Ronald Reagan would not have dreamed of that he feels the opposition will say, "Well, what do we do? Should we reply here? Do we put our interest here? Should we do this?"

And so, what is the strategy that [6]the Left is using? They're flooding the zone, too. But they're doing it not with counterproposals. They don't say, "This is what's wrong with closing the border and we wanna reopen it. This is what's wrong with the Houthis policy. This is what's wrong with the trade deficit. This is what's wrong"—no specific proposal.

They're just flooding it with hysteria, the Spartacus talk, late-night comedy trashing him, another person arrested saying that he wants to kill Donald Trump, keying Teslas, firebombing Tesla agencies, outrageous things from Hollywood stars, videos from Congress. All of a sudden—we didn't even know who Rep. Jasmine Crockett was. She's filled that void.

But what I'm saying is they want to be so rambunctious, so crazy, so 360 degrees unhinged that they'll create an image or a malu—where everybody wants to get almost in a fetal position: "Please, please make it all go away. I don't know what Trump is doing but it's so disturbing. Everybody's so angry." That is their strategy.

Now, what is Trump's counterstrategy? His counterstrategy is to actually get people on the other side of the aisle in Congress or in the country at large or in the popular culture and try to at least be friendly to them so then they can say, "I don't agree with Trump but what he's doing might be needed."

So, we have Bill Maher going to Mar-a-Lago and actually saying very nice things about Donald Trump.

On the one hand, we have Health and Human Services Secretary Robert F. Kennedy Jr. fighting with a bulwark of the Left at one time, fighting with left-wing people who were calling him all sorts of names and saying that he is illiberal.

We had Gretchen Whitmer, the governor of Michigan. She was in the White House. Can you believe it? She was so embarrassed about a photo-op. She had to almost cover her face.

But you can see what Trump is doing. He's trying to get people from all sides of the Democratic and liberal progressive movement and not compromise them, but get in the picture, so then the Left will say, "Well, how can we appeal to the public and get them all angry and frenzy and hysterical when some of our major celebrities, our political figures are in Mar-a-Lago?"

Who's gonna win? We'll see.

2.4.16 Will Harvard Go Full Hillsdale? (2025-04-21 12:03)

[1]Harvard University has rejected various demands of a presidential commission on anti-semitism.

The task force wants to persuade Harvard to ensure Jewish students [2]on its campus are no longer harassed, or else lose its federal funding.

[3]Harvard retorts that it won't be bullied by Washington.

Among its other requirements, [4]the Trump administration also warned Harvard to cease using race as a criterion in its admissions, hiring, and promotion, contrary to law.

And it also directed the campus to ban the use of masks that, in the [5]post-COVID-19 era of protests, have emboldened violent demonstrators with anonymity.

The administration's order to stop race-based bias was in accordance with civil rights statutes, and a recent Supreme Court decision specifically banning affirmative action at Harvard and elsewhere.

No matter. Harvard claimed that the Trump administration infringed upon its First Amendment rights.

So, it has temporarily rejected the administration's orders. At least for now, Harvard has lost its annual $2.2 billion grant of federal funds.

Former President Barack Obama, among others, lauded Harvard's rejection of the demands of the administration's antisemitism task force. He claimed the Trump administration's efforts were ham-handed.

But what academic freedom are Harvard and Obama talking about? The freedom to discriminate and segregate by race in hiring, admissions, dorms, and graduations?

The freedom of 500 Harvard students to crash the classes of others, shut down traffic, and harass students on the basis of their religion or views on Israel?

Despite all of Harvard's platitudes, its classrooms are still being disrupted. Jewish students remain fearful.

And what would Obama say if, for example, African-American students at Harvard were harassed on campus by masked disrupters?

Or black studies classes were crashed by students wearing scarves over their faces as they vented their hatred? Would he press the Trump administration to force Harvard to honor federal civil rights protections?

Remember, Harvard is a private university with a largely untaxed endowment of over $50.2 billion. Yet again, it still receives some $2.2 billion—now suspended—in federal funds.

The administration task force is not forcing Harvard to run its university according to its version of federal dictates.

Instead, the Trump commission is simply warning Harvard that if, in addition to its huge sources of private funding, it still wishes continuance of some $2.2 billion in public money from the federal government, then it must comply with existing laws and executive orders.

Does Harvard remember the embarrassing testimony of its former president, Claudine Gay?

She failed to assure a congressional committee that Harvard had taken action against openly hostile antisemitic student protestors during its growing protest movements.

Does Harvard understand why the Supreme Court ruled it had violated the "Equal Protection Clause" of the Fourteenth Amendment and was culpable of prejudice against Asian-Americans?

Does Harvard have any clue why it has lost some $150 million per annum of donor giving?

Does Harvard realize that no one believes its pretenses anymore that it “cannot and will not tolerate disruption” of classes—given that it still happens all the time at its various professional schools and undergraduate courses?

Perhaps Harvard should follow the strategy of independent Hillsdale College, which long ago wished to be free of federal dictates.

So, unlike Harvard, the college put its proverbial money where its mouth was and agreed unilaterally to give up all federal funding to be free of Washington’s octopus tentacles.

Yet, there is one critical distinction between Hillsdale and Harvard.

Hillsdale does not take federal money, period—whether doled out by either a Democratic or Republican administration.

It sincerely believes that too often the federal government itself does not follow the Constitution, impinges on freedom, and forces colleges to violate equality under the law when discriminating by race and gender.

Harvard has no such principles.

Its beef is not with the notion of an overweening federal government, eager to coerce private colleges to follow particular protocols.

Instead, it is at war only with the Trump commission or, in theory, any other similar conservative administration that might wish it to adhere to the law as a condition of being federally funded.

Otherwise, Harvard has no problem with an activist federal government, as long as it is a liberal one forcing all sorts of Title IX or diversity, equity, and inclusion initiatives on private and Christian colleges that apparently lost their autonomy by accepting federal money. It has said nothing when state and federal governments in the past gratuitously hounded Hillsdale. So, Harvard loudly can set itself free by permanently pursuing its agenda on its own $50 billion, in the same manner Hillsdale does quietly with its $1 billion—without the taxpayer's dime, whether Democratic or Republican.

2.4.17 Maine Gov. Janet Mills Doesn't Know It Yet, But She's an 'Insurrectionist' (2025-04-21 12:06)

I want to wade into a very controversial topic. I want to be very careful. It's the issue of whether biological men [1]who have transitioned to the female gender should compete in female sports. And what is the reaction of those who say they should versus the federal government, under President Donald Trump's executive orders, that said it's not fair to women?

And the locust classicists or the state is the—the best example is now Janet Mills, the governor of Maine, in the White House, said she was going to resist that.

Donald Trump issued an executive order saying that all sports programs in the public sphere have to make sure that only biological women that remain women compete in women's sports. And the same as for male sports. And she's resisting. As is the California Legislature and, apparently, [2]Gov. Gavin Newsom, and a lot of blue states.

There's two fundamental issues we should all watch here.

No. 1: Do states have the right to resist the federal government? Donald Trump says they don't. And he has threatened to cut off massive federal funds to Maine—which would be devastating to the economy—to force her to comply with federal law.

Note that when [3]former President Joe Biden issued executive orders, if people on the right opposed them, they went to court. If they lost, they followed it.

But this is a neo-Confederate idea that goes back to 1832 with South Carolina and tariffs. And in the 1850s, in the South, when the Antebellum South said, “We’re not gonna listen to the federal government,” the federal government said, “Then you’re in insurrectionary mode.” And we know what happened.

We have 600 sanctuary jurisdictions in the United States on matters of illegal immigration, where they say, “We’re not gonna turn over illegal aliens that have committed a crime and are held. We’re not gonna turn them over to the Immigration and Customs Enforcement.” The same issue now with trans.

Janet Mills may not know it, but she’s an insurrectionist. She’s a neo-Confederate. She is taking states’ rights to the extreme. Rather than saying, “I oppose the federal government. I will go to court to stop you. But if I lose, I will comply because the states are subordinate to the federal”—she’s not doing that. She’s right in the spirit of the old Confederacy.

The other issue, very importantly, is the trans issue itself. And I wanna be very careful. Transsexualism, transgenderism is an ancient phenomenon. It appears throughout the medieval world. It appears in late antiquity. It appears in early antiquity.

I can cite you chapter and verse from the poems of Catullus to the novels of “Satyricon,” of Petronius, “The Satyricon,” of men who dress up like women. Both as transvestites who are still, I guess you’d say heterosexual, but they have a fetish to wear women’s clothes or who really want to be women. In the case of a poem or two, they castrate themselves. It’s found in ancient history.

And statistically, if you go back before this controversy happened, it was a very small number of the population. About less than 1 % identified as transgendered or transsexual. Then it became, in the last decade, the next civil rights frontier. And all of a sudden, we had universities where students were polled at 10 % or 20 % or 30 %, thought they might want to transition. It became almost a cult following.

But in the process, we did something that no one ever imagined. People on the left side of the spectrum, the liberal side, had always argued that under Title IX women should get the same amount of support for their sports as men do, even if they didn’t make the same amount of revenue in football, basketball, etc. And America came over to that position—slow, but maybe begrudgingly, but they accepted it. And they promoted women’s sports. And it was successful.

And now biological males with a muscular skeletal framework have enormous physical advantages over females. We all know that. And they are systematically undermining [4]women’s sports as a civil rights issue—and the Left doesn’t know what to do because it’s also an anti-feminist, anti-woman issue.

But there’s another thing to think about. There are transitioned or transsexual males. These are people born female with all the characteristics—muscular, skeletal—of females, of women, and they then either have operations or hormone treatments or both and become men. And guess what? When they compete in sports, they don’t do very well.

In other words, transgendered men cannot beat biological men, which brings up the issue: If you’re transgendered, isn’t there still a difference biologically, hormonally from people born into that sex? In other words, if women transition to males and they cannot beat biological males, why do we keep insisting that males who transition as women are no different than biological women when, in fact, we know they are, they know they are?

And [5]Donald Trump has tried to address this issue both in purposes of honesty and fairness and equality for women. And these state governors and legislatures that are resisting him are really breaking the federal law, but more importantly, they’re echoing and they’re resonating the old Confederacy.

2.4.18 Europe, You Can’t Sit on the Sidelines Anymore (2025-04-21 12:08)

I’d like to talk today about the role of China, the United States, and the European Union, or just [1]Europe in general, in the context of these tariffs and the so-called trade wars.

Right now, [2]President Donald Trump has given a 90-day reprieve from high tariffs. I think that 10 % tariffs are still in existence. And they are negotiating with a number of European countries and particularly, Asian dynamic economies, such as South Korea, Taiwan, and Japan. In addition to that, they are targeting China with tit-for-tat tariffs. And we are maybe on the brink—nobody wants it, but we might be on the brink of a trade war, which we've addressed in earlier videos.

But here's my point. What is the attitude of Europe? Roughly, China has a $1 trillion deficit with the world. We have about a $1 trillion deficit in trade with the world. But here's the ratios. About a third of our deficit is with China, which makes up a third of their surplus. In addition to that, Europe makes up about a third of their surplus.

So, China has called on Europe to join forces with it to prevent all of the retaliatory tariffs that the United States has threatened Europe, which has a $200 billion surplus with us, and China, which has a nearly high $300 billion, maybe even $400 billion, who knows?

It's kind of crazy, isn't it, that these illiberal apparatchiks [3]in China would think that a Western democracy would want to join them against the United States?

I don't think that's gonna happen. But the European Left is very angry at the Trump administration.

So, Choice One might be, "Well, we don't like the Chinese and we are an ally of the Americans, who subsidize our defense, but we detest the Trump administration. So maybe, (wink and nod) we'll either be quiet or hope China wins that trade war and the United States, under the Trump administration, backs off all tariffs."

That would be a big mistake given their vulnerabilities they have with the United States vis-a-vis security.

The second attitude might be the Europeans will just say, "We'll lay low. We won't say much at all. We'll kind of drag out our tariff negotiations with the Trump administration. And we'll let the Chinese and the United States battle it out. And if Trump should win and he lowers the amount of trade with China, maybe that will be an opening for us to replace China as the United States chief importer."

That is something that I don't think will happen.

The third scenario is what I would suggest for the Europeans. They should say the following: "Despite our disagreements with the Trump administration, the United States is an ally. And we know that we have been as victimized by Chinese mercantilism, high tariffs, cheating on patents, copyrights, dumping, financial money manipulation—all the things the United States complains about, we do too. In fact, we as Europeans in a whole have about the same deficit with China as the United States does. So, we are kindred spirits. So, what we will do is, even though we have disagreements on our surplus with the United States and their efforts to reduce it, we will ally with the United States."

And that would represent about two-thirds of China's total [4]trade action or monetary value. And especially, if Japan and our allies in [5]South Korea, Taiwan would join, then China would find out that about 85 % of its trade is in a block. That is, they are united. And they have common complaints against China. And China would not be able to say to the United States, "We're going to cut deals with Vietnam and Japan and Taiwan and South Korea and the EU and leave you out in the cold."

Instead, the Europeans and, to a lesser extent, the Asian powerhouses would join the United States and say, "You know what? We've been quiet. We're afraid of China. They're bullies. But now that you've stood up, we're embolden ourselves to air the same complaints as you are and hope that you win. And maybe a byproduct of reduced trade with China from the United States will open a door. So, even though we might have to lower our tariffs, there will be more opportunity in the American market with a less prominent Chinese trade profile that we can then be welcomed in as a kindred ally."

So, Europe has two or three choices in this proposed Chinese-American trade standoff. Nobody wants a trade war with anybody. No one wants it with China. But this is long overdue. And Europe has to decide what course they're going to take. And for everybody's sake, let's hope they choose wisely.

2.4.19 Harvard's Radicalization: Lower Standards, Middle Eastern Cash, Politicization (2025-04-21 12:10)

I wanna talk about a little esoteric topic very quickly: law schools. Specifically, our so-called elite law schools: Harvard Law School, Yale Law School, Stanford Law School, UC Berkeley's law school.

I know you think, "Well, who cares?" Well, we should care.

If we look at all of these district judges that are issuing injunctions against [1]President Donald Trump or we look at many of the most powerful people in the Obama or Biden [2]Justice Department, or even anybody's DOJ, or if we look at these PACs and political organizations that are trying to influence public opinion and look at the lawyers, we find these law schools—Yale, Harvard, Stanford, Duke—mentioned all the time.

And the problem with them is that they're no longer empirical. About 95 % of their faculties are Democratic or left-wing. And more importantly, they have started to do things they didn't do in the past. They've lowered their admission standards and they have become politicized and they've been recipients of large amounts of foreign cash.

Let me give you a few examples.

As we speak right now, [3]Harvard University got together a group of its radical law students for a complete weekend-long session. You know what they were doing? They were trying to collectively go into Wikipedia and warp the descriptions of major law firms that had said to Harvard, "If you continue the antisemitism that is endemic on campus in general and at the law school in particular, we may not wanna hire you."

So, they were retaliatory. And they were going through their entire caseload to try to damage them in the public eye on Wikipedia.

At the same time this was happening, though, Harvard was always traditionally ranked, along with Yale or Stanford, No. 1, No. 2. It dropped out of the top five. It dropped out of the top five by the U.S. News & World Report rankings, which kind of polls admissions officers and tries to get the general opinion of the relative merit of each of these law schools.

And it reflects something else that was going on at Harvard. Harvard has a traditional math class—it's very difficult—that most undergraduates are supposed to take, but they couldn't pass it. So now, Harvard, because they have changed their admissions—and remember for three or four years, like other campuses, they didn't rate comparative GPAs or really require the SAT—they have to have remedial math at Harvard.

And what am I getting at? These law schools then, by changing their curricula to [4]diversity, equity, and inclusion and changing their admissions policy, where they were not looking at the LSAT or grade point averages in the way they used to say was important, and more importantly, in garnering huge amounts of money from the Middle East, Qatar in particular—if you go back to any news account from 2010 to 2020, it's all about Qatar and [5]Middle East money pouring into places like Harvard Law School.

So, what am I getting at? They created people who, under their own—people, students—under their own requirements a decade or two earlier wouldn't have qualified. They changed their curriculum and they became politicized. And especially, they reflected the interest of radical groups in the Middle East. And the result is law firms, when they see the recent graduates, they get disappointed.

I want to just end with Stanford Law School. They follow that same trajectory. And in 2022, only about 84 % passed the bar on the first try. Five other law schools—this was when Stanford was rated No. 2 in the country. The University of Southern California had a much higher rate.

Stanford went into full panic. They said, “Oh my gosh, the post-George Floyd admissions, the change in the curriculum, our students are not passing. We've got over 15 % flunk the bar from Stanford.” And by the way, the California bar had lowered its standards and it had itself become woke.

So, what did Stanford do? Well, very quietly, they began to readjust their admissions policy. They began to get more, not a lot, but two, three, four conservative or at least middle-of-the-road law professors and they began to crack down on radical student activism. This year, 95 % passed. Just, three years, two-and-a-half years later in 2024.

So, what am I getting at? The law schools are very important. They're very politicized. And they went in a politicized, ideological direction rather than empiricism and traditional law curriculum. And the result is that law firms and agencies look at these law graduates and they're not impressed.

And that's why, for example, Vanderbilt is starting to surge up to 14. Cornell is going down to 18. And we're watching a very interesting transformation.

Wouldn't it be good that we just hire people not on their blue-chip brand—Harvard, Stanford, Yale—but actual quality of their graduates to the degree they pass bars on the first try, they are impressive in interviews?

And in that case, if we were to do that, I think these Ivy League and prestigious schools would have to adjust very, very quickly and stop the politicalization, the foreign money coming in, and especially, the antisemitism.

2.4.20 My love life? (2025-04-24 22:42)

p { margin-bottom: 0.1in; line-height: 115 %; background: transparent

What's my love life. I have my parents and my cousin penny for 40 years. Then I have my Uncle jim, his daughter sherry. I never had a girlfriend. I talk to them over the phone for 10 years. They try to ban me on okcupid and bumble nearly banned me and have banned me on plentyoffish 14 years ago. For 30 years I would do every thing for my parents, wash dishes, put plates and cups in the dishwasher, drive vehicle, pick up their groceries, fix their computer problems, bring the garage down to the drive way, wash clothes. My cousin penny calls mondays for 15 minutes. I guess I had family reunions in the 1980s and 1990s. My mom would take a lot of pictures.

2.4.21 consoles better than gaming pc (2025-04-27 07:12)

Right you have to look at Xbox. Most my whole library is back compatible going back decades. But if not, even the digital games are perfectly playable, offline, and unplugged on the older machines.

Are there chances your console will break? Sure, but you just buy a used one. I'm sure you can play old games here on Steam as well, but you have to upgrade your OS every time they change it, things break on PCs as well.

Graphics cards can be very expensive, you need your Anti Virus, crashes, hacks, controller don't work, "post your specs", post your game log to see what happened, etc.

These may be issues people who pay a lot of money are willing to take on, for just some minor performance issue many or even most do not care about.

But i just want to play my games, and i think that's where most people are.

And Flame, i shopped those mini pc's here, and all, of all who responded, said they're useless. So, was sorry to hear that.

I think today's day and age, is all about consoles. And if you want your Steam, you have GeForce Now and other stream services can give you access, even on an old Xbox One. In short, PCs are outdated.

Well altogether the console market is much larger than the PC market. When you compound, Nintendo, Xbox, and PS. At least to my knowledge, though someone can point out different. I think it's just the ease and costs.

Personally, i like PC if only because there are games on PC, we do not get on consoles. But that's rapidly changing.

Another question i have zero knowledge, is what "AI" may do in regards to PC gaming in the future.

But at a time as was said by another (and i think, correct) where say Xbox is going to say a Console/PC hybrid, and the rise of cloud and stream gaming, even from a Phone or handheld, it's sincerely questionable for me even the need for a PC for games, and many other matters.

2.4.22 New Polling Data Delivers Another Gut Punch to the Dems (2025-04-27 07:13)

New polling data is confirming what we've known about the Democratic Party since 2020: they're insular, exclusionary, snobby, and don't care about other people who aren't college-educated and wealthy. The Democratic Party agenda is niche, regional, and elitist. The party once had working people in their ranks—Barack Obama did well with white working-class voters—but the hordes of the far-left, who are mostly overeducated rich white kids, took over the messaging in 2020, and things unspooled.

Bill Maher, who always torched conservatives on his show, now is firing more inside the ship since his side has become abjectly insane. There is a suffocating condescension with Democrats where if you don't meet their criterion, you're less than, unworthy of being heard, and, even more ghoulish, should suffer due to what they perceive to be your bad decisions. Not everyone can go to college, guys. I don't know what ivory city you grew up in, but it's not an option for most Americans. As we've noted, the Democrats would yell at a homeless person for not owning a house—that's how detached they've become.

2.4.23 Trump Signals Big Change on China Tariffs (2025-04-27 07:14)

President Donald Trump is reportedly considering de-escalating Washington's trade war with China after slapping hefty tariffs on Chinese imports.

Shortly after Trump announced the tariffs, Beijing responded by issuing duties on American products and vowed that it would not back down as the president seeks a better trade deal.

Sources told [1]The Wall Street Journal that the president might seek to ease up on tariffs to bring China to the negotiating table.

The Trump administration is considering slashing its steep tariffs on Chinese imports—in some cases by more than half—in a bid to de-escalate tensions with Beijing that have roiled global trade and investment, according to people familiar with the matter.

President Trump hasn't made a final determination, the people said, adding that the discussions remain fluid and several options are on the table.

One senior White House official said the China tariffs were likely to come down to between roughly 50 % and 65 %. The administration is also considering a tiered approach similar to the one proposed by the House committee on China late last year: 35 % levies for items the U.S. deems not a threat to national security, and at least 100 % for items deemed as strategic to America's interest, some of the people said. The bill proposed phasing in those levies over five years.

"President Trump has been clear: China needs to make a deal with the United States of America. When decisions on tariffs are made, they will come directly from the President. Anything else is just pure speculation," White House spokesman Kush Desai said.

Trump said Tuesday he was willing to cut tariffs on Chinese goods, saying the 145 % tariffs he imposed on China during his second term would come down. "But it won't be zero," he said. The development was welcome news to investors who had been spooked by the White House's aggressive moves in recent weeks.

The Chinese government indicated it is willing to engage in trade discussions with the White House, but stressed that it would not bow to President Trump's threats. Chinese officials view this development as an indication that Trump might fold.

Trump on Wednesday told reporters that the tariffs on Chinese products will "come down substantially, but it won't be zero. It used to be zero."

We were just destroyed. China was taking us for a ride, and it's not going to happen. We're going to be very good to China. I have a great relationship with President Xi, but they would make billions and billions and billions of dollars a year, and they would build their military out of the United States and what they made, so that won't happen. But they're going to do very well, and I think they're going to be happy, and I think we're going to live together very happily and ideally work together. I think it's going to work out very well.

Trump: 145 % is very high, and it won't be that high. It will come down substantially. It will not be zero. It used to be zero. [2]pic.twitter.com/2MOhrkXrkH— Acyn (@Acyn) [3]April 22, 2025

China's Foreign Ministry stated that Washington should "stop its threats and coercion, and engage with China on the basis of equality, mutual respect and reciprocity" if they want a better trade deal, according to [4]CNN.

"Claiming it wants to reach an agreement with China while constantly applying maximum pressure is not the right way to engage with China — and it simply won't work," Guo Jiakun, a spokesperson for the ministry, said during a press conference.

CNN also noted that China views Trump's new tone as a sign that he is backing down.

Trump's shift in tone also went viral on the Chinese internet. On Wednesday, the hashtag "Trump chickened out" was trending as a top topic on social media platform Weibo, racking up more than 150 million views.

The world's two largest economies have slapped record tariffs on each other in a swiftly escalating fight that has roiled global markets, disrupted supply chains and stoked recession fears.

So far, China has struck a defiant tone and refused to back down. Instead, it retaliated by raising tariffs on US goods to 125 %, adding more American companies on its export control list and unreliable entity list, and restricting the export of critical minerals used in everything from iPhones to missile systems.

Beijing also moved to exert pain on key US industries, restricting the number of Hollywood movies shown in the country and returning at least two Boeing jets intended for use by Chinese airlines to the US.

Of course, this could have been Trump's plan all along. He is known for opening up with a more radical version of what he is demanding, then negotiating down to something that more closely resembles his ultimate objective.

The president will have to navigate possible trade negotiations with China in a way that allows its government to save face while also ensuring better conditions for the US. It is not certain how long this back-and-forth will persist until both governments reach a deal.

2.4.24 Brutal: Elizabeth Warren Has No Idea What to Say When Confronted With Her Lies About Biden's Decline (2025-04-27 07:16)

This clip is delicious because the question obviously caught Warren off guard. She's no stranger to [1]lying shamelessly, including about her own [2]biography and racial identity, so there's something beautiful about watching a practiced liar stammering and struggling like this. She's drowning, and she knows it (her laugh/gulp at the 15 second mark is the exact moment she realized this particular back and forth wasn't going to go well), so she attempts a feeble pivot, which only highlights her evasion of the actual, simple question. Kudos to the interviewer for asking it — his c'mon facial expression when she briefly tries to pretend she didn't notice any decline in Joe Biden — and for repeatedly following up. She has nothing. She tries to stifle giggles about how totally implausible her dishonest justifications and spin are, plainly recognizing how implausible and dishonest they are. It's written all over her face.

But while it's objectively funny to watch her flail here, sure, it's actually quite frightening how virtually an entire political party and much of the "news" media emphatically pretended that an increasingly senile sitting president wasn't merely perfectly fine! sharp as a tack! hard to keep up with! etc. for many months, but also insisted he was fully capable of serving another four-year term. They declared this to be the case, [3]attacking and smearing anyone who noticed with their own eyes and ears that it wasn't true, until they couldn't keep the lie afloat any longer — a moment that arrived [4]shortly after 9 pm ET on June 27, 2024. More of the people who participated in that dangerous lie should be challenged like this. The trouble is that many of the people who are in positions to pose such questions also participated in the dangerous lie, for the exact same reasons. Nevertheless, behold this amazing exchange:

If you watch a clip today, let it be this one of Elizabeth Warren stumbling all over herself as she's repeatedly pressed on why she lied about Joe Biden's senility. [5]pic.twitter.com/pyMjQjAaUo— Bonchie (@bonchieredstate) [6]April 22, 2025

As a [7]Republican aide quipped in response, "She thinks the question is, 'What are we going to do now?' but actually the question is, 'What should the ramifications be for you, senator, given you lied to the American people and covered for a cognitively impaired patient who held the most powerful office in the world?'" Indeed, although I'll add a small quibble: She doesn't really think the question is, "What are we going to do now?" She wishes that were the question, so she'd no longer be forced to embarrassingly grapple with the lies she told, exclusively for partisan reasons. The phony, preening "Country Over Party" crowd was entirely willing to deny reality — and maintain a dangerous status quo in which the President of the United States was sliding into an incapacitated figurehead role — in order to maintain their grip on power, and prevent their opponents from attaining it. The resulting cover-up (which I'm absolutely convinced would have continued if the June debate had never happened, or gone even slightly less disastrously) is one of the greatest scandals in presidential history.

If Warren would like a reality check answer to her preferred "what do we do now?" deflection, it would be, never trust Elizabeth Warren or her ilk again on any matter of importance. We are now being treated to $30-a-pop books describing just [8]how bad things were getting behind the scenes, further confirming what many of us could plainly see for ourselves in real time — observations that generated angry attacks and deceitful spin from the partisan deniers and their media handmaidens. I'll leave you with a figure within the Democratic echo chamber pronouncing himself aghast and so very angry about what he's suddenly "discovering," months and years after the obvious and troubling truth had been repeatedly and publicly demonstrated for the world to see. Sure, dude:

2.4.25 President Trump Just Exploded on Zelensky (2025-04-27 07:17)

President Donald Trump on Wednesday slammed Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky after he rejected a US proposal that would recognize Russian control of Crimea as part of a peace deal.

This comes as Washington continues its efforts to hammer out a peace agreement between Moscow and Kyiv. During a press conference, Zelensky said, “Ukraine will not legally recognize the occupation of Crimea” and that “There’s nothing to talk about here. This is against our constitution.”

[1]The Wall Street Journal noted that Zelensky’s statements could throw the Trump administration’s peace plans into disarray.

Zelensky’s dismissal upends Trump’s latest gambit to halt the war in Ukraine—now in its fourth year—and casts new uncertainty on the future of the relationship between Kyiv and Washington, which Trump has made conditional on a quick deal.

American officials had presented a series of ideas for ending the war, including the Crimea proposal, to Ukrainian officials last week and expected an answer on Wednesday at a summit in London, where Ukrainian, U.S. and European officials will gather.

Zelensky said Russia should agree to a cease-fire before further talks to demonstrate “serious steps, and not childishness.” He said that Ukrainian officials meeting with U.S. and European officials in London would have a mandate to discuss a partial or full cease-fire, which Ukraine agreed to last month but Moscow rejected.

In a post on Truth Social, President Trump went on a long tirade against Zelensky, arguing that Zelensky’s perspective “is very harmful to the Peace Negotiations with Russia in that Crimea was lost years ago under the auspices of President Barack Hussein Obama, and is not even a point of discussion.”

Trump continued, “Nobody is asking Zelenskyy to recognize Crimea as Russian Territory but, if he wants Crimea, why didn’t they fight for it eleven years ago when it was handed over to Russia without a shot being fired?”

The president said, “It’s inflammatory statements like Zelenskyy’s that makes it so difficult to settle this War. He has nothing to boast about! The situation for Ukraine is dire – He can have Peace or, he can fight for another three years before losing the whole Country.”

I have nothing to do with Russia, but have much to do with wanting to save, on average, five thousand Russian and Ukrainian soldiers a week, who are dying for no reason whatsoever. The statement made by Zelenskyy today will do nothing but prolong the “killing field,” and nobody wants that! We are very close to a Deal, but the man with “no cards to play” should now, finally, GET IT DONE. I look forward to being able to help Ukraine, and Russia, get out of this Complete and Total MESS, that would have never started if I were President!

Zelensky’s comments reveal deep divisions between Kyiv and Washington. The Ukrainian leader questioned the legitimacy of a cease-fire agreement that did not include reciprocal moves on Moscow’s part. He said the Kremlin should demonstrate “serious steps, and not childishness.”

Others have doubted Russian President [2]Vladimir Putin’s sincerity when it comes to ending the war. Even though he announced a 30-hour ceasefire for Easter, “the Russians never fully stopped their attacks,” The Wall Street Journal reported.

Still, Zelensky’s sentiments appear to line up with his constituents. The Kyiv International Institute of Sociology found that 39 percent of Ukrainians would be willing to relinquish territory if it ends the war. This is an increase from eight percent in late 2022. However, 50 percent of respondents were opposed to such an idea.

2.4.26 Advice for Ivy League Universities: Take the Trump Deal, Before It’s Too Late (2025-04-27 07:20)

. We’ve talked about higher education before, but now it’s come into sharper focus with the Trump administration’s deadlock with [1]Harvard University over its unwillingness or inability—whatever term we like to use—to meet the administration's demands that it ensures an antisemitic-free campus that does not allow people to disrupt classes. It doesn't use race, after the Supreme Court decision that went against Harvard and said that affirmative action was no longer legal.

Columbia had the same type of disagreement, other campuses are.

I don't think it's a wise thing for them to get into a fight with the federal government. If they are dependent on federal funding, these big private marquee universities—Columbia, Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Stanford, Duke—and they want federal money, then the federal government is going to ask for some transparency. And we, the public, really don't know much about it.

It's like a rock, a traditional rock on moist ground. You don't wanna turn it over because there's going to be things underneath there that you would better not—it would be better not to be seen. And that's what the public is going to learn about [2]higher education.

Now, what do I mean? I mean loans. These universities are raising tuition higher than the rate of inflation. And that started when the federal government said, "We will ensure these loans for students." Once that happened, the moral hazard shifted away from the university. So, they have been gouging students for room and board.

I'll give you an example. [3]Hillsdale College, its room, board, and tuition is about $45,000 a year. It takes no money. Harvard gets about $9 billion in total. Its room, board, and tuition is about $95,000. Same with Stanford. They're about double what Hillsdale charges. And one of the reasons is that they're so dependent on federal money and therefore they can spend like drunken sailors.

Remember, of that 1.7, about 10 %, 8 % are nonperforming and about maybe 14 % are late. The public doesn't know all that. But they're paying for it—especially kids, the half of the cohort 18 to 30 that's not going to college, they're subsidizing this university boondoggle.

The second thing is the university doesn't really obey the first 10 amendments of the Constitution. If you get accused of particular crimes as a student, faculty member, let's say, sexual harassment or untoward speech, hate speech—whatever the term they use—it's very unlikely you're going to get Fourth and Fifth, maybe Sixth Amendment protection. That is, you're not going to have an open hearing. You're not going to be tried by a jury of your peers. You're not going to necessarily have legal counsel. You're not necessarily going to know who your accusers are.

The affirmative action ruling by the [4]Supreme Court outlawed the use of race in admissions. And we have civil rights statutes that also do that. But the universities do something funny. They have safe spaces. They have theme houses. And they have auxiliary graduations. But the common denominator, they're predicated on race. So, a black theme house, a Latino theme house has almost very few people.

Nobody would want a European, so-called white theme house or an alternate white graduation. And you would say, "Why not, Victor?" Because it would be considered racist, I suppose.

But at Stanford, only 22 % of the student body is white. Are they going to say, "Well, we're one of the minorities now. Why don't we do this?" That's where it will lead if you enhance tribalism.

There's no intellectual diversity. The National Association of Scholars did a study not long ago. They found not one of the 133 faculty members at Bryn Mawr was a Republican. At Williams, I think they found one or two. They found a lot of elite universities where there was nobody who openly acknowledged that they were a Republican.

There are a couple of other things that are disturbing too. And that is the universities get individual faculty grants—[5]Department of Energy, National Institutes of Health. And usually, in most private foundations, the university is not following their model.

What I mean is, a private scholar at a think tank, they might deduct 15 % for the use of the phone or office that they would get out of that federal grant. But universities like Stanford, Harvard, Princeton, they can go from 40 % to 50 % to 60 % and they're relying on that multimillion-dollar—I guess we'd call it—price gouging from the federal government.

And finally, these universities don't have multimillion-dollar endowments anymore. They have multibillion-dollar— $30 billion, Stanford $53 billion. And they're predicated—the income—on that. And sometimes they get almost 10 %. They're very good in investing. This $5 or $6 or $7 or $4 billion a year in income is tax-free, for the most part. Tax-free. And that's predicated that they're nonpolitical, they're nonpartisan. But when you look at the makeup of the faculty and the use of race and gender, contrary to federal law, you can see they're very partisan.

So, let me just sum up. Does the university really want to get in a fight with the Trump administration and then bring all of this information about their endowments; their lack of intellectual diversity; their segregation; their lack of due process for people who undergo inquiries or accusations; their separate racial graduations, safe spaces, theme houses; the use of student loans? I don't think they want to do that. The public would be shocked. And it's a losing proposition.

If I were the presidents of these major universities, I would do this: I would make a deal with the Trump administration. And I would welcome it because then I would tell my radical students, “You can’t wear a mask. I’d like you to, but the federal government won’t let me.” Or, “We can’t have racially segregated dorms anymore, theme houses. I’d like to, but it’s against the law.” And that would be their way out.

Is that going to happen? I don’t think so. And I think we’re going to see some accountability. And the universities are not going to like the consequences.

2.4.27 The Method Behind the Madness of Trump’s So-Called Tariff Wars (2025-04-30 22:49)

Where are we in the trade wars, [1]the tariff wars?

The stock market recently has recovered somewhat. We’re about where it was in August. I didn’t think it was too bad in August of 2024. It’s recovering 1 % to 2 %, on occasion. And why is that? Because [2]Donald Trump has announced that JD Vance and his wife, who is of Indian legacy—her family was born in India—met with the Indian government officials, and there may be a trade deal.

Japan has been talking with us. They both want—us and Japan—want a deal. Japan says we moved the goalpost. We say, “They’re not serious.” But there’s going to be a deal there.

And more importantly, Donald Trump said he was willing to lower tariffs on China. Now the Left says, “Oh, he’s caving, he’s caving. This was all unnecessary.”

You could interpret it that way. But it's [3]more likely "Art of the Deal."

In other words, "We're going to invade Panama," but we're not going to invade Panama. We just want Panama to let American companies run the exit and the entry to the canal—and that's probably going to happen.

"Canada's going to be the 51st state." No. It's not going to be the 51st state. But Canada should defend themselves and pay 2 % of their GDP, and they need to address a $65- $100 billion deficit.

But, "We want to [4]absorb Greenland." No. We don't. We want Denmark—a colonial power with this huge North American colony—we want them to help them a little bit. And indeed, they're starting to put Greenland on their imperial flags, and they gave them a billion dollars, and the base is secure. And the Greenland people, 50,000 or so, will want U.S. security. So, that is the "Art of the Deal."

And to get China to come and reduce its $300 billion trade surplus with the United States, Donald Trump talked about these huge tariffs. Now, he will talk down and we'll probably get a deal in an "Art of the Deal" fashion.

We saw that with NATO. He harangued them in 2018. They were furious. Said he might not come to their aid. They haven't met their 2 %, 2014 promises. And guess what? They started to spend more in defense. Timely so, because [5]when the Ukraine war broke out, Europe had spent a billion dollars more on defense expenditure. And more importantly, they had Finland and Sweden, two of the most muscular of all the European nations in terms of munitions and defense readiness, now both part of NATO. That worked.

And I think the same thing is happening with trade. Here's the dynamic: the Europeans detest Donald Trump more than they see their self-interest. In other words, they would rather be on the outside of these trade negotiations and [6]punish Donald Trump than they would be with the Asian powers and make a deal and profit, mutually with the United States. And partly that's because they're akin to the American Left. And, as we saw with Jamie Raskin, a representative in the Congress, he said to each country, "If you cut a deal with this administration [the Trump administration] we're going to remember that."

So, the EU people want to help the American Left, and one of the ways they think they can is to stonewall and watch the bond and stock market go down. And then they could come in later with more favorable concessions from the United States.

The problem with that thinking is that if India cuts a deal and South Korea cuts a deal—and now they're talking about Japan, Taiwan, Australia—the Trump administration has already established, openly, transparently, that those countries that are first to cut a deal will get the most favorable terms.

And so, the more people that come in and have a reciprocal agreement with the United States—I'm not saying it's going to be parity. I'm not saying we're going to get down to zero deficits—but if we cut this trillion-dollar deficit by half, that will be a considerable achievement. The Europeans, then, will see that they're left out. And especially if we come to an accord in the next month or so with China—not that we're going to be able to force China to have no tariffs on their part. But we might be able to lower them and then make them buy American products to reduce that $300 billion—If that were to be true, then Europe has missed the boat.

The bottom line. The trade war, or tariff war was never really a war. It was just an effort to stop a 50-year-cycle of chronic American trade deficits that had harmed the industrial interior. There's one caveat I would like to leave you with, and it's this: as long as Donald Trump talks about parity and the desirability of lowering our trade deficits and the unfairness of our trade partners, and a idealized goal of no tariffs, he's got a winning issue.

However. Caveat. If he starts talking about tariffs in pre-1913 terms, before the income tax, when tariffs were the primary source of American revenue. In other words, if he thinks, "I'm going to get all this money coming into the United States from these countries that are going to have to give us this money. And then I can cut taxes on tips, I can do this..." that's not going to work.

No country will wanna make a deal when they think that we're doing tariffs, not in pursuit of fairness, but in pursuit of gouging, whether true or not. So, as long as he talks about any other aspect of tariffs except revenue raising—that is a losing political issue.

2.4.28 What Is Democrat Legality? (2025-04-30 22:50)

Since 2021, [1]the Left has waged a veritable war against the American legal system in a variety of ways.

One serial target of Democrats and the Left has been the Supreme Court.

In 2020, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., spoke to an angry throng of pro-abortion protesters assembled at the very doors of the court chambers.

He [2]threatened two of the justices, Brett Kavanaugh and Neil Gorsuch, by name. Schumer yelled to the volatile crowd that the justices' views would make them "reap the whirlwind," and the two would not know what "hit" them.

In the ensuing months, protesters mobbed some of the [3]conservative justices' homes—likely committing felonies. The sympathetic Biden Justice Department chose not to follow the law, and so did nothing—although eventually a would-be assassin turned up.

Former President Joe Biden himself bragged that he would try to ignore the Supreme Court ruling banning his arbitrary cancellation of billions of dollars in student loans. Indeed, he boasted, "The Supreme Court blocked it, but that didn't stop me."

In response, no one on the Left ever complained about endangering the "rule of law" or Biden as "a dictator."

For three years, four local, state, and federal [4]prosecutors warped the law to neuter Donald Trump. Most of the charges had never been brought against other political figures in similar circumstances.

The vast majority of the 93 weaponized indictments backfired on the liberal prosecutors, who had contorted the legal system for political purposes and now face their own ethical or legal quagmires.

The federal prosecutor [5]Jack Smith belatedly reported accepting $140,000 in free legal services.

Georgia prosecutor [6]Fani Willis was removed from the Trump case and fined, and is now under further investigation.

New York prosecutor [7]Letitia James is now facing allegations of falsification of documents and loan fraud.

Federal immigration law prohibits the illegal entry into and residence within the United States. Yet the Biden administration deliberately violated the law by allowing somewhere between 10-12 million [8]illegal aliens to cross the border. Thousands had criminal records.

No one on the Left decried any of these various affronts to the legal system.

In polls, by overwhelming majorities—above 70 %—the public wants the Trump administration to close the border, begin deportations, and start with criminals or those with violent histories and gang ties.

The recent deportation of[9] Kilmar Abrego Garcia, an illegal alien from El Salvador, to the vast majority of Americans seems to fit that profile.

Garcia entered the U.S. illegally and was later found consorting with members of MS-13—a State Department-designated terrorist organization—who were selling drugs. Informants reported that he was a gang member. His own tattoos likely confirm those accusations.

Two prior immigration judges found such evidence sufficient to allow deportation proceedings. In 2019, a third judge allowed Garcia to stay temporarily, but only on the grounds that hostile gangs might harm him should he return to El Salvador.

Garcia was pulled over for speeding without a driver's license—but with eight illegal aliens who reportedly all lived at the Garcia residence. The officer released him, despite suspicions that Garcia was engaged in human trafficking.

Garcia's live-in girlfriend, now wife, was physically assaulted by Garcia on two occasions, suffered injuries, and initially sought restraining orders against him.

The Left claims Garcia is a “Maryland man” without an arrest record.

But he is not a U.S. citizen or a legal resident of Maryland. Instead, Garcia is in legal limbo and remains what he always was—a citizen of El Salvador with gang ties and formerly residing illegally in the U.S.

Garcia is now back home on El Salvadoran soil and was mistakenly sent to a high-security prison. But his own government in El Salvador will ultimately decide how involved Garcia is or was with MS-13 gangs. And then, as a sovereign nation, it will act according to its own policies about its own citizens' associations with that terrorist organization.

The Left has demanded that Garcia be returned to the U.S. He has become a cause célèbre as a purported victim of the supposedly fascist Trump. Returning Garcia is seen by leftists as a performance art act to derail the Trump agenda, which otherwise they have neither the power nor public support to thwart.

The Left also ignores its own hypocrisies and ironies.

Those who weaponized the court system and destroyed [10]the border now rail that Trump is acting unlawfully by not returning an illegal alien, an MS-13 member, and a domestic abuser with a propensity to ignore our laws.

How ironic that those who rail about colonialism now sound like 19th-century Yankee imperialists.

Democrats do not own El Salvador—although they act like it when dictating to its government that El Salvador cannot detain one of its own citizens on its own soil for its own reasons.

2.4.29 Democrats' Radical Changing of the Guard (2025-04-30 22:52)

And there's a changing of the guard.

[1]Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, in some polls, is running—I cannot believe it—behind [2]Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez for his upcoming senatorial bid by 20 points and more in a primary.

And then, as a force multiplier, I just saw Rep. Nancy Pelosi, she was at a public event. I think she's 85, turning 86. She was as incoherent as former President Joe Biden.

So, what's Victor trying to say? We're watching a changing of the guard, both due to aging—and we see that with Joe Biden, and the Biden generation is over with, and Nancy Pelosi. And then the next cohort in their 70s, the septuagenarians, they're terrified.

Dick Durbin's terrified of being in a primary. And so is Chuck Schumer. He took the dignified way out. Chuck Schumer will probably fight to the very end and be humiliated by AOC.

Who are these people? Well, “the squad,” remember, traditionally was Rep. Ilhan Omar, the Somali woman who allegedly had married her brother to gain citizenship access to the United States. There was Ayanna Pressley. She was the radical African American congresswoman. We had, of course, AOC, who was a prominent member. And we have also, in addition, Rep. Rashida Tlaib, she was a member of the squad, she was the Michigan pro-Hamas congresswoman.

Then we had the [3]Democratic National Committee. And we had Ken Martin who won the DNC chairmanship. He’s very much to the left. And really to the left is his subordinate, David Hogg, the vice chairman. He was a survivor of the Parkland shooting, remember, in 2018. And he transmogrified into anti-Second Amendment. But then he got even more and more and more radical. I don’t think he’s ever really done anything except raise money.

But here’s my point. We’re watching a metamorphosis of the Democratic Party that is out of power. The old guard: [4]Nancy Pelosi, Joe Biden, Chuck Schumer, Dick Durbin—that old guard did not deliver the 2024 election. And they lost the House. They lost the Senate. They don’t have a majority in the Supreme Court. They lost the popular vote. They lost the Electoral College. So, in the eyes of the Democratic youth, they’re discredited.

But here’s the key. They didn’t lose the 2024 election because they were too far—they didn’t go far left enough. They lost it because [5]former Vice President Kamala Harris and her supporters tried to move her from her hard left. And can I make a parentheses here? She had the most left-wing voting record in the U.S. Senate—to the left of Sens. Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren. And she couldn’t even move a little bit to the center, although she tried. She said, remember that she was for fracking and she wanted the border wall and she was for deportation? That was all untrue.

But the point I’m making is, the party tried—in a very anemic fashion—to move to the center, where they knew the votes were. But this new cohort is saying, “You lost the election because you didn’t go far left enough. And maybe we represent 20 % of the Democratic registered cohort, but we’re young. And we’re charismatic. And we’re dynamic. And we’re gonna take this party, in the 2026 midterms and the 2028, to victory. And we’re gonna do it by a socialist agenda. And a radical, radical, new, new, new green deal. And an open border. And a trans banner on every campaign event. That’s who we are. And a disarmament. And we’re gonna raise taxes on the billionaires.” And that’s their message. It has no public support.

So, even though they think they’re charismatic and they’re youthful, we get back to the old proverb of the 80-20 paradigm. The Republican Party has been on the 70 % to 80 % of where the people are on the border, on foreign policy, on the economy, on social and cultural issues. These people—these Jacobin French revolutionaries—they’re pulling 20 % to 30 % on this issue.

I’ll leave you with a final thought. The Republicans are not afraid. They’re not afraid of the squad and the Jacobins and this new cohort, the David Hoggs of the world. But you know who's terrified of them? Dick Durbin, Nancy Pelosi, and Chuck Schumer, because they don't know how to handle them. They're part of themselves. It's an incestuous relationship.

And they're saying to them, "But we're the old guard." And they're saying, "You may be the old guard, but we're going to guillotine you and get rid of you. And we're coming in with a revolutionary fervor they're terrified of."

I'd like to talk today, if I could, about the changing of the Democratic guard. There was some news lately that Sen. Dick Durbin from Illinois—he was the author, remember, of the DREAM Act. He was a hardcore liberal. You could even say he was left of center. He's stepping down. He's in his 70s.

And there's a changing of the guard.

[6]Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, in some polls, is running—I cannot believe it—behind [7]Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez for his upcoming senatorial bid by 20 points and more in a primary.

2.4.30 Here's What Trump Has Done During His First 100 Days in Office (2025-04-30 22:53)

We're coming up over the three-month mark or the proverbial "100 days" are on the horizon of a new administration.

When that happens, people like to take stock of it. Given the furious pushback against Trump—both from the Left, from the [1]Democratic Party, and many centrist independents, even libertarian Republicans—you'd think that things were not going well.

But a recent poll by CNN showed that [2]President Donald Trump had wide approval. Another poll has just come out where he was up to 54 %. Given the media hostility, you would think that he would be completely negative, but he's not. He has the confidence of the majority of the American people. Why is that? Let's just take a quick tour of what he's done in the first 100 days.

He has completely reversed 10,000 people coming in a day—over 300,000 a month, 12 million in four years—to essentially 97 %, 98 % of the border is secure. In fact, there is no open border now.

Now he has pivoted to try to address the 12 million people that [3]former President Joe Biden not only let in but scattered all over the United States on often state, federal, and local subsidies. That's gonna be a task. But he has shut the border. No comprehensive immigration reform. None of the things they said was necessary. None of the things that said that it was impossible, that hampered by. He just did it. We've never seen anything like it.

He has revolutionized energy. There is no New Green Deal. There's no electric vehicle mandate. We're not going to be funding more boondoggles of high-speed rail. We're going to burn clean coal, restore the Appalachian coal fields, those in the West as well. We're leasing out new oil fields. We're trying to get liquid natural gas shipped to Europe, that's in dire need of it. We're continuing fracking.

We're producing so much energy that the price of oil has gone—at one point in the Biden administration, it was $120 a barrel. It's down to almost $60. And by the way, he's not draining the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. And he won't do that before a midterm. If anything, he will begin filling it again pretty soon.

On the [4]diversity, equity, and inclusion front, he didn't have to get into DEI. That's the third rail. He just said it's over with because it violates the recent Supreme Court ruling that found that Harvard and the University of North Carolina were culpable for racist practices against Asian-American applicants.

The law is on Donald Trump's side. The court decisions are on Donald Trump's side. And now DEI is being purged from government auspices and private corporations.

Everybody says, "I'm Rip Van Winkle. I woke up. What were we doing?" We were doing exactly the opposite of what Martin Luther King—we were judging people by the color of their skin, by their superficial appearance, not the content of their character. That is a revolution.

And then suddenly everybody said he wiped out the stock market because he insisted on not just free trade but fair trade. And he said he was going to sanction China. And he did. Now all of a sudden we have 70 countries trying to negotiate. And as I'm speaking, nations such as Italy or Japan want to make a deal. What is a deal? A deal is they're not going to run up surpluses at the same extent.

We have a $1.1 trillion trade deficit. Donald Trump is going to get in the next few weeks a few major nations, and once he does—to make a deal—all the others will not want to be without a chair when the music stops. They will want to follow. When they follow, China will be eager to negotiate because its efforts to get Europe on its side have failed.

If you look very quickly abroad, Donald Trump is still trying to find peace. And no, he's not [5]Russian President Vladimir Putin's puppet. He's been very tough on Putin. He suggests he would have a secondary oil boycott on nations that bought Russian oil, something Biden never imagined. But he is getting frustrated by both sides. And he's putting renewed pressure.

In the Middle East, Iran is at its weakest point. Israel's ready to take out the nuclear facilities, to the extent it cannot without sophisticated, heavy bombers. And Donald Trump is not looking for an optional war. He's telling the Iranians, "Time is running out. Settle. Dismantle your nuclear facilities or else."

The Red Sea is open for navigation. The Houthis are in retreat. There is nobody in the United States who wants to negotiate with Hamas or Hezbollah. It's an entirely new game.

China is very worried that its companies are gonna be delisted, that are fraudulent, from the stock market in the United States. They're very worried. There are 300,000 students—that is their pipeline to the ex-appropriation of technology in the United States—might have to go home. There's so many levers to pull against China and so much culpability on their part that I think they will make a deal.

So what am I getting at? Forget what the media says. Forget what his opponent said. Forget Kilmar Abrego Garcia, forget Luigi Mangione, all of these distractions. The first 100 days have been revolutionary. We've never seen anything like it, not during the Reagan administration, not during FDR, in terms of the magnitude of the changes. And that is why people are furious.

No one in their right mind thought anybody would try to stage a counterrevolution and be so successful in the first 100 days.

2.5 May

2.5.1 We Needed a New President, Not 'Comprehensive Immigration Reform' (2025-05-04 23:11)

At the end of the 90-day period, where are we on the immigration issue? And there's good news and there's bad news. It's sort of like the trade and tariff issue. It's sort of like the Iran denuclearization effort. It's sort of like the Ukraine war. There's a lot of good indicators, but there's not realization or finalization.

And that is important because President Donald Trump is polling in the RealClear—average is about 44 %, 45 %. He has gone down some. I think the polls on the Left are trying to exaggerate that average downward. But nevertheless, that reflects that everything is in suspension. And let's look at how that applies to the border.

The good news is that we've gone from 10,000 people entering illegally to zero. And we've got the highest morale ever in Immigration and Customs Enforcement and the [1]Border Patrol. People are ecstatic at the work they've done. Mexico is no longer cooperating with the forces of [2]illegal immigration. They're scared to. The wall will be continued all the way to the gulf in some form or the other. It's a big success. And guess what? There was no comprehensive immigration reform. Remember that kind of bogeyman? "We need comprehensive"—no, we didn't. We just needed to enforce the laws on the books. And we've done that. Now, here's the other part. We don't know how many people were let in under [3]former President Joe Biden.

It may have been 10, 11, 12 million. It's hard to know whether an illegal entry always stayed here or not. But they did chart, roughly, how many people came in. It was somewhere between 10 and 12 million, maybe 400,000 or 500,000 aliens. But here's the principle that the Left has adopted. And I can't believe it. Maybe you can. It's surreal. It's Orwellian. And it's been reified by the district courts, in some cases, the circuit courts, and de facto by the Supreme Court because they haven't acted. And the principle is this. It was legal de facto for the prior administration to systematically and unashamedly break the law by destroying the border and allowing these 10 to 12 million people to come in illegally and to reside illegally. The courts did not entertain any objection to that. In other words, there was a blatant destruction of the law by the chief executive. However, the corollary to that is even more disturbing. The incoming administration who wants to rectify that abuse—in other words, it wants to enforce the law and say that you came in illegally and you shouldn't have because of the prior laxity of this government. Now, you've gotta leave because you're still breaking the law. And they're stopping these deportations, for the most part. So, the principle is it is lawful to be unlawful if you're Joe Biden—according to the courts—but it is unlawful to be lawful if you're [4]Donald Trump. And the result is that we've got these 10 to 12 million people. Are we going to have an immigration hearing for each one of them? Or are we just going to pick people? Now, Kilmar Abrego Garcia had two administrative hearings with immigration judges. And he was said to be deportable. The third one said, "Well, if we deport him, he might be in danger by gangs." Now, I don't think there's much of an MS-13 gang in El Salvador anymore because they're all in that huge prison. So, that should be nullified. They didn't say he couldn't be deported. He just said he didn't think he could be deported to El Salvador. They should bring him back and then deport him somewhere else. Deport him to Mexico, if you want. But nobody would want him because, unlike our Left, they believe that he was a gang member. And by the way, we've had [5] new information that when he was pulled over in Tennessee with eight illegal aliens with him—and I don't know why he wasn't cited—he was speeding at a high speed without a valid license. Anybody listening, right now, if you get in a car and you have eight people with no identification and it looks like you're trafficking and you have no valid driver's license and you're breaking the speed law, you're gonna go to jail. But not if you're an illegal alien trafficker. But here's the new information. The car that Abrego Garcia was driving—who said he was just bringing construction workers from Texas to Maryland—it was registered under the name of a known human trafficker who had been arrested for that. In other words, he was, Abrego Garcia, a trafficker. So, now we have this situation where you cannot deport somebody who beat his partner, who trafficked to smuggle people in, who has gang activity and gang markings on his body and his attire, and is a citizen of El Salvador and is here illegally. If you can't deport him, I don't know who you can deport who was here illegally. So, that's where we are right now. Great news on the border. But a manipulation, a distortion, a warping of the law in a very surreal fashion that somebody who is trying to enforce the law is considered unlawful and someone who completely made a mockery of it was considered lawful.

2.5.2 The Trump Counterrevolution and the Moral Ledger (2025-05-04 23:13)

Despite the media hysteria, [1]President Donald Trump's counterrevolution remains on course.

Its ultimate fate will probably rest with the state of the economy by [2]the November 2026 midterm elections. But its success also hinges on accomplishing what is right and long overdue—and then making such reforms quietly, compassionately, and methodically.

No country can long endure without [3]sovereignty and security—or with 10 million to 12 million illegal immigrants crossing the border and half a million criminal foreign nationals roaming freely.

The prior administration found that it was easy to [4]destroy the border and welcome the influx. But it is far harder for its successor to restore security, find those who broke the law, and insist on legal-only immigration. Trump is on the right side of all these issues and making substantial progress.

Everyone knew that a [5] $2 trillion budget deficit, a $37 trillion national debt, and a $1.2 trillion trade deficit in goods were ultimately unsustainable.

Yet all prior politicians of the 21st century winced at the mere thought of reducing debts and deficits, given that it proved much easier just to print and spread around federal money. As long as the Trump administration dutifully cuts the budget, sends its regrets to displaced federal employees, seeks to expand private sector reemployment, and quietly presses ahead, it retains the moral high ground.

The elite universities have long hidden things from the American people that otherwise would have lost them all public support.

They deliberately sought to neuter Supreme Court rulings banning race-based preferences by stealthily continuing their often-segregated policies on campuses, from admissions and hiring to dorms and graduations.

They have taken billions of dollars from autocracies, such as communist China and Qatar. And they have partnered abroad with their foreign illiberal institutions and then disguised their quid pro quo subservience.

These supposedly prestigious universities have previously made no real effort either to stop or even hide their own campus epidemics of antisemitism.

They have spiked their tuition and costs higher than the annual rate of inflation, assured that the tottering $1.7 trillion guaranteed student loan portfolio would always send them guaranteed cash flows.

They have gouged taxpayers by charging exorbitant surcharges on federal grants from 40 % to 60 %. And they make no effort to offer students intellectual, ideological, or political diversity.

So, even our most prestigious universities seem to have no real moral compass. Accordingly, as long as Trump retains the high ground, the public, too, will demand either reform in higher education or a cessation of federal support to it.

The economy remains strong, but its ultimate health depends on reaching a trade deal with a handful of nations that account for our $1.2 trillion trade deficit in goods: China, the European Union, Canada, Mexico, the Southeast Asian trade bloc, and Taiwan, Japan, and South Korea.

These nations all know that their tariffs are not symmetrical. But our trade partners will not willingly change. They apparently, but wrongly, believe that the U.S. either welcomes its trade deficits, naively thinks they're irrelevant, or is too wedded to libertarian trade ideology to demand accountability.

So, too, on trade, the Trump administration is in the right.

Its only challenge is to avoid envisioning tariffs as a new, get-rich source of massive revenue. Data does not support the idea of such large tariff incomes.

The American people signed on for symmetry, fairness, and reciprocity in trade, not tariffing those who run deficits with us or seeing high tariffs as a cash cow to fund our out-of-control government.

Enraged Democrats still offer no substantial alternatives to the Trump agenda.

There are no shadow-government Democrat leaders with new policy initiatives. They flee from the Joe Biden record on the border, the prior massive deficits and inflation, the disaster in Afghanistan, two theater-wide wars that broke out on Biden's watch, and the shameless conspiracy to hide the prior president's increasing dementia.

Instead, the Left has descended into thinly veiled threats of organized disruption in the streets. It embraces potty-mouth public profanity, profane and unhinged videos, nihilistic filibusters, congressional outbursts, and increasingly dangerous threats to the persons of Elon Musk and Trump.

All that frenzy is not a sign that the Trump counterrevolution is failing. It is good evidence that it is advancing forward, and its ethically bankrupt opposition has no idea how, or whether even, to stop it.

2.5.3 All GOP Senators Have to Do Is Not Be Dumb, So We're in Trouble (2025-05-04 23:16)

It's times like these that remind me that the Latin root of the words "Senate" and "senile" are the same. Of course, all bad senators aren't senile. Some are just stupid. But sadly, even the stupid ones are necessary because we must keep the Senate in 2026 to make Donald Trump's second administration a success. That means we must be smart and self-sacrificing, and GOP senators (and aspiring senators) must be smart and self-sacrificing. Which means we have a challenge.

We've not only got to keep the majority; we've got to expand it. With a small majority, every mediocrity eager for a minute in the spotlight – and, in one case, a genuine legislator who just isn't as conservative as the rest of the party – can create huge problems for pushing the America First agenda through. We need more solid Republicans, by which I mean Republicans who either eagerly support the agenda or are weak enough to be easily bullied into supporting the agenda. I prefer the eager supporters, but a vote in favor counts the same whether it's done from a legislator's genuine beliefs or because of the cold terror of facing the voters and explaining why the squishy senator collaborated with the enemy.

Right now, we Republicans have a majority of three seats. Not all of them are reliable. Susan Collins (R-Maine) is a moderate. So is her state. I've never held that against her, and no one should. She is totally forthright about who she is and what she thinks, and she does her best, in her view, to represent her state. She's neither an opportunist nor a glory hog. She's just not as conservative as we are. We will never get a better senator out of Maine, and as much as I would like to be able to count on her 100 percent of the time, I'm happy to be able to count on her 80 percent of the time as opposed to 0 percent of the time, which is how often we would get support from whichever maple syrup Marxist would replace her. She's running next year, and we should all eagerly and unreservedly support her.

Another of the squishy seats belongs to Lisa Murkowski (D-Frozen Wastes), and Republicans can rely on her loyalty as much as a staffer for the Bulwark can rely on his wife's loyalty on pool cleaning day. A lot of people say that she's not good for anything, but that's not true; Moaning Lisa is always good for a quote about how Donald Trump is disappointing her. Sadly, she's not up in 2026. Hopefully, by the time she comes around for reelection, Alaska will get its head out of its igloo and set this nepotistic nitwit adrift on the proverbial ice floe.

And then there's the rotating seat for the obnoxious senator du jour who thinks that if they present themselves as an obstacle to the president's agenda, they're going to get all sorts of attention from the Washington Post and the rest of the regime media, and it's going to work out well for them. Do you remember how that went for Joni Ernst (R-Corn) a few months ago when she registered some reservations about Pete Hegseth? Well, it went poorly. Now, Joni is no dummy. About five seconds into the tsunami-like backlash, she did a 180-degree turn and became the SecDef's biggest booster. She should be rewarded for this. She has demonstrated the appropriate responsiveness to her constituents; that it was caused by cold sweats over the thought of being primaried by someone who actually believes in this America First stuff is largely irrelevant.

A big loser who's not up in 2026 is James Lankford (R-France), famous for collaborating with the Democrats on an immigration bill that would've made Donald Trump closing the border totally impossible. Jimmy is one of those Republicans who never seems to learn about cavorting with the commies – if he was Ned Beatty, he'd be up for another canoe trip the next weekend because, you know, what are the chances lightning strikes twice?

Then there's that guy from Utah who's not Mike Lee (R-Awesome). He replaced Mitt Romney and occasionally channels him, but he usually comes through. Utah is one of those states that should be completely based, but since you can't generally win without being a Republican, all the people who would normally be Democrats pretend to be GOP and it's no surprise that they fail to be properly based.

Speaking of failing to be properly based, John Cornyn (R-Jello) is running for reelection in Texas, where I may or may not be a voting resident by 2026. Cornholio is the guy who decided it would be a good idea to collaborate with the Democrats and give them a win on gun control. He's one of those reach-across-the-aisle, bipartisan guys who would be literally made of tofu if he were any softer. Ken Paxton, the Lone Star Attorney General much hated by the [1]Fredocons (like Utah, Texas suffers from an infestation of faux Republicans), announced he will primary the Cornmeister. Cornyn's brand of corporate-friendly, generic, transactional Republicanism is usually enough to win; Paxton still needs to demonstrate that he can win Texas, which the Democrats are always trying to contest and always failing to win. I prefer the hardcore guy, but the challenge is that some polls have Paxton losing the general. As annoying as the incumbent is, we've got to keep the seat, so if Paxton will lose, we will have to stick with the Corn Dawg. Ugh; remember that part about self-sacrificing? We primary voters must do that too.

And that brings us to Thom Tillis (R-2nd Tier BBQ), the man voted "Senator Least Likely to be Confused with a Particle Physicist." He's doing his tiresome Hamlet act again, the one he did right before Pete Hegseth's vote in which he let it be known that he had doubts about the nominee. Well, the pushback was so substantial it even got through his thick skull and he jumped aboard the Pete Express. Now, he's doing it again with District of Columbia United States attorney nominee Ed Martin, a solid performer who's already begun cleaning up that cesspool since being named acting USA. Thomboy is upset because Ed Martin stood up for J6 political prisoners, raising the question of why the hell Tillis wasn't standing up for the J6 political prisoners, too.

His antics are ridiculous. You don't embarrass the president. Look, this isn't even a purity test. This is an IQ test. Is Tillis really dumb enough to defy Trump going into this election? North Carolinians will vote for this guy, but not by huge margins. Conservative voters in that state despise him, with good reason. He can't further alienate them and win. Anybody whose political instincts tell him to flip off the president and outrage his constituents over the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia has no business being in politics, much less in any other occupation that involves interacting with other human beings. He needs to stop the handwringing "To be or not to be" crap and get on the team. Otherwise, it's an indication that he'll blow the election and the Republicans in North Carolina need to be looking around for someone who's smarter than a box of South Carolina rocks.

Don't even get me started on the unconfirmed reports that he - and some others named above – are resisting cutting Biden green gifts as part of reconciliation. Is it too much to ask that alleged conservatives own the libs instead of conservative voters? Apparently.

Finally, we need to look at the guys who aren't in the Senate right now but could be. New Hampshire Governor Chris Sununu (R-Democrats), true to form, screwed over the Republicans yet again. The sole mark in his favor is that somehow the residents of that benighted state enjoy his brand of spineless pseudo-conservatism and might well elect him to the Senate in 2026. But, of course, party and the country be damned; he prioritized himself and took himself out of the running. For some reason, he thinks he might be president someday. This raises the question that Snake Plissken memorably posed: “[2]President of what?”

And then there's Georgia. Representing the coastal elites despite his ZIP code, Democrat Jon Ossoff (D-Marin County) is vulnerable. We just need the best candidate possible to take him down. There have been several people talked about. Some, like Marjorie Taylor Greene, are popular with American Firsters but, sadly, are less popular with actual Georgia voters. If she runs, according to current polling (which needs to be taken with a Mount Everest-sized grain of salt), we lose any chance of flipping that seat. But if we run Brian Kemp, the current governor who always seems to prevail, we will probably win it. The problem is that Kemp and Trump have famously been at odds. Moreover, Kemp has presidential ambitions, which are not insane like Sununu's are. He pretty much has to run and win that Senate seat, or he's got no chance at ever being president because we're not going to forget if he pulls a Sununu and screws us out of a seat.

There are also several open seats in the Midwest, including Illinois, Kentucky, and some cold states. We need serious candidates in all of those, but most are a reach.

In short, we need to do something as Republicans that we're not used to doing, which is playing it smart. We need our senators to play it smart, too, which is also an unfamiliar concept. But it doesn't have to be. Donald Trump has shown the way to win. We're going to have a great economy by November 2026. This is our chance to run up the score. The only way we can lose is if Republicans are dumb. And that's why we should be worried.

2.5.4 Yes, Republicans Should Absolutely Raise Taxes On The Rich

(2025-05-12 11:18)

Democrats don't have a lot of talking points that resonate with a majority of Americans anymore. Oddly enough, 'We're going to trans your kids' doesn't quite ring the same to ordinary parents as it does to the blue hairs. People care about the environment, but going back to the Stone Age, when China and India kept polluting the planet on a massive scale, it seems a bit much. And while most people don't want to make every abortion in every situation illegal, late-term and partial birth procedures seem a bit murderous for most anyone except the most committed Commies.

But one consistent talking point they do have, and have had for decades, is the contention that rich people should pay more taxes. The other issues, even if emotionally charged on the surface, are pretty easy to counter with facts and evidence. This one, however, is a different animal altogether, and it hearkens to the class warfare that's been successfully employed by Marxists since the 19th century.

An important point many on our side miss is that just because the bad guys use an argument doesn't mean it's not valid on some level. For example, the working class had it pretty rough back then, and like it or not, we've largely got unions and government to thank for the posh working conditions we all enjoy today. Can they and have they gone too far? Of course, but that doesn't mean they weren't tackling real problems that needed addressing. My grandfather, who worked in a southwest Virginia coal mine, participated in many of the coal strikes of the mid-20th century, and died at 64, partially from the black lung disease he developed after decades of exposure, would doubtless agree if he were alive today.

Still, it's one thing to force job creators to treat their workers with some baseline of fairness when it comes to pay, safety, and overall working conditions. It's quite another to tax them at a level that not only makes it difficult to accumulate the generational wealth most of us dream of being able to obtain someday, but also stifles the kind of economic activity, from job creation to luxury consumption, that keeps the middle and lower classes functioning.

It's hard to believe there was a time in the United States when the top marginal tax rate was 94 %, but it's true. Sure, there were deductions, and the threshold was pretty high to reach that level. Still, the fact that there was a point where taxes became virtually confiscatory had to have stifled economic activity among the super wealthy. After all, what's the point of making a ton of money if the government is just going to take it from you?

In truth, tax rates for the richest Americans were absurdly high from the 30's to the Reagan era, when they finally got slashed to something more similar to what we have today. But we still have a graduated system, with a standard deduction and a lower rate for initial tiers of income. And while the top 1 % no longer suffer from confiscatory taxes, they also pay more than 40 % of all income taxes collected.

The point I'm trying to make here is that there's a balance. Many conservatives are conditioned to bristle at the slightest notion that the political Left might have a valid point on something, but we do that at our own peril. No, taxes on the rich shouldn't be confiscatory, and yes, every income earner should in some way contribute to the tax system. Still, there's also nothing wrong with taxing the people who can easily afford it at a higher rate than working-class Americans who live paycheck to paycheck.

In truth, the kind of class warfare that brought down the 19th-century robber barons is actually exacerbated by doing the opposite. If you want to see another Communist Revolution, go back to the kinds of policies that made the first one possible and see what happens. Sadly, jealousy is a human foible that will never be eradicated. We like to pick on the left for refusing to acknowledge human nature, but sometimes our side can do it too. Going too far in one direction on that pendulum is the mistake the Marxists made, but refusing to acknowledge it altogether is the kind of mistake that only gives them momentum.

This brings us to that key Democratic point of taxing the rich. We may not like it, but people like Bernie and AOC are striking a chord here that resonates with voters, particularly young ones, and we ignore it at our peril. When Republican senators actually balk at the prospect of allowing the top marginal rate to go from 37 % back to the 39.6 % it was before the original Trump tax cuts, 'out of touch' doesn't begin to cover it. This doesn't strike most Americans as confiscatory; it strikes them as fair.

The Republican Party, especially this Populist iteration, should NEVER, EVER again be the party of cutting taxes for the richest Americans. It's tone deaf, dumb, and self-defeating. We can be balanced on this without going too far, and we can neuter the Dems simultaneously. Somehow, 'We want to raise taxes on the rich more than they do' doesn't quite resonate the way 'They want to cut taxes for their billionaire friends' does. Perhaps it's time to remove that play from their playbook and keep winning elections.

2.5.5 The Trump-Iran Deal, Explained (2025-05-12 11:20)

Just recently, the Houthis, that is the terrorist organization that controls half of Yemen and has been hit hard by the United States for its interruption of maritime commerce in the Red Sea and its serial attacks on Israel, has been—I guess you would say—neutered.

Its port facilities, its airport, a lot of its missile depots, its command and control have all been neutralized. But yet, here they are with a vestigial force. They just sent a missile, not just into Israel, but into Israel's international Ben Gurion Airport. It almost hit one of the terminals. Didn't kill anybody. But it made a huge crater right on the periphery of the airport grounds. And for some reason it was not intercepted by Israel's tripartite missile defense system.

Let me add another incident. Just recently, almost at the same time, four more terrorists were arrested in the United Kingdom for organizing Iranian-inspired terror against citizens of Britain. And of course, we remember that Iran was involved in an effort to assassinate [1]President Donald Trump.

What am I getting at is, we're right in the middle of negotiations with Iran. Donald Trump feels that they are historically vulnerable. The Assad regime, their lifeline to the Arab world, is gone. Kaput. Vanished. They can't use the Damascus airport to airlift weapons for Hezbollah. Hezbollah has been reduced dramatically in its effectiveness. Hamas is—I don't know what you'd call [2]Hamas. It's living underground among the rubble of Gaza. And then, of course, the Houthis, as I mentioned, have been attacked.

Israel has demonstrated that it can penetrate, at will, the supposedly formidable air defenses of Iran. The United States, in addition, is building up its strategic bombing force—in Diego Garcia and in areas that can reach Iran—with the capability of dropping these 20,000 to 30,000-pound bunker busters. We have two carriers that will soon be assembled near there.

What am I getting at again? The pressure is all on Iran. Militarily. Diplomatically. Economically. Socially. Culturally. What do I mean by that? Culturally, there is about 30 % to 40 % of the country are non-Farsi Persian speakers. And they're very restive, angry. Power outages. The regime is unpopular. It's diverted billions of dollars to these terrorist appendages that now didn't pay off, that they're defunct.

And so, Donald Trump thinks that he, with this maximum pressure, putting this crushing oil embargo—which by the way, [3]former President Joe Biden lifted—that he can bring them to negotiations one last time. Personally, I don't think he can. Nothing that that regime has ever said is accurate. Nobody in the MAGA movement wants an optional war in the Middle East. But they will have nuclear weapons, perhaps in a year.

So, what is the likely scenario? The likely scenario is they will lose face if they negotiate away their nuclear weapons. That is the only lever they have over Western powers now that their terrorist children are all gone. So, I don't think they're gonna make a deal. They're gonna delay, delay, delay; lie, lie, lie; use the Houthis.

And they are playing with fire because once Donald Trump gives them an opportunity for a peaceful way out of their dilemma—that is they can negotiate an end to their nuclear program. They don't need [4]nuclear power. They have the fourth-largest fossil fuel reserves in the world. They have enough energy for themselves and for export for an endless amount of time. And yet they still are working on this nuclear project, not for peaceful energy generation, but to have a nuclear deterrent.

And so, what we should look for in the next few months is that an exasperated Trump administration will finally throw up its hands and say, "You can't deal with these people, but they're not gonna get a nuclear weapon."

At that point, one of two things will happen—I should say one of three things. Israel will hit back because of the Houthis' attack on its airport. And that could come sooner or later. Or the United States will intervene. I don't think it'll intervene on its own. Or there'll be a joint Israeli-American operation.

But by the end of the year, I don't think [5]Iran will have a nuclear deterrent. And then we're gonna be watching a mystery unfold.

If it should be hit, and if it should lose its nuclear potential, what will be the reaction of the Iranian people? Will they be angry that their national sovereignty has been attacked? Or will they be delighted that this 50-year hated regime is now gone and they don't have to spend money on these Arab terrorist groups that have brought them no profit?

That'll be something to see. And I think we'll see it at the end of the year.

2.5.6 President Trump's Most Loyal Supporters (2025-05-12 11:22)

At the end of President Donald Trump's [1]first 100 days, there were a number of polls that came out. Most of them were liberal and most of them were negative.

And as we mentioned and have mentioned in the past, some of them who have a much more reliable history—such as the Rasmussen poll, the Insider Advantage poll, the Trafalgar poll—they all had [2]Donald Trump, at the end of 100 days, with either roughly 50-50 approval ratings or even slightly above that, 48-46, 50-49.

But my point is, in one of the daily Rasmussen polls, they had an astonishing figure, that they broke down Donald Trump's support by ethnic category.

And there were 39 % of black Americans that expressed support for Donald Trump. That's an astonishing number. Given that 95 % of the news coverage, according to the Media Research Center, has been negative. And yet here is a traditional Democratic constituency where 4 out of 10 people like what's been going on.

But even more astonishing is the ethnic constituency that expressed the highest approval of Donald Trump's first 100 days was [3]the Hispanic community. In fact, far above the so-called white community.

How can that be possible? The Democratic Party had told us that closing the border and stopping the illegal entry of 10 to 12 million illegal aliens during the Biden administration—that was deeply unpopular to the Hispanic community.

And then, the deportations of illegal aliens like Kilmar Abrego Garcia, for example, or Eduardo Flores-Ruiz that was in Judge Hannah Dugan's courtroom, whom she tried to hide. He was the assaulter of three people, including women. This was supposed to be deeply unpopular. But it actually has the opposite effect.

And why would that be? The reason is that when 12 million people come in illegally and they gravitate to certain constituencies or enclaves, they usually feel more at home with fellow Spanish-speaking Americans. And where is that? That is along the Rio Grande Valley. That is in Texas. That is in parts of New Mexico. That is in the San Joaquin Valley.

What am I getting at? What I'm getting at is that a group of elites in the [4]Biden administration, for particular political purposes—and I'll be frank here—I think they did want people to come in, both to serve as future constituents under the lax rules and protocols of early and mail-in voting, and also to grow the government and have more constituencies on welfare.

But in any case, the price, the cost, the toll fell most heavily on Hispanic communities. These were the ones that were trying to get competitive Advanced Placement programs in their schools. And suddenly they have English as a Second Language programs again. They were the ones at dialysis clinics, at emergency rooms that were swarmed with people who in some cases had never been to a doctor. And so, they bore the greatest brunt of it.

They were in cities where the Biden administration flew people in at night from Mexico and then dispersed them in Hispanic communities. And so they were very angry.

And why would so-called white people poll much more negatively against Trump's first 100 days than Hispanics? It's because the white elite had created an agenda under the Biden and Obama administration that was elitist.

By that I mean—let's face it—Sen. Bernie Sanders had to take out the word "millionaires" from his usual castigation of millionaires and billionaires. And it wasn't just because he's a millionaire now. That is the trademark of the professional bicoastal classes. And they're interested in issues that are not existential—at least not everyday existential. By that I mean global warming, the Green New Deal, transgendered men in women's sports, international organizations—the U.N.

But they're not interested in what the Hispanic working classes are interested in. And that's affordable gasoline, affordable power bills, good-paying jobs, schools that allow their children to be competitively educated, safety in their neighborhoods.

And the idea that they should have some natural antipathy for illegal aliens just because they share the same language and maybe ethnic background—they don't. They're just like anybody else that's trying to make a living and has been ignored and shunned by the grandees of [5]the Democratic Party.

And so, they're expressing support for an administration that is trying to get affordable energy prices, that is damning the high rise in crime, that is seeking to close the border and secure it, that is calling account the elite universities that gouge the federal government.

All of that appeals to people who have to work with their muscles. And many of the Hispanic community, they're contractors or small business people. Many of them are professionals. But they have a more realistic, as all immigrant communities do, a realistic appraisal of what's important and what's peripheral. And right now, the Democratic Party is peripheral to the Hispanic community in general.

2.5.7 How Pollsters Rig the Numbers Against Trump (2025-05-12 11:23)

We've touched on polls before, but I don't think I've seen anything quite as egregious in pollsters' bias as recently when they apparently or supposedly or purportedly surveyed the first 100 days of [1]President Donald Trump and the public reaction.

Almost immediately headlines blared, "Worst First 100 Days in History." "Trump Drops From 52 to 42."

Everybody was confounded because [2]the economic news was pretty good. Job growth was just spectacular. Over 170,000 jobs. Inflation was down. Energy prices were down. Corporate profits were up. There was a movement on the trade question. Ukraine still—there was no bad news except the controversy and chaos of a counterrevolution.

So, what were the pollsters trying to tell us? Or were they trying to manipulate us? And I think it's the latter.

Larry Kudlow, for example, the Fox, former Fox Business—I think he still is at Fox. He pointed out that when he examined [3]The New York Times and [4]The Washington Post polls, they were deliberately not counting people who surveyed that they were Trump voters in 2024. That was half the country. They were only polling about a third. Think of that. A third of the people that said they voted for Trump they polled. Not half. So, of course, their results were going to be disputed or suspect.

But here's another thing. There were analyses after each of the 2016, the 2020, and the 2024 elections about the accuracy of polls, post facto, of the election. And we learned that they were way off in 2016. They said they had learned their lessons. They were way off in 2020. They said they learned their lesson. And they were way off in 2024.

And why are they way off? Because liberal pollsters—and that's the majority of people who do these surveys—believe that if they create artificial leads for their Democratic candidates, it creates greater fundraising and momentum. Kind of the herd mentality. "Oh, Trump is down by six. I don't wanna vote for him. Then he won't win." That's the type of thing that they want to create.

I'll give you one example. The most egregious. The most egregious of all these polls was the NPR/PBS/Marist poll. They have Donald Trump just very unpopular after 100 days. Very unpopular. This is the now-defunded Corporation for Public Broadcasting, that umbrella organization from which this poll was funded and conducted.

Do we remember that poll? It was the one poll that came out the night before the 2024 election. They said that [5]then-Vice President Kamala Harris would win by four points. And they said it was beyond the margin of error. And one of the pollsters said, "It's her race to lose." She lost by a point and a half. They were five and a half points. Did they apologize? No. Here they are again.

And David Plouffe, one of the directors of the Harris campaign, just recently came out and said, "Well, we had all these inside polls we never disclosed. But not one of them—not one of them—had Harris ever ahead of Trump."

Inside polls don't lie because you pay somebody to tell you the truth. Nothing will get you fired and lose income quicker than to lie about a poll so that your candidate will be happy and rely on your false information. People don't pay for that kind of stuff.

So, in other words, they knew the whole time—the Harris campaign—that 15 of those 20 polls, 19 polls that all had Harris winning the election, they were all false. Of course, they never said anything.

And so, here's my point. If you look at the polls that were the most accurate—Mark Penn was very accurate. He's a Democratic pollster. But especially, the Rasmussen poll and the Insider Advantage and the Trafalgar poll. They joined together and they had a 100-day survey. Rasmussen—each day of the 100-day period that he's issued a poll. And guess what? They have Trump ahead by anywhere from two to three points after 100 days. And they were the most accurate.

And yet, what do these news outlets say that Trump—it's a disaster. That he's polling—no. He's polling very well. Things are going very well.

The pollsters that indicate that people support him are the only pollsters that have any reputation after this decade-long polling disaster in which their prejudices, their biases, and their hatred of Donald Trump affected their results. And they were effectively in league with the Democratic candidate to create momentum rather than to adhere to a spirit of professionalism and honor.

2.5.8 Germany's Drift Toward 'National Suicide' (2025-05-12 11:24)

Recently, the German government announced that it is going to label or maybe relabel the Alternative für Deutschland—the Alternative for Germany—the conservative party that has an antithetical agenda both to the German government of both liberal and [1]conservative factions, but also to the EU in general.

Anyway, it is announced that it will classify it as a dangerous far-right organization. And that will cement this aura that no government, under their parliamentary democracy system, will ask them to join to form a majority government. So, the process of ostracism and demonization of this party continues.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [2]Donate now

And what is the party advocating? The party is advocating an alternative for the way that Germany is going. And very briefly, we've talked about this, but if you look at [3]what has become of Germany, it has had two years of essentially no growth or negative growth. Only recently, last year, did it finally, after 30 years, invest a measly 2 % of its gross domestic product as it had promised in 2014. It had not met that goal. It just barely did it.

It's had a systematic decommission of its nuclear power plants. And how anybody could rely on solar power in Germany—but yet the German government invested heavily in it. And the result is that German power, electricity—heating, cooling, and industrial use—is about four times what the average power cost is in the United States. And you can see what that's gonna do to German investment.

They had been also sort of noncommittal about Chinese mercantilism. Because Germany—remember 10 years ago, eight years ago—started to get massive exportation to China for things like cars, especially electric vehicles, and solar panels and industrial equipment.

And they didn't quite think that China was going to do to them what China had done to us a decade earlier. And that is invite in a country to supply them with quality goods and plants in China and be very profitable as the Chinese mastered that craft, mastered that industry, both this material side of production and the bureaucratic and corporate management.

And when [4]China did that, they began to create German-like EVs, German-like solar panels at a much less cost and then started to export it and ruin much of Germany's export market.

What am I getting at? Germany, in terms of power, in terms of a border that has been open, in terms of about 16 % to 18 % of the population that was not born in Germany and is not fully assimilated—these are refugees. Or I don't think they're refugees—they're illegal immigrants from the volatile [5]Middle East. Most of them are Muslim. Most of them do not have an intention of assimilating, intermarrying, and integrating fully in German society.

And you add all this up—and I'm not being critical. It's very tragic because for years Germany was the powerhouse, the cohesive economic power that kept the EU together. And during the Cold War it fielded one of the best NATO armies, West Germany. Well over 400,000 troops. It's almost literally disarmed. It cannot fulfill even its meager commitments to help Ukraine. And out of this tension, if it was a normal democratic society, you would have a variety of vocal opponents, proponents, give and take, yin and yang, and there would be a lively mix-up.

And they would come to a consensus that these were the masters of nuclear power. Twenty years ago, German physicists were the top in the world—nuclear physicists. They would start investing again in nuclear power. They would start up natural gas generation. Wind and solar would be integral, but a small part, because they would need reliable, cheap energy to compete on the world market. They would join the United States and look at China and say, "This is intolerable, this system of mercantilism." They would close their borders. They would go to an assimilationist model and require immigrants that came legally to fully become Germans. They would do all of that.

But instead, when one party is advocating much of what I just talked about, they demonize it because it's out of the norm. And the norm, unfortunately, in Germany today is national suicide.

Unfortunately, this is not going to end well for [6]Germany. And it's not gonna end well for us. We need a powerful, friendly Germany. And we wish it well. But the reaction to needed reform—economic, political, social, cultural, military, diplomatic—is not to essentially ban a political party's freedom of expression. That shows weakness and fear rather than confidence in the future.

2.5.9 Would the Left Finally Explain the Inexplicable? (2025-05-12 11:25)

Somewhere between 10 million and 12 million illegal aliens were invited into the United States by the Biden administration.

As far as logistics go, former [1]President Joe Biden could not flee Afghanistan without getting 13 Marines killed and abandoning to the terrorist Taliban $50 billion in munitions, a billion-dollar embassy, and a $300 million retrofitted huge airbase.

But Biden and his handlers proved far more logistically capable when their target was [2]fellow Americans.

After all, they somehow managed to stop the congressionally approved continuance of the border wall, to subvert [3]federal immigration law, to emasculate the Border Patrol, and to ensure that millions of people around the world could simply walk into the U.S. illegally, unaudited and with impunity.

But why did Biden or his puppeteers do something so anarchic, so injurious to their fellow Americans?

Why cost the nation hundreds of billions of dollars in massive new entitlements? Why swamp the social services of our own poor citizens?

Why turn loose half a million criminal aliens and gang members to prey on our own weak and defenseless?

Was the idea to alter the demography in one fell swoop? To grow the dependent class, thereby expanding government?

Was it pure spite born of hatred of half the country?

Was it to ensure future constituencies, given that the Democratic agenda no longer appeals to most Americans?

Was it a globalist gambit to demonstrate borders are anachronistic?

Was it to fast-track new voters under the laxity of post-2020 early- and mail-in voting protocols?

Those who perpetrated the greatest ruse in American presidential history by staging the Biden presidency will never tell us what their ultimate agenda was.

They knowingly fixed the 2020 primaries to ensure a non-compos-Biden would be nominated. Under the cover of the COVID-19 lockdowns, they kept him in his basement while operatives radically altered the voting laws in the key swing states.

For the next four years, they put their waxen effigy in a hermetically sealed cocoon—one of avoidance of the press, three-day workweeks, and four-hour workdays.

Yet Biden could still not read huge-font, teleprompted scripts. He could not finish a simple call for unity without snarling, screaming, and damning his opposition as “semi-fascists,” [4]“ultra-MAGA,” and “garbage.”

Was the point to salvage the Democratic Party for one last hurrah before “[5]the squad” and the Bernie Sanders socialists inevitably took over and destroyed it?

Was that the idea behind clearing the primary field and anointing a decrepit “good ol’ Joe Biden from Scranton” veneer?

Or was it more sinister still in the sense that a debilitated Biden facade was a godsend for the Left? Did his pseudo-centrist cover ensure that his handlers—the Obama crowd, the diversity, equity, and inclusion chauvinists, and the Sanders socialists—could enact from the shadows the most radical agenda since 1933?

Will anyone ever tell us why they endangered and nearly ruined the country with a zombie president?

Why did the Left break every prior pretense of legality and of fair play in trying to wreck an entire legal system just to destroy Donald Trump?

Why did the so-called stewards of jurisprudence coordinate four local, state, and federal prosecutions to cook up 93 indictments—the vast majority of them ridiculous contortions that will never be charged against any other American?

What was behind the disastrous effort to de-ballot Trump in most of the blue states? To “save” democracy by destroying it?

Why did they twice impeach a president and then try him as a private citizen?

Why did SWAT teams swarm an ex-president’s home to carry off over 10,000 documents in order to find 102 classified files?

Why did the FBI bring their own pre-prepared classification labels? Why scatter photo files on the floor?

Had Trump destroyed subpoenaed evidence like Hillary Clinton’s emails?

Had Trump stored the files, Biden-style, at four different locations?

Had Trump earlier just flunked rather than aced the Montreal Cognitive Assessment, would special counsel Jack Smith—as did Robert Hur in the Biden file case—have dropped all the charges against Trump on the grounds he was “an elderly man with a poor memory?”

So, what was behind the four years of trying to blow up and discredit our legal and law enforcement system just to destroy Trump?

Was their goad his accent, his bombast, or his tan that so drove the elite Left into insanity?

Were they convinced they could never beat him in another election?

Did they hate him because, in his first term, he had secured the border, grown the economy, and had no wars abroad?

Or was it an unstoppable fixation, a destructive addiction?

In sum, the more he mocked them, the more they sought to destroy him—and all the more they ensured he would be president again.

2.5.10 Canada Missed Out on a Huge Opportunity (2025-05-12 11:27)

This week, [1]Canadian Prime Minister Mark Carney, who was newly elected as the prime minister with a majority of seats in the Canadian Parliament, is visiting Washington.

As I speak, he's been holding sessions with [2]President Donald Trump about the so-called trade war and Trump's trolling of him about being a 51st state. Let me just address that first.

Donald Trump did not like former Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, who did not like Donald Trump. And he was so frustrated by the surpluses that Canada kept racking up and their unwillingness to spend the required NATO 2 % of gross domestic product investment in munitions that he would troll Canada and say, "We're the same language, the same people. We could do a lot better job than this guy."

And of course, he took that very seriously. And then there was an election. Trudeau was a failure. Pierre Poilievre, the conservative candidate, had a 20-point lead. He lost it partly because Carney was the champion of Canadian nationalism and said, "We're never gonna make a 51st state. Donald Trump has no business doing—"

It's kind of like what Trump did with Panama and Greenland. It's a way of "Art of the Deal." We got China to the—we kind of made it a little bit more irrelevant in Panama. We've got some reforms going on. Same with Greenland. We were never going to invade either one.

We're never gonna make Canada a 51st state. You need a majority vote of the Congress. The Congress is never going to vote to admit Canada because [3]the Left would feel it was an infringement upon their sovereignty. We were imperialists, colonialists. The Right said, "Why do we want another New York or Colorado to screw up the country?"

So, it's not gonna happen. And Carney knew that, but he ran on it. And he whipped up nationalism. And that was fine. That's what politicians do. But now he's in a conundrum. He's got to come to the White House. Trump knows what he did. So, Trump is reminding him about the 51st state. But there's two issues and they don't look good for Canada.

No. 1 is, in 2014, all the NATO countries promised to spend 2 % of GDP. And under Trump's prodding during the first term and then the Ukraine war during President Joe Biden's term, it has frightened most of them. And there's only 8 of the 32 nations, about, that have not met their 2 % obligation. Canada's one of them. But it's one of the least cooperative of the 32 nations.

In other words, it only spends 1.37 % of its GDP on defense. It won't kick in another $40 billion to help arm it. And you could make the argument that it depends on the United States. It looks that if there's any hostile activity, cartels, they're down there in Mexico with the United States between them. And nobody is going to proverbially mess with [4]Canada when the United States has it under its nuclear shield, Alaska early warnings, you name it.

So, they know that. And they do not want to spend the money. And they're shorting their other NATO partners. And they're derelict and they're culpable.

The other thing is, they're running up $63 billion with their trade surplus with their partner. And most of it is because they have a thick, sulfurous crude oil that's in the middle of the country. And it's very convenient for them to go right across the border and sell it to us. And we like it. And we can refine it. We have the refineries that can deal with that type of difficult crude.

It'd be very difficult for them to send it all the way to their east or west ports and make the same profit. Ninety-five percent of their oil comes to us. We're a good customer, in other words. Why would they not then say, "We'll try to import more poultry, cheese, agricultural products. We can't get down to zero but let's—we can cut the trade surplus by $20 or $30 billion. You're our neighbor"?

But they didn't do that. And so, he instead whipped up—it was very successful to whip up Canadian nationalism. Very successful to win that election. But then where do you go from that? You go and see Donald Trump and you want to just say, "We're not gonna be a 51 state. We're not gonna be a 51 state"?

Does he really believe that the majority of people in Congress are gonna vote to admit Canada? Nobody wants to do that.

So, what am I getting at? He could have had a statesmanlike message both during the election and when he saw Trump. He could have said this: "Donald Trump is trolling us. We're friends with the United States. He's trying to needle us so that we spend more money on NATO and we lower our surplus, which is growing very big. And we're gonna do that. We're gonna negotiate. Don't take him serious. He's just doing this like he did to Panama. We're good friends. He kids us. We kid him."

But he didn't do that. He tried to whip it up. And it was successful. But once you whip it up and you get that hostility, then you've gotta go deal with him. And then you've gotta tell him, "I'm not gonna spend $40 billion on our defense. We're going to subsidize you on defense. And we're not gonna lower that."

That's not gonna work. It's not gonna work. And so, I think that he can say, he'll leave the meeting and say, "I told him we're not gonna be a 51st." That was an irrelevant misadventure.

It was going nowhere and he knew it.

But the two issues that he knew were important—that they should man up and pay their 2 % and help defend not only [5]NATO but the North American continent, which they had done brilliantly in the past—he didn't want to talk about. Or he'd say they'd do it in five years. "Five years, we'll do it." No, you've already been derelict for 11 years.

Or he could have said, "We don't run up big surpluses with our friends. We're not Mexico. We're much closer to you. And we're gonna work on this. And we're gonna try to import. We'll work it down. This is"—no. No.

He created his nationalist paradigm. It got him elected. And now he owns it. And it's not gonna work with Donald Trump. I wish it would but it's not because if you want to alienate the United States and you want to take seriously the "Art of the Deal" trolling and sort of laugh it off or, better yet, the Panamanians knew what they were doing. They were getting too close to China. They were surrendering partial sovereignty. And they backed off. And it's going to be a beautiful relationship with us.

But Canada just couldn't do that. And I think they will eventually.

2.5.11 California Considers Downgrading Soliciting Minors for Sex to Misdemeanor (2025-05-17 20:30)

Recently, a rather bizarre topic came up [1]here in California. There was a bill introduced in the California Legislature not to have a felony designation for men who solicit minors 16 and 17 years old for sex. In other words, the interest is in favor of the solicitor, the person who is trying to buy sex from a young person 16 or 17.

Why anybody in the world would consider that's not a terrible thing and it's not a felonious act I don't know. But I do know I live in California and anything's explicable.

In fact, the people in the Legislature made it a civil rights issue: This is unfair to gay men that they shouldn't be able to experiment, search for, solicit young boys—I think 16 and 17 is a young boy—for sex. And maybe they might be mistaken. They didn't know how old. So, why should we punish them as we do heterosexuals who solicit young girls for sex?

This is part of a larger trend. The Man/Boy Love Association has been around for years. But this is a larger effort in the homosexual radical community. Most [2]homosexual men and women are not for this. But there is a group that is that wants to legitimize sex between younger boys and older men. The word—it's an ancient practice but there's something we should remember. The word is not "pedophilia"—that means love of a boy—but "pederasty," which means a love, an eros, rather than a philia.

And it's used in ancient Greek, pederasty, to indicate a Socratic—if you read Plato's dialogues, people in those dialogues have attraction for men. But remember, Socrates was famous for not including a physical element to that affinity. In other words, he would take on as a mentor and tutor a younger man but he drew the line about sexual congress. That was not true, however, in most cases in Greece. We hear that the poet Sophocles was a pederast. It was not considered taboo. Philip of Macedon was.

In societies, in general—and it's true of the [3]Middle East and some countries and elsewhere in societies where women are suppressed or repressed and it is considered taboo to have sex with a woman before she's married—virginity is not highly prized but essential. Then men often turn to younger men for sexual gratification.

But in the West, we have a long history of trying to suppress that and feeling that it should be illegal because we are—our code, our ethics, [4]our legal system believe that someone 15, 16, 17, below the age of 18, is still impressionable. They're still not sure what their sexual orientation is. They don't know much [5]about sex. At least until recently, that was true.

And so, the state, the government stepped in and said, for those people below 18—and that's the age of consent in many states, sometimes in some it's 16—but for men, at least, below the age of 18, they shall be a protected class from older men that try to prey on them. Doesn't seem such a hard thing to ask of the gay community, is it? Just simply saying, "If you solicit sex from other men, please respect the youth of those 16 to 17."

But here in California, we're trying to repeal felony punishment for that type of activity and we want to mainstream it by making it a misdemeanor.

And what will be the net result of this legislation? It will be another tessera in this larger mosaic of green-lighting and mainstreaming something that throughout history has been very problematic. And we in the West have decided that it's not a wise thing for older men to have sex with men, boys, I should say, below the age of 18.

Seems a minor topic. But it's indicative of the general moral and ethical decline of the United States. And it's incumbent upon our leaders to draw the line somewhere and say, "We're not going to do this. We care more about the welfare and mental health of youth 16 and 17. And we do not want them subject to the sexual predations of older men. And we're ready to charge people with felonies who cross that line."

2.5.12 Trump's Middle East Strategy Is Ambitious but Also Dangerous (2025-05-17 20:32)

President Donald Trump this week had a historic tour of the Gulf monarchies in the [1]Middle East, in general.

He went to [2]Saudi Arabia and he met Mohammed bin Salman, the de facto leader of Saudi Arabia. And he cut a huge deal, which promised $600 million of Saudi investment in the United States and well over $130 or $140 million in Saudi purchase of American arms. And he sort of reset the relationship that had been tenuous during the Biden administration.

Then he went to Qatar—which is a rival of Saudi Arabia—and he met the emir. And he kind of topped the Saudi investment because they agreed to buy well over 200 Boeing 777 passengers and 787. That purchase alone could be $200 billion, with maybe a trillion dollars of investment.

At the same time, he met the de facto leader who's emerging out of the disruption and disintegration of Syria, Ahmed al-Sharaa, who's had, unfortunately, he's had a history of terrorist activity. And he'd been associated with al-Qaeda, ISIS. Kind of a nebulous past.

And the subtext of all of these meetings were: We're going to replace strife with money. We're all gonna be profitable. And we have to bring the cause of all of this trouble, Iran, into the fold of the Middle East and drop the hostility to Israel.

Notice, of course, that he didn't go to Israel, although he was trying to elicit support for the continuation of the Abraham Accords with Saudi Arabia and Qatar.

This is very ambitious but it's also very dangerous. [3]Donald Trump thinks he can cut a deal with Iran so that they would do essentially three things: They would give up their nuclear program; they would stop the subsidies to the terrorist surrogates of the Hezbollah, Hamas, and the Houthis; and they would liberalize their society and reenter the family of nations.

I don't think that Shia theocracy feels that is their agenda. I think what they're probably doing, given their prior history, they're negotiating, drawing out, and hoping they can outlast the Trump administration while they get closer and closer to 90 % enrichment.

And they don't think that Donald Trump, given the MAGA agenda that frowns on unilateral or optional military engagements, especially in the Middle East, will be willing to sacrifice or endanger what has been a spectacular first 100 days, at least in economic terms.

And so, they feel that they're going to, I think, string Donald Trump along and wait him out and then, maybe, with a Democratic administration, announce that they've reached 90 % enrichment and have a few bombs.

So, what am I getting at? There's a couple of fundamental issues here. One is that the MAGA agenda is kind of a neo-isolationist, that we don't get involved. But Donald Trump himself—as we saw the first administration and as we saw with the Houthis when he bombed them—has a Jacksonian deterrent and foreign policy. And they're coming into conflict. MAGA people do not want him to unilaterally stop the nuclear threat in [4]Iran. They would prefer negotiations. But negotiations depend on that threat.

By the same token, he's going to try to get the Saudis and the Middle East sheikhdoms to pump more oil. Pump more oil to not only bring down the price of oil worldwide but really, to be frank, to hurt Russian President Vladimir Putin's only source of income. And he feels that these two conflicts may be connected.

If he can peel away the Middle East from China and Russia and bring down the price of oil, then Putin, who, rumors have it, increasingly is short men, manpower, and equipment, and wants to make a deal with Ukraine but doesn't know how he's going to explain to the Russian people how he lost over a million dead, wounded, and missing Russians—for what? Very little in return. Can he make that argument to the Russian people?

In conclusion, Donald Trump is facing dichotomies with the MAGA agenda and his Jacksonian foreign policy. He's trying to get the Arab world to drop their hostility to Israel. At the same time, he's trying to reason—if that's the right word—with an unreasonable Iranian regime. And he wants oil to go down. I'm not sure that's gonna help him in the United States. A lot of the frackers and horizontal drillers are—as the oil has dropped—they're not at a very big profit margin. And yet, Trump wants them to spend more money and pump more and buy more rigs, etc.

So, there's a lot of things going on. But one thing that's not going on is we're not being estranged from the Arab world. We're not being estranged from Israel. This is not [5]former President Joe Biden mouthing off about the Saudis or the Israelis. It's a new type of approach that if everybody will just calm down, there's a great opportunity to make money and be profitable. And that would include the disarmament, nuclearly, of Iran and the inclusion of Israel in the body politic.

Very ambitious.

2.5.13 The Real First 100 Days (2025-05-17 20:37)

Supporters talk of “flooding the zone,” believing President Donald Trump is making so many changes so quickly that his opposition is reduced to deer-in-the-headlights infancy.

They must be right when the nation suffers daily Democrat pottymouth videos, [1]vandalism of Teslas, infantile meltdowns at congressional witnesses, rioting against federal agents to protect illegal alien felons, protesting on behalf of women beaters, M-13 gangbangers, human traffickers, and assaulters, and visa-holding violent students praising Hamas terrorists.

In contrast, opponents either claim that Trump's first three months are either directionless chaos or a [2]Hitlerian nightmare or both.

But what is really happening?

One, Trump is finally addressing the problems that proverbially "cannot go on forever, and so they won't go on."

When, if ever, would the Left have [3]closed the southern border? After 10, 30, 50 million illegal aliens?

How many more criminal illegal entrants was the Biden administration willing to allow into American neighborhoods—500,000? One million? Three million?

How long was the world simply going to ignore the human destruction on the doorstep of Europe?

Would former President Joe Biden or former Vice President Kamala Harris have [4]sought a ceasefire? Or would it have taken another 1.5, 3, or even 5 million more dead, wounded, and missing Ukrainians and Russians?

Nor did past administrations ever seek a solution to the [5]massive national debt, much less the uncontrollable budget and trade deficits.

All prior presidents passed the day of judgment on to some vague future presidency, assured that their money printing would at least not blow up on their watch.

[6]All moaned that China was piling up huge trade surpluses while denying its own population the usual modern safety net. They knew Beijing's aim was to use the trillions of dollars in trade surpluses to build a new massive military, a greater arsenal of nuclear bombs, and a new imperial Belt and Road overseas empire.

Yet no administration did anything but greenlight American outsourcing and offshoring while ignoring [7]Chinese trade cheating and technology theft.

Indeed, prior presidencies appeased and enriched China on the foolish belief that such indulgence would lead to Chinese prosperity, and with such Western-style affluence, soon a globalized, democratic, and supposedly friendly China.

In sum, we just witnessed all at once a 100-day, 360-degree effort to address all the existential challenges that we knew were unsustainable but were either afraid or incompetent to address.

Second, the administration apparently wants to confront the source of these crises and believes it is the progressive project.

The Left maintains real political power not by grassroots popularity, but rather by unelected institutional clout. The party of democracy uses antidemocratic means to achieve its ends of perpetual control.

It [8]wages lawfare through the weaponization of the state, local, and federal courts.

It exercises executive power through cherry-picked [9]federal district and circuit judges and their state and local counterparts.

The permanent bureaucracies and huge federal workforce are mostly left-wing, unionized, and weaponized by a progressive apparatus. Their supreme directive is to amalgamate legislative, judicial, and executive power into the hands of the unelected Anthony Faucis, Jim Comeys, and Lois Lerner of the world—and thus to override or ignore both popular plebiscites and the work of the elected Congress.

Over 90 % of the media—legacy, network, social, and state—are left-wing. Their mission is not objectivity but, admittedly, indoctrination.

Academia is the font of the progressive project. Ninety percent of the professoriat are left-wing and activist—explaining why campuses believe they are above the rules and laws of the Constitution, the Supreme Court, and the U.S. Congress.

Add into the mix the blue-chip Accela corridor law firms and the globalized corporate and revolving-door political elite.

The net result is clear: Almost everything the vast majority of Americans and their elected representatives did not want—far-left higher education, a Pravda media, biological men destroying [10]women's sports, an open border, 30 million illegal aliens, massive debt, a weaponized legal system, and a politicized Pentagon—became the new culture of America.

So, Trump is not just confronting unaddressed existential crises but also the root causes of why, when, and how they become inevitable and nearly unsolvable.

His answer is a messy, knock-down-drag-out counterrevolution to reboot the country back to the middle where it once was and where [11]the Founders believed it should remain.

His right and left opponents call such pushback chaotic, disruptive, and out of control.

But the [12]counterrevolution appears disorderly and upsetting, mostly to those who originally birthed the chaos; it certainly does not to the majority of Americans who finally wanted an end to the madness.

2.5.14 Biden's Enablers Never Told Us Why They Did It (2025-05-17 20:43)

Let's look at the border. [1]President Joe Biden over four years destroyed it. He defanged [2]Border Patrol and Immigration and Customs Enforcement. He stopped the congressionally approved wall. The result was 12 million people came in. They entered illegally. They resided illegally. And we have 500,000 of them suspected of criminal backgrounds. And almost every day there is a murder/rape.

But here's the question. Everybody knows he did it but nobody asked why did he do it? Why did you do the most nihilistic thing in the history of the modern presidency?

I think we're gonna live with this problem for 50 years. But why did he do it? Why did he say, "You can come in without a COVID-19 vaccination but we are gonna get rid of 8,500 of our U.S. citizens in the military who don't want to be vaccinated"? Why did he say that you need a Real ID but you don't if you're in illegally? Why?

Was it that he wanted new constituents because the agenda didn't appeal to 51 % of the population? Did he think that under early and mail-in voting protocols inaugurated in 2020 that he was gonna be able to have these people vote very quickly? Did he want to grow government and then have a bigger entitlement? Higher taxes? Did he not believe in borders? Was he a globalist?

It was so nihilistic. It was so destructive that we need to know why. Just tell us why you did it. Was it just because you hated half the country and you wanted to destroy it? You hated MAGA? The garbage, semi-fascists? Is that it?

The same existential is why do all these reporters say now, "We were in on the deal, we covered up for Biden"? "The Biden staff did it." "No, the media did it." But they all agreed that he was non compos mentis. He was cognitively challenged when he was nominated, when they cleared the nomination field out. They got rid of Pete Buttigieg. They got rid of Sen. Elizabeth Warren. They got rid of [3]Sen. Bernie Sanders. They all disappeared quickly. And then they used this waxen effigy as a veneer.

But why? That was very risky to do that. They all tell us they did it, but they don't tell us why. Was the idea that good old Joe Biden from Scranton had some conservative remnant vestigial aura about him? And then they could use him and they could tell Jill, Joe, "You get to be president but we're gonna run it."

Or was it even worse than that? They thought, "This is what we've always been waiting for. This is what [4]Barack Obama said when he wanted a third term and he could phone in a left-wing agenda from his basement without appearing in public."

In other words, it wasn't that they were stuck. They saw this as a wonderful opportunity. Use Joe Biden and just have him come in three days a week, stumble through stuff, and then push through the most left-wing, nihilistic, destructive, socialist agenda in history.

It really was, if you look at the border and crime and Afghanistan and two theater wars and the hyperinflation and the $7 trillion that he borrowed. Was that the reason why? Or were they just incompetent, they just didn't know? They were just, "I don't know. Who are we gonna nominate? Oh, Joe." They didn't think he was that bad.

But please, don't tell us that you covered it up and think that's a confession sufficient for the American people. Tell us why you did it. They never tell us why.

So, we had all these polls. They were wrong in 2016. They were wrong in 2020. They lost credibility. And then in 2024, they did it again. As I said earlier, the NPR/PBS poll of [5]then-Vice President Kamala Harris had her winning four points on the night of the election. She lost by a point and a half. They were five and a half points off.

David Plouffe, one of the insiders of the Harris campaign, said he was kind of amazed that all the polls had her ahead when their internal polls—that have to be accurate because you work from them in your campaign strategy and you pay for—not one had her ahead.

So, why would they risk their reputation and lie again in 2024 and be discredited again and give Rasmussen, Insider Advantage, and Trafalgar more and more credibility as the accurate poll? I don't have that answer.

Was it because they wanted to gin up momentum? They knew she was gonna lose. They thought if they lied, if the Des Moines Register said she was really winning when she lost by 12 points, they'd get more funding. People would say, "Gee-whiz, Trump's gonna lose. I don't wanna vote." Is that the idea?

What was it? Why do they continue to lie? They have to tell us why. It's not enough just to say, "Politics. We want power."

What was the strategy to make you do something so egregious? So egregious to destroy the border and cause so much misery. So egregious to foist somebody who was not in control of his own cognitive powers as president with nuclear codes. So destructive to try to influence a campaign by repeatedly lying that the losing candidate—who was losing the whole time—was going to win. We just want to know why.

2.5.15 Death of a Video Game Console: How Each Generation Said Goodbye (2025-05-17 21:44)

Nintendo closes out the end of an era in 2025 with the introduction of the Nintendo Switch 2 and gradual sunseting of the original Nintendo Switch. This shift in focus to the new console won't be overnight, of course, and rarely is whenever console publishers transition to a fresh generation. The first Switch generation was an especially prosperous one for Nintendo, with [1]over 150 million units shipped worldwide and counting, making it Nintendo's best-selling home console of all-time and second only to the PlayStation 2 as the best-selling home console overall.

With a player base that large, Nintendo has to be tactful how it eventually phases out its support for the Switch and maintains continued interest in its overarching brand. That makes us nostalgic too for how previous major home consoles eventually made their respective final bows, wrapping up fondly remembered eras. Here's a look back on how each major console from the past several decades ended their fan-favorite runs.

Nintendo Entertainment System

The [2]NES not only revived the video game industry in North America after its cataclysmic crash in 1983, but completely [3]dominated it into the early '90s. By 1990 the NES—along with its Japanese counterpart, the Famicom—was the [4]best-selling console ever at that time with [5]more American households having the console than PCs. As such, Nintendo's support for the NES continued long after the launch of the Super Nintendo, with Japan going as far as to continue manufacturing Famicoms for its domestic market [6]until September 2003.

Many of the last games released in the twilight years for the NES were ports of Super Nintendo titles with a significantly less intensive technical presentation. These include NES ports of Mario's Time Machine, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles: Tournament Fighters, and Wario's Woods, all released in 1994 and the last of which being the final game released for the console in North America. Over 30 years later, the NES' tenure remains one of the longest-running and most triumphant generations for any console.

Sega Genesis/Mega Drive

Also known as the Mega Drive outside of the U.S., the [7]Sega Genesis was the console that gave Sega [8]a prominent foothold in the North American market. In trying to gain a technical edge against its competitors, Sega began producing console peripherals for the Genesis, most notably the Sega CD in 1991 and Sega 32X in 1994, each with their own game libraries. Though Sega continued to produce games for the base Genesis, it saw the 32X as a stopgap effort until the Sega Saturn could be launched in 1994 in Japan and '95 in the U.S.

Unfortunately for Sega, savvy gamers already knew that the Saturn was coming. So when combined with the high price point for the 32X peripheral, they discreetly avoided it. This meant the library of 32X games released in the Genesis' final months, which included early 3D Sega games like Virtua Fighter and Star Wars Trilogy Arcade, went largely ignored. The final 32X game was 1996's The Amazing Spider-Man: Web of Fire while 1997's NHL 98 closed out the Genesis on a whimper.

Super Nintendo

The [9]Super Nintendo Entertainment System reaffirmed Nintendo's place atop the worldwide video game industry, even as it faced stiff competition from Sega and Sony. Even as the Nintendo 64's 1996 launch loomed, Nintendo continued to support the SNES in its final years. Indeed, some of the most beloved SNES games were originally released in 1996 and 1997, giving the console the fond farewell that cemented its [10]vaunted place in gaming history.

Among the memorable games released in the final stretch for the SNES were Super Mario RPG, Donkey Country 3, Harvest Moon, and The Lost Vikings 2. The last licensed game ever released for the SNES was a 1998 port of Frogger, almost as an afterthought for the console. As far as endings go, the Super Nintendo, like the SNES before it, had a great conclusion to its best-selling run.

Sega Saturn

Between the original success of the Genesis and [11]loving reappraisal of the Dreamcast, the Sega Saturn remains something of the overlooked middle child. This is in no small part because of how badly Sega handled the console's rollout for the North American market, from a surprise announcement that caught developers outside of Japan off-guard, an uncompetitive price point in comparison to the original PlayStation, and Sega of America deciding not to localize hundreds of games created by Japanese developers. With that in mind, the Saturn generation lasted four years, as Sega rushed to replace it with its successor, the Dreamcast.

This fast-tracked decision effectively hobbled the Saturn in its final year when [12]news about the Dreamcast's development leaked while Sega was still nominally supporting the Saturn in public. Console and game sales in North America cratered with only seven Saturn games released in the territory for the entirety of 1998, the last being a localization of Magic Knight Rayearth. Given the Saturn's greater success in Japan than overseas markets, Sega continued to support the Saturn after the Dreamcast's November 1998 launch, primarily through third-party titles and boxed sets, with the last game released for the console in Japan being 2000's Final Fight Revenge by Capcom.

PlayStation

The PlayStation, later rebranded as the PSX and then PS1, marked Sony's triumphant entry into the home console industry in 1994. Buoyed by its games published on compact discs, as opposed to expensive cartridges, and strong third-party developer support, PS1 became the bestselling console of its generation and the bestselling overall for its time. The PS1 continued to sell well into the subsequent generation, even well into the lifespan of its 2001 successor, the PlayStation 2.

Given the sheer number of its player base and continued flourishing third-party support, the PS1 saw multiplatform sports and licensed titles published for it through 2006, though the last North American title was published for it in 2004. The last major title for the console was arguably 2002's Final Fantasy Origins, which was just a compiled remaster of the first two mainline games in the series. Sony officially ended support for the PS1 in 2006, the same year it launched the PlayStation 3.

Nintendo 64

Though the [13]Nintendo 64 launched strongly and revolutionized the gaming industry in shifting to 3D games, it also saw Nintendo lose its global top spot in the console wars. Surpassed commercially by PlayStation, Nintendo spent the final years of the N64 focusing on development of the GameCube while extending the life and power of the N64 through its crimson Expansion Pak peripheral. This upgrade in technical performance led to some of the most impressive N64 or console games in its final years on the market.

[14]The Legend of Zelda: Majora's Mask, Perfect Dark, and Banjo-Tooie were all released in 2000, each taking advantage of the Expansion Pak boost in their own way. By 2001 Nintendo completely reprioritized its strategy to support the launch of the Game Boy Advance and GameCube, but still put out bonafide bangers like Mario Party 3 and Conker's Bad Fur Day. By 2002 Nintendo officially pulled the plug on the N64, releasing a handful of sports titles to close out the generation.

Dreamcast

Sega's final home console [15]came out the gate swinging with a launch window that included Power Stone, Sonic Adventure, Soulcalibur, The House of the Dead 2, and NFL Blitz 2000. However, the Dreamcast faced continued stiff competition from the original PlayStation along with news about development on the upcoming PlayStation 2, Nintendo GameCube, and something Microsoft was calling Xbox. With the incoming generation of home consoles reputedly more powerful than the Dreamcast, support for Sega continued to waver, with a remodeled, [16]cheaper PS1 outselling the Dreamcast during the 2000 holiday season as a final nail in Sega's console coffin.

Sega ceased releasing new Dreamcast games in North America by February 2002, closing out its support for the market with NHL 2K2 almost as an afterthought. Like the Saturn, the Dreamcast saw longer support in its native Japan, with March 2004's puzzle party game Puyo Puyo Fever closing out the generation for good. By December 2001, Sega began developing games for its former competitors, signaling a significant shift to focus on software development rather than hardware, releasing both Sonic Advance for the Game Boy Advance and Sonic Adventure 2: Battle for the GameCube that month.

Xbox

Though Microsoft's first foray into the home console industry was off to a shaky start with a hilariously oversized controller and weak launch library, it eventually outsold the GameCube. That said, the console also stands as the shortest generation to date from Microsoft, with the company rushing out its successor, the Xbox 360, almost exactly four years after the original Xbox's November 2001 launch. That means games initially intended for the Xbox were reconfigured as 360 titles, sometimes late in development, to bolster the next console's launch library.

2004 saw the strongest first-party games released for the original Xbox, including Halo 2, Fable, and Ninja Gaiden Black before Microsoft shifted its priorities. The majority of games released for the original Xbox after 2005 were multiplatform sports titles, with only three games released for the console in the entirety of 2007 and only Madden NFL 09 released for it in 2008. The original Xbox was, comparatively, a flash in the pan, with Microsoft quickly looking ahead to the future.

GameCube

The[17] GameCube era was a dark one for Nintendo as the company slid behind Sony and Microsoft in the home console industry in terms of units shipped. This decline, coupled with difficulties in developing games for hardware, meant the console saw dwindling third-party support. As Nintendo readied to launch the motion sensor-oriented Wii in the 2006 holiday season, it repurposed games originally planned for the GameCube for its successor instead.

One highlight in the GameCube's closing window was Resident Evil 4, released at the beginning of 2005 as a GameCube-exclusive before Capcom decided to port it to the PlayStation 2 by the year's end. A handful of movie tie-in games, like Ratatouille and TMNT, along with the usual multiplatform sports games, filled the gap. As the Wii quickly gained momentum following its breathtakingly successful launch, Nintendo quietly pulled the plug on the GameCube by 2007. However, one major highlight was The Legend of Zelda: Twilight Princess, a fan favorite developed as GameCube's swan song in 2006... before being delayed so it could simultaneously release as a launch title on the Wii.

PlayStation 2

Still the best-selling home console of all time, the PlayStation 2 significantly outsold its immediate competition and helped push Sega out of the hardware console industry for good. This success was also in small part due to the console featuring a built-in DVD drive and being priced competitively compared to other DVD players on the market at the time. Like its predecessor, the PS2 had an especially long lifespan, one that endured through the eventual launch of the PlayStation 4.

Leading up to the PS3 launch in late 2006, the PS2 saw the release of some of its most acclaimed games, including its port of Resident Evil 4, Shadow of the Colossus, Gran Turismo 4, Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas, Guitar Hero, Ōkami, Devil May Cry 3, and Final Fantasy XII. The last game ever released for the PS2 was Pro Evolution Soccer 2014, released in 2013. Sony ended post-release support for the PS2 in Japan in 2018, closing out its most successful era to date.

Wii

After losing industry dominance in its previous two generations, Nintendo catapulted itself back on top with the [18]Wii, which replaced the GameCube as its main home console in late 2006. With its intuitive motion controls and a robust library of games, many of the most acclaimed being console exclusives, the Wii became Nintendo's bestselling console at the time. By 2013, one year after the launch of the Wii U, Nintendo began ceasing production on new Wii consoles and cutting back online services, with the last major services discontinued in 2019.

The Wii's last real banner year was 2011, which saw the release of Kirby's Return to Dream Land and The Legend of Zelda: Skyward Sword, the latter of which being the last major console exclusive. That said, Nintendo was really focused on launching its last handheld console, the Nintendo 3DS, that year and preparing for the Wii U. Amusingly, the Wii kept receiving third-party support and new installments of Just Dance from Ubisoft until 2019.

The most successful Xbox console to date is Microsoft's sophomore effort, [19]the Xbox 360, which launched a full year ahead of its generational counterparts in 2005. Though outsold by the Wii, the 360 closed the gap between Microsoft and Sony—even as it was also ultimately outsold by the PS3. What the 360 revolutionized was a digital marketplace for games, allowing players to purchase and download titles straight to their consoles, a feature that became an industry standard.

In the years and months leading up to the launch of the Xbox One, the 360 saw its firmware updated to match Microsoft's other user interfaces while the console began incorporating its own motion sensor gameplay. Branded the Kinect, the peripheral was launched in 2010 to lukewarm response for many of its titles. Though Microsoft continued to support the 360's online capabilities until 2024, the last two major games for the console were 2012's Halo 4 and 2013's Gears of War: Judgment.

PlayStation 3

The PlayStation 3 stumbled at its 2006 launch with its significantly higher price point than the competition and complex hardware architecture, making development for the console particularly difficult. Though price cuts and cheaper models of the PS3 improved its standing, it never got close to catching up with Nintendo's highly successful Wii. As a result, Sony ended its support for the PS3 faster than it had the PS2 or PS1, shifting its focus to the PlayStation 4.

Despite Sony quickly reprioritizing itself for the PS4's 2013 launch, the PS3 saw some of its most iconic titles released in its final years. The Last of Us, Journey, and multiplatform titles like Mass Effect 3 and Grand Theft Auto V closed out the PS3 era. By 2017 Sony ceased hardware production on the PS3 and, while planning to close the PlayStation Store for the platform in 2021, fan outcry led Sony to reverse this decision, leaving online support running.

Wii U

After completely revitalizing itself and reclaiming its spot at the top of the console industry, Nintendo endured a follow-up slump with the Wii U. From its confusing launch, insistence on gameplay using the console's GamePad controller, and limited third-party support, the Wii U squandered the lead Nintendo built during the Wii era. With its muted commercial performance, Nintendo quickly got to work with the console's successor, the Nintendo Switch, which was released in 2017, five years after the Wii U's ignominious debut.

By 2015 just three years after its launch, Nintendo quietly began to reduce production of Wii U hardware, to cut costs and better prepare for the eventual Switch launch. An HD remaster of The Legend of Zelda: Twilight Princess, which was originally released to jointly close the GameCube era and launch the Wii, was the last major Wii U-exclusive release. Mirroring its initial Twilight Princess strategy, The Legend of Zelda: Breath of the Wild was released concurrently for the Wii U and Switch, with Nintendo ending production on Wii U consoles in early 2017 and terminating online support for it in 2023.

Xbox One

As alluded to in its name, the Xbox One was intended to be an all-in-one entertainment center for owners, through its broadcast television and streaming-friendly interface. It also marked the point where Microsoft lost the console market gains it enjoyed during the Xbox 360 era, outsold by both the PlayStation 4 and the Nintendo Switch. In its final years, Microsoft offered alternate models of the Xbox One, culminating in the Xbox One S All-Digital Edition in 2019, at a significantly reduced price point to entice one last wave of hardware purchases.

There wasn't a lot by way of console exclusives for the Xbox One in its sunset stages prior to the launch of the Xbox Series X|S at the end of 2020. The console saw a number of multiplatform titles, including games developed by Microsoft's subsidiaries, with Microsoft Flight Simulator 2020 being a major exception. Instead Microsoft was already focused on developing titles for PC and the Series X|S while further bolstering the library of its premium subscription service Game Pass.

PlayStation 4

Sony reclaimed its market dominance beginning in 2013 with the [26]PlayStation 4, outperforming both the Wii U and the Xbox One by significant margins as the PS4 became Sony's second best-selling home console of all time. To put things into perspective, the PS4 sold more units than the Wii U and Xbox One combined and was second only to the Nintendo Switch in its generation. And with Sony still manufacturing PS4 hardware while major developers continue to publish games for it, one could argue the PS4 era is still thriving.

In terms of the last console exclusives released for the PS4 before the launch of the PlayStation 5 at the end of 2020, the PS4 had a particularly stacked final year. The Last of Us Part II, Final Fantasy VII Remake, and Ghost of Tsushima all came out in 2020, following Death Stranding the previous year. The PS4's online support services are still very much active and the console continues to receive new games regularly, five years into the PS5 era.

Nintendo Switch

That just leaves [27]the Nintendo Switch, which launched in 2017 before growing to become the second best-selling console of all time, second only to the PS2. With the Nintendo Switch 2 coming out in June 2025, that will make the original Switch Nintendo's dominant console for over eight years, its longest console generation to date. And Nintendo has already phased out significant first-party development for Switch titles, with much of the 2020s Switch games being remasters of previous titles, like Donkey Country Returns and Xenoblade Chronicles X, or compilations like Harvest Moon.

It was 2024 that saw the last major push of console exclusives for the original Switch, predominantly from its marquee franchises. Super Mario Party Jamboree and The Legend of Zelda: Echoes of Wisdom were the last first-party titles of note for the Switch era, both released in the back half of the year. Nintendo has been building to the Switch 2's launch for some time, and it's looking to hit the ground running with one of its strongest launch libraries yet.

The Nintendo Switch 2 will be released on June 5.

2.5.16 Trump Must Avoid These 3 ‘Civilization Killers’ When Tackling the National Debt (2025-05-26 18:53)

I'd like to talk about [1]debt, debt, debt.

All during the last few days, we've heard some startling news. Moody's, the bond evaluator, for the first time in its history, since 1917, has lowered the credit rating of the United States government from Aaa to Aa1.

It didn't do that during the 2008 meltdown. It didn't do that during the Great Depression. It didn't do that during 9/11. It didn't do that during [2]the Biden years when we borrowed $7 trillion. But it did it now.

At the same time, Jerome Powell, the head of the Fed, will not lower interest rates even though there's been a good jobs report, a good inflation report, a good corporate profits report. Gross domestic product is gonna be evaluated, apparently, upward and there's been low energy cost. That mortgage is still 4.25 % Fed rate to 4.5 %. And that means mortgages are still 6.5 %, 7 %. And that housing market is slowing as a result.

And this has got [3]President Donald Trump very angry, that they're doing this, given the prior administration borrowed $7 trillion and helped run up from $29 trillion in national debt to $37 trillion, and left Trump with a $3 billion-a-day interest payment. So, he's jawboning all this and trying to get down. So, what is Trump trying to do? And is it working?

Well, he's the first president since Bill Clinton and Newt Gingrich, the speaker of the House at that time, who's talking about reducing a $2 trillion budget deficit, a $1.2 trillion trade deficit, and addressing a $37 trillion national debt. But is he actually doing it?

On the plus side of the ledger, you've got the [4]Department of Government Efficiency. And DOGE in the first 100 days has identified about $160 billion in cuts. That's encouraging if two things are following: if they can keep up that rate of identifying cuts and get up to the $500 billion or even $700 billion and maybe make 25 % or 30 % reduction in the $2 trillion deficit. And if the Trump administration exercises fiscal discipline.

The problem is twofold: that while he's addressing verbally, rhetorically the debt and the deficit, you look at the big, beautiful bill under consideration and it's going to have to pass or the Trump administration will be completely humiliated.

They need to get it through reconciliation but there are sizable increases in the defense budget from everything that's justifiable, from salaries, from an Iron Dome-like missile defense—you name it. More drones—good. But it's more money. And there's more subsidies to farmers. And there's not a lot of cuts—at least when balanced with the increases.

So, the budget deficit, for all the talk of DOGE and for all the talk of fiscal sobriety, might not actually go down. And if it doesn't go down, the Fed may not lower rates. And if it doesn't lower rates, then you still are stuck with a trillion dollars a year in interest payments. That's killing us.

So, you've got to get that down. And the way Trump has to do it is just two ways: Either cut the budget or raise taxes—which will strangle the economy—or continue the tax cuts. And hope two things: that the tax cuts—the extension—will prime the economy, along with cheap interest rates.

And the question that we all have now: Is cutting taxes on tips, is cutting taxes on Social Security, is cutting taxes on first responder, etc.—all of which Trump has mentioned—is that really stimulus as opposed to, say, accelerated depreciation investment for businesses?

I don't know the answer. But I do know, as a historian, that if you do not cut the deficit and the national debt and you have bond raters like Moody's or the Fed that will not lower interest rates, you're going to be in a crisis.

And in the antiquity—from Greece and Rome, through the Middle Ages, to the Renaissance—there were three ways of dealing with unsustainable debt and are not good. They're all civilizational killers.

No. 1: As the Weimar Republic did in Germany, you pay back what you owe in cheap dollars. They inflated the marks. And bankrupt really helped cause the depression. You can do that, pay back the $37 trillion in inflated dollars. It's not a good option.

No. 2: You can confiscate private wealth. People do that all the time throughout history. That destroys the legitimacy of the government. And it makes private investors hide their money.

When I say confiscate wealth, you can already see articles in financial left-wing journals that say, well, maybe the trillionaire, billionaire, whatever term they use, oligarchical class will get credit, some Social Security or get some kind of credit for us taking some of their 401(k) money. Something like that. That never works. It never worked in Athens. It never worked in Rome. It never worked in Renaissance Italy.

The third is the most drastic and it's a killer too and we've seen countries in South America try it. And that's to renounce the debt. Just say: You know what? All you bondholders, you guys have U.S. savings bonds—40 % of them abroad, you know, here in America—you have so much money anyway. We're just not gonna pay you back—the government. We're gonna renounce it and start from zero.

Who would ever buy a bond again if we were to do that?

So, bottom line is incumbent upon the Trump administration to make real cuts and show progress that you're reducing the annual budget deficit and more importantly, you have mechanisms to grow [5]the economy.

Final note. We have a lot of confidence—this administration—that tariffs will give revenue and maybe also help reduce the budget deficit. I’m not sure that’s happening. Only 1 % or 2 %, maybe 3 % of the $5 trillion in federal revenue today is made up by tariff income. Even with these huge new tariffs, if they’re actually reified, you might get a trillion dollars. You might get a trillion dollars over 10 years. That’s $100 billion out of $5 trillion in revenue. So, I’m not sure we can count on tariff income at all.

What we should count on is cut, cut, cut. Seek a balanced budget and grow the economy with tax cuts that encourage investment and economic expansion.

2.5.17 Jake Tapper’s Own ‘Original Sin’ (2025-05-26 18:54)

There’s a book that came out recently by Jake Tapper of CNN and Axios’ Alex Thompson called “Original Sin.” It’s about the cover-up, decline of [1]former President Joe Biden and the disastrous choice of him choosing to run in 2024, until he was forcibly ejected from the ticket.

We all have problems with this. And it’s essentially Jake Tapper—it’s a co-authored book but it’s Jake Tapper. Jake Tapper is a CNN grandee. Seven-figure salary. Kind of an iconic figure in this left-wing media outlook. But my point is this, for the last four years, again and again and again, if anybody questioned the obvious [2]mental decline of Joe Biden—his cognitive difficulties—Jake Tapper, and went on CNN, Jake Tapper tore them apart.

The locus classicus was Lara Trump, who said that he’s obviously—as early as 2020—in decline. And he suggested that she was berating him for a childhood stutter, which was absolutely ridiculous.

So, what is my point? Here is someone who promulgated the greatest cover-up in the history of the U.S. presidency—helped. And we were told that Joe Biden “was fit as the fiddle.” We had medical reports that obviously or mysteriously did not have one critical indicator that were apparent on the Trump and Obama presidential medical records releases. There was no PSA test, an indicator of the health or malignancy of one's prostate. That was a cover-up too, as we're starting to learn.

But my point is this, no one was more instrumental in berating—maybe Joe Scarborough, but other than he, Jake Tapper tore apart anybody who suggested that Joe Biden was as cognitive in decline as they saw with their own eyes and heard him. When The Wall Street Journal wrote in a definitive story, Jake Tapper wrote them off as Murdoch/Fox propagandists.

So, why are we here? Why did he write a book now? Well, the obvious answer is that Joe Biden has no power. And these media people in Washington are—they're like moths to a flame. They gravitate to power. And when you don't have power, you don't have friends. And there's no downside in telling the truth.

Why didn't Jake Tapper write this a year ago? Because he knows what would've happened. Somebody in the [3]White House would've called up and said, "Tapper, no one from CNN is gonna get a seat at a press conference. There's not gonna be any CNN interview." So he backed down.

And now in a very cowardly fashion, now he comes out and he is blaming the White House cover-up. But what he doesn't tell us is the White House cover-up would have been impossible had not CNN, MSNBC, PBS, NBC, ABC, CBS all conspired with the White House staff to downplay—not just downplay Biden's cognitive decline but attack people.

Bottom line: They had more interest in protecting this [4]left-wing administration who was using this waxen effigy of Joe Biden and for someone's purposes—we don't know who was running the country, who was giving him the autopen executive orders. We have no idea who those people are. We have a suspicion that it was the Obama crowd.

But nevertheless, they didn't care about that. They did not care about that. All they knew is that this was a left-wing agenda and it had to be preserved by any means necessary. And that included lying, lying, covering up, and worst of all, demonizing and attacking people who sought to tell the truth about Joe Biden.

And now, he wants to say—what? "I have a little humility. I may, may or not, I sort of, kind of was part of the cover-up. But now the real Jake Tapper is in this book, who's now telling truth to power." No, you're telling truth to impotence.

Joe Biden has got cancer. He is written off. He's in decline. The family is disgraced. It's easy now to write about that. It was hard and would have required intellectual courage, moral fortitude to say this when he was the most powerful man in the world.

And so, Jake Tapper, you failed that test. And you should pay a penalty. CNN should look very carefully at whether they want to retain him because this is one of the greatest acts of duplicity, moral duplicity, I've seen in my entire life. And it joins a long, long, long list of collusion, capers, conspiracy, bogus, frauds, ruses.

Jake Tapper, you should go back and see what was your position on Russian collusion? What was your position on [5]Hunter Biden laptop disinformation? What was your position on the Steele dossier? What was your position on the 51 intelligence authorities? And I think in every one of those cases, you failed the test of truth and you really did this time in the greatest cover-up in the history, as I said, of the American presidency.

And it's not over yet because we're gonna learn more and more, tragically, about Joe Biden's medical condition and to see if not just whether the cognitive disabilities of Biden were covered up, but whether his prostate metastasized cancer contributed to that and that source was also covered up.

2.5.18 Are Some Racist Slurs OK? (2025-05-26 18:56)

One reason why the public turned on [1]diversity, equity, and inclusion was its insistence that roughly 70 % of the country was stereotyped as victimizers by virtue of their skin color.

In contrast, the other "diverse" 30 % were de facto considered the victimized.

In such absurd binaries, the Left returned to the old “one drop” rule of the antebellum South, suggesting that anyone with any nonwhite ancestry was a [2]minority victim.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [3]Donate now

And once that Marxist-inspired dichotomy was institutionalized, a corollary was established that the self-declared racially oppressed cannot themselves be racist oppressors.

But human nature is universal and transcends race.

One lamentable characteristic of our species is that we are all prone to excess and crudity if not deterred, especially once civilizational restraint is lost.

We are now witnessing examples of what follows when [4]anti-white stereotyping and racism are given a pass—as long as the purveyors can claim their victimhood entitles them to bias.

Recently, WNBA basketball stars Angel Reese and [5]Caitlin Clark got into one of their now-characteristic on-court rivalries. But this time around, Reese mocked Clark as a “White gyal (sic) running from the fade.”

Reese assumes that her status as a black star grants her immunity from backlash—a privilege unlikely to be extended if the roles were reversed.

Or is her crassness a simple reflection that 60 years after the [6]civil rights movement, it is deemed cool or deservedly acceptable to use the word “white” derogatorily?

After all, loose cannon Rep. [7]Jasmine Crockett, D-Texas, in one of her accustomed racist rants, recently went after her party’s big Democrat donors, who raised a record amount of money for Kamala Harris’ short-lived campaign.

Crockett played the race card when claiming that Democrat insiders were already backing the next party nominee as the “safest white boy.”

Her racist irritation is puzzling. After all, two out of the last four Democrat presidential nominees have been African Americans.

Yet it is certainly easy to see why Crockett, who endlessly spouts off about race in congressional sessions, used the pejorative “white boy.” She knows that there are no repercussions given her race and, to a lesser extent, her gender and left-wing ideology.

Recently, a past 2018 slur resurfaced from another House Democrat, Rep. [8]Ilhan Omar, D-Minn. She had falsely claimed, “I would say our country should be more fearful of white men across our country because they are actually causing most of the deaths in this country.”

Omar’s stereotyped smear was not only racist but also factually incorrect.

The FBI’s 2018 data on perpetrators of murder, when the race of the offender was known, reveals that 54.9 % of the nation’s murderers that year were African American, who constitute about 13 % of the population.

And when the race of the murderer in rare interracial killings was known, blacks were more than twice as likely to murder whites as whites were [9]to kill blacks.

During recent controversies over [10]leaks at the Pentagon, former U.N. Ambassador Susan Rice, during the Obama administration, injected race by smearing Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth. She leveled a trifecta race/gender/sexual orientation slur—all irrelevant to the issue at hand: “Well, if you’re a white male Christian cisgender macho MAGA man, you can be as dumb as a rock and be deemed qualified to serve as Secretary of Defense.”

Rice still chafes that as a sometimes-official Obama administration spokeswoman, she serially and deliberately misled the country about the fatal 2012 terrorist attacks on the [11]American consulate in Benghazi.

In all these cases, there was no fallout from racial categorization and demonization. Again, we apparently accept the pernicious idea that those identifying as an oppressed group cannot themselves voice illiberal stereotypes.

But while our political elites and celebrities seem fixated on using racial put-downs for career advantage and personal notoriety, the people increasingly ignore their entrenched and off-putting racism.

For example, in a recent Rasmussen poll surveying public attitudes toward President Donald Trump's [12]first 100 days in office, 62 % of Hispanics voiced approval (higher than the 49 % of whites). And 39 % of blacks agreed.

One result of the 2024 campaign was that while Democrats seemed fixated on racial stereotypes, the public had moved on.

Voters increasingly see class considerations transcending race. That fact may explain why exasperated and flailing Democrats and leftists desperately seek to resurrect racial polarization instead of finding a popular middle-class agenda.

Historically, tribalism erodes a multiracial democracy.

It did when white leaders in the past expressed racist attitudes toward blacks. And it will again if black elites simply flip the paradigm and do the same.

2.5.19 Kash Patel Shuts Down the Deep State's Nerve Center (2025-05-26 18:57)

Recently, [1]Kash Patel, who's been under fire by the Left in a variety of ways, the new FBI director, he announced that he is shutting down the J. Edgar Hoover Building in Washington, D.C., where there's about 1,500 employees, as I understand it.

There was a lot of outrage. But remember that this was not his original decision. It was the decision during the [2]Biden administration of then-FBI Director Christopher Wray that this 50-year-old building was unsuitable. It was decrepit.

But what was more interesting, in addition to thinking he was going to shut down the building, we don't know where he wants to relocate the headquarters.

I would prefer—I think some of you—if he put it in Kansas City or somewhere away from the proverbial deep state in Washington. He also said he didn't understand, of the 35,000 employees, why a third were in Washington. Washington, as dangerous as it can be, does not account for a third of all crimes.

So, he's trying to disperse or recalibrate [3]the FBI. And are we going to lament the closure of that office and what it represents symbolically? I don't think so.

Robert Mueller, a former FBI director, was the head of the Special Counsel's Office. Remember that? And he had the dream team—the all-stars, a hunter/killer team—with the Left. He was almost giddy about that they were gonna get [4]President Donald Trump on Russian collusion. Forty million dollars, 20 months later, they didn't find anything.

We found all sorts of improprieties within that investigation. Andrew Weissmann and others cleaned their cellphones so that no one could see their text messages. We had Peter Strzok and Lisa Page dismissed from the investigation because of their notorious and now infamous tweets.

We had Robert Mueller go before the House Intelligence Committee and claim that he didn't know what the Steele dossier was nor what Glenn Simpson's Fusion GPS was. That was impossible. Those were the two catalysts that prompted his own appointment.

His successor was James Comey. He's in the news right now for that weird tweet where he said he was walking on the beach and he saw "8647"—get rid of Trump; or maybe, you know, kill Trump; or whatever “86” can mean, it can mean a lot of stuff—and he didn’t understand it. But he’s also got a novel coming out right now about a supposed right-wing celebrity who threatens people and then something happens to the people he threatened. Was this a stunt for his book? I don’t know, but it’s in line with his character.

He went before the same House Intelligence Committee on 245 occasions. He pled either “I don’t know” or “I can’t recall” or “I don’t have that information” or “I shouldn’t give you that information.” Two hundred and forty-five times.

He was the one that set up Michael Flynn and bragged about how naive Michael Flynn was not to have an attorney when he sent agents in to ambush him on the Logan Act. My gosh, nobody ever invokes that.

He was the person who lied to Donald Trump and said, “We don’t have an investigation of you, Mr. President.” And then he went out and recorded that conversation. He did have an investigation. And then he had a third party leak it to The New York Times.

He was the one who hired Christopher Steele. He was an FBI contractor. They used the Steele dossier, which was fraudulent, to get FISA court warrants to, I think, improperly and unlawfully spy on people like Carter Page. That same office gave us Kevin Clinesmith, the FBI lawyer who doctored a FISA email to spy on Carter Page.

That same office then gave us the successor to James Comey, interim Director Andrew McCabe. He lied four times, the inspector general said, to federal authorities and three of them were under oath, which was a basis for his firing.

He was followed by [5]Christopher Wray. Why was he spying on parents at school board meetings? Why was he spying on what they called “radical-traditional Catholics”? Why did they go after abortion protesters, but not in the same way people who were protesting pro-life?

And why did they do the Mar-a-Lago raid? Why did they go in there with props and special files and scattered the files on the ground, where they were not there when they came, and then take pictures of them and add a little “classified”? Why did they take away 13,000 documents? And out of the 13,000 documents, they only found 102 that were classified, 0.007 %. I could go on with Christopher Wray. This is what he gave us.

He had the chief counsel, James A. Baker, of the FBI working with Twitter and Facebook to suppress news of Hunter Biden’s laptop. The laptop was authenticated by Christopher Wray’s FBI. They kept it silent while 51 supposed intelligence authorities said that it was Russian disinformation. Why didn't the FBI say, "No, it's not. We've authenticated it for over a year"? Why? Why? Why?

Add it all up—Mueller, Comey, McCabe, Clinesmith, Christopher Wray, Strzok, Page—and I think it's been a very good but overdue thing to close down that Washington office and close a sad chapter in the history of a once-great agency.

2.5.20 Trump's Approach to Foreign Policy Draws Criticism, But Delivers Results (2025-05-26 18:59)

[1]President Donald Trump just wrapped up a very successful tour of the Middle East Gulf states and touched upon the tense negotiations with Iran, touched upon the Russian/Ukraine war, in addition.

And he took that occasion of being overseas, quite irregular, to blast the prior administrations. I think he was talking specifically about the George W. Bush administration as a faulty foreign policy administration, in the sense that they were nation-building. He blasted neoconservatism. He said that they tried to interfere in the internal affairs of traditional societies.

There's all an element of truth to that. But it elicited a lot of criticism. Elliott Abrams has been blasting Trump. Rich Lowry has been blasting Trump.

What is their criticism? Their criticism is that his traditional Jacksonian foreign policy—no better friend, no worse enemy; intervening on the behalf of allies; trying to win over neutrals; punishing enemies; not engaging in optional [2]Middle East wars; retaliation only, as in the first term, get rid of Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, get rid of Qassem Soleimani, get rid of the Wagner Group, etc., but not insert troops on the ground—that has morphed, according to his critics, now into a mercantile foreign policy where the chief element is to make money and not to have any idealistic element.

But I would say that just because Donald Trump didn't mention idealism and that we were supporting democratic institutions, doesn't necessarily mean he's not doing that.

What he's emphasizing is that there is a common bond in the world. And that common bond is in the heart of everybody. They want peace and they want prosperity and they want security. That's not necessarily antithetical or exclusionary of freedom because, obviously, economic ability—the ability to make money and the ability to be secure—often has an element of what? Freedom.

And so, Donald Trump's idea about foreign policy I think is the following: If you get people to agree on particular elements, barometers of peace, and you engage with them economically, then they will see that it's to their advantage not to commit terrorism or war but to try to mutually profit.

And how does that work throughout the world in these conflicts?

One: In the Ukrainian war, he's suggesting there be a DMZ between the two sides that are now fighting. They disengage. There'll be a commercial corridor where foreign entities have concessions to mine rare earths and sanctions are lifted. And then Russia and Ukraine stop this insane war where there's 1.5 million casualties and counting aggregate on both sides.

In the Middle East, he's saying to the Middle East: Under the Abraham Accords, if you make a deal with Israel, it's gonna be beneficial for everybody. You will tap into Israeli expertise, technology. Your oil money will be able to purchase artificial intelligence, biotech, genetic engineering, all of these wonderful things. And you have a Western country right near you.

And he is telling Iran—and this is where the criticism arises: We don't have any preconditions. All you have to do is stop subsidizing a now-defunct Hezbollah and Hamas. That should be easy for you. You've lost your concession in Syria. The Houthis are now under duress. Just stop it. And you don't need to enrich uranium because you have a hundred years' supply of conventional fossil fuels for electricity production.

But he didn't mention that the Gulf countries must reform. And they must democratize. And they must honor [3]human rights. I think it's implicit that he wants them to, but he didn't say explicitly. And that's where the criticism came.

But let me just finish by asking, I don't believe in a Manichean foreign policy, but what's the opposite of that?

We had [4]then-President Joe Biden go over to Saudi Arabia and beg during the 2022 midterms that the royal family begin to pump oil. And why did he do that? Because he insulted them and said that they were basically "a rogue dictatorship" because of the incident where a person—they had a critic killed, Jamal Khashoggi, in the Turkish Embassy, etc.

What was the net result? Did we have better relations? Was there greater peace?

And he's criticized the Netanyahu government—Biden did—and said that they had to have a coalition government, they were not democratic enough. What was the net result? Did that make us closer with Israel? Did it moderate Israel? Israel's already a democracy.

And to be frank, Donald Trump has been much more critical of the Zelenskyy government than Biden and the Left have. Donald Trump has said the following: "You have outlawed a free press. You have outlawed habeas corpus, in most cases. You haven't had free elections. And you've banned opposition parties. And yet you criticize Israel. And you make demands and try to remove the Netanyahu government."

So, what am I getting at? [5]The Left is not consistent in their advocacy of human rights because they give a complete pass to Ukraine.

What Donald Trump is trying to say is: Let's just not get into politics. Let's not get into offending foreign leaders. Let's just start with a blank slate. And when we see hot spots around the world, we want to help our friends, win over our neutrals, punish our enemies if they won't change. And one way that we can do that is not to lecture them but to create economic matrices, nexuses, in which people find that it's in their vested interests to profit rather than to kill people.

Should he mention human rights from time to time? Yes. Should he say that the United States' realist policy is more than just mutual property? Yes. But it doesn't change the actual fact: He's had more success getting to a ceasefire in Ukraine and more success in the Middle East than the prior administration under whose watch two theater wars broke out and we had the disaster in Afghanistan.

I don't need to go back to prior administrations. But I don't think people feel, in retrospect—even as a reaction to 9/11, which was needed—that the Afghan War and the Iraq War, in a cost-benefit analysis or humanitarian analysis for either us or for the people we tried to help, were a success.

2.5.22 Trump's Approach to Foreign Policy Draws Criticism, But Delivers Results (2025-05-26 19:12)

There's this controversy about the 747 airplane that Qatar gave to [1]President Donald Trump. And there's a lot of backstory, subtext to it that we haven't really pondered.

[2]The Left says that it's unethical for the Trump Foundation to eventually get possession of it. But let's just break it down very quickly.

Qatar has this huge 2013 747. It doesn't seem to want it. It's been on the market since 2020 and there were no takers. It gave its twin to Turkey, free of charge.

What I'm getting at is a 747 is an obsolete aircraft unless you're the United States. And we have two, both of them nearly 40 years old. And we're trying to build two new ones that Boeing is retrofitting.

But if you're Qatar, the idea that you're going to use this kind of older plane and get mechanics and the fuel costs, it's not an economic viable plane. And they were trying to unload it to Turkey, which took it, and to us. Donald Trump is going to have the Air Force take it.

Here's the other thing that's important. Sen. Markwayne Mullin from Oklahoma has alleged that these negotiations about receiving the plane actually began during the [3]Biden administration.

I don't know if that was true. But it would be logical because the two Boeings that Donald Trump had authorized before he left office in 2021 were never really finished. Boeing sort of dragged on and on. The Biden administration didn't press them. And they may not be done until Donald Trump is out of office.

So, what are we talking about? We're talking about getting kind of a white elephant airplane from Qatar. It's very elaborate. If we get it, we'll probably have to spend the same cost as the Boeing. It would have to be updated with suitable communications, suitable security apparatuses, and refueling capability. Maybe it would be another $500 million to $1 billion to get this.

Will it be done before Donald Trump leaves office? I doubt it. So then it hinges on, well, what is Donald Trump going to do with it after he leaves office? He says his foundation is going to have it.

Remember when former President Ronald Reagan set up his library, his 707 that had been used, subsequently, by Presidents George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush and Bill Clinton was given to the Reagan library. And he didn't use it. It was defunct at that point. And it's there today as a museum piece.

Do people really think that when Trump leaves office this sort of white elephant 747 that looks like the interior of the Titanic is going to be flying the Trump family around? They already have a 757, this really expensive plane to maintain and to fuel. And it may or may not be retrofitted in time.

So, there's only one ethical question, and that is, if the Trump Foundation really wants it, I don't think it'll be economically viable to use, but they should just announce in advance that it will be a museum piece and all of the controversy will be ended.

I'd like to end, though, on another aspect. The Left is really pressing the Trump family on conflict of interest: the cryptocurrency companies that they're involved with; Jared Kushner's dealings with some of the Gulf monarchies; the Trump companies cutting deals in the [4]Middle East with golf courses, hotels, etc.

It would be very wise—because Trump is at a critical point in his administration where he cannot bleed anything—to have an informal ethics adviser, in my opinion. And just to reassure this predatory media—not that you have to cater them or not that you have to listen to them—but just someone in the administration, an ethics czar, that advises all of the Trump family and associates to make a firewall between them and presidential assistance.

And this is especially important because one of the reasons that Donald Trump was elected, he made a very convincing case that the Biden consortium was absolutely corrupt: the Burisma money to Hunter Biden; the laptop text that incriminated the entire family; the bogus checks that said “loan repayment”; the inexplicable three homes of [5]former President Joe Biden; the $35 million that came from places as diverse as Ukraine, Romania, and China.

Given all that and how it hurt Biden, it would be wise for Donald Trump to make sure that the plane—which, again, is a white elephant—stays as a museum piece in his foundation when it's turned over from the U.S. Air Force, if that's going to happen, to the Trump Foundation.

And secondly, have someone in the White House just advise everybody that if they're going to do business, it has to be separate from and distinct from the foreign policy initiatives of the administration.

2.5.23 No-Fault Divorce: America's Divorce Mill is Marxist-Leninist Democratic Party (2025-05-29 14:25)

What is no-fault divorce?

When you ask most people, they will say it's a mutual-consent process, or that it preserves privacy, or that it eliminates blame for the failure of the marriage.

Not many people will answer that it's a lawsuit in which one party is suing the other party. And even fewer will know that it came from the Soviet Union.

Like previous divorce actions, no-fault divorce is still a lawsuit, which means that one party is invoking the state's police powers against the other party. The main difference now is that the person filing for divorce no longer has to provide a reason for why they're doing it. This type of lawsuit is unique; it's the only type of legal action devoid of any 'claim' (complaint), and if the party being sued doesn't know the complaint, then there's no possibility of a defense.

As for the communist origins of no-fault divorce, a 1975 law review article by Donald M. Bolas entitled, "No Fault Divorce: Born in the Soviet Union?" explains how, after speaking with Russian lawyers, he stumbled upon how Soviet divorce law may have influenced our own laws.

Bolas explains that when the Bolsheviks took over in 1917, religious marriages were no longer recognized by the state. Marriage became a “state action” and divorce became merely an administrative process known as Russian Post Card Divorce. One spouse simply filled out the paperwork at city hall and the other party was then notified by mail that they were no longer married. Some people married twenty times. There was also a ‘free love’ bureau where people could sign up for partners.

The fact that this type of law increases the divorce rate is proven every day in the United States. Since the onset of no-fault divorce, the divorce rate doubled with one divorce granted for every two marriages that take place. In terms of sheer numbers, approximately a million divorces are finalized each year, translating into 3,000 divorces every day.

How coincidental that the U.S. divorce rate is among the highest in the world, vying only with Russia!

Another interesting fact about no-fault divorce is how strikingly similar its underlying thinking is to abortion law. In fact, laws dealing with both subjects were being drafted at the same meeting. This is how it all began.

History

In 1970, a national group of lawyers gathered for their annual meeting at the Colony Motor Hotel in Clayton, Missouri, just outside of St. Louis. At this meeting, two new ‘model’ laws were being drafted and debated. These laws would serve as ‘blueprints’ for state legislators around the country to enact as state laws. The purpose was to create more uniformity in state laws. One of these laws was called the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act (UMDA) and the other was the Uniform Abortion Act (then, in 1973, Roe v. Wade overturned all state abortion laws).

A common theme found in both of these debates was the word viability and this word would be operative in rationalizing both of these laws.

In the case of abortion, the discussion revolved around the viability of the human life, meaning its potential for survival outside the mother. The divorce debate was similar: a marriage could be terminated “on the basis that it no longer is a viable institution,” according to the transcripts that have been preserved from these debates.

Using viability as the operative term would soften the discussion on divorce, or abortion, making these new laws more palatable to the public. This way of thinking would also help cover up the truth so we wouldn't have to 'look' at the reality: that both are really destructive acts. One act destroys the product of the one-flesh union while the purpose of the other act is to destroy the one-flesh union itself.

During a pregnancy, we now are able to 'see' the reality of life due to technical advances. However, in the case of marriage, there isn't any test. One person's word suffices. Judges and lawyers don't check for vital signs in the marriages, which assumes they are all dead on arrival.

The label given to this new type of divorce is something of a misnomer. The term 'no-fault' came into the vernacular with the introduction of 'no-fault' car insurance. The rationale behind no-fault car insurance was to move cases more quickly into 'settlements.'

The same is true for no-fault divorce because now the emphasis is on moving cases into mediation where settlements are supposed to be reached, conveniently skipping the step of determining viability. Once a petition for divorce is filed, the marriage is essentially doomed, since no one checks for any pulse.

The term "no-fault" has served masterfully to cover up something that is far more sinister. The idea that the State is forcing people out of their marriages is hard to fathom but because every divorce petition is granted, and none are ever denied, then there are certainly a few viable marriages that meet an untimely death.

Conciliation/Reconciliation

Before the onset of no-fault divorce there was a burgeoning activity around the country called the Conciliation Court Movement with the focus on marital reconciliation. This movement began in 1939 when California enacted its Children's Court of Conciliation Law in order to:

... protect the rights of children and to promote the public welfare by preserving and promoting family life and the institution of matrimony, and to provide means for the reconciliation of spouses and the amicable settlement of domestic and family controversies.

By 1970, Conciliation Courts were operating in Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Montana, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon and Wisconsin, using a growing body of knowledge and techniques to help restore family life. But now, such lofty goals cannot be found anywhere in our statutes.

When no-fault divorce entered the picture, the emphasis in conciliation courts soon changed to 'divorce with dignity.' Settlement negotiations took place under the auspices of a mediator who assisted the courts in keeping the conveyor belt moving.

Is there another possibility? Can distressed spouses find 'relief' for their anguish? Could we create Marriage Support facilities that operate in the same way as the Pregnancy Support facilities that offer another answer than abortion? Marriage Support facilities could do the same thing by offering couples the help they need to stay together.

In many ways, the Church might be the perfect home for these facilities. Tribunal offices could incorporate the Conciliation Court model, summoning couples from the civil courts. At this time, spouses are typically directed to Catholic Charities, but this is not enough because the problem requires a blending of both legal and pastoral initiatives.

Also needed are skillful practitioners who are trained in multiple fields. Working with a dyadic relationship is much harder than working with one person individually. Not many practitioners can handle such a challenge without bringing their own biases into the work.

By all appearances we are a nation that wants to defend traditional marriage, as evidenced by the number of state constitutional amendments that have passed. The next step is to protect marriages from being destroyed in this country's no-fault divorce mills.

2.5.24 If You Think the GOP Is Screwed Up, Check Out the Democrats (2025-05-29 14:44)

You may feel terrible about being a member of the Republican Party because it's the stupidest party in American politics until you remember that the Democrat Party exists – and no, the Libertarian Party is not actually a party; it's the motley crew of pot-addled sophomores holding forth in the dorm suite common area at 2 a.m. of American politics. For all the failures, foibles, and follies of the inept GOP, the current Democrat Party is much, much worse off. I mean, just look at them. They're treading water in a swamp of narcissistic mediocrity, abandoned by former allies like the working class, controlled by over-credentialed echo-chamber neurotics, and in thrall to a coalition of sexually confused neo-Marxist weirdos, losers, and mutations.

You really gotta hand it to them – we couldn't imagine a party more inept than the Republicans, but the Democrats have managed to prove us wrong. They're coming off a disastrous last few years where they installed a human eggplant as their party leader, a president whose growing senility was built on a solid foundation of a half-century of being an idiot. This guy wrecked the economy, threw open the borders, and managed to get a bunch of Americans killed by some of the few remaining Third World savages that he hadn't already invited into our country. Then, after four years of nonstop babbling about "Our Democracy," the donkey politburo pulled his card following a disastrous debate where the best thing you could say about his performance was that he didn't soil himself, at least as far as we know.

They replaced him with Kamala Harris, a woman of towering unaccomplishment who was so dumb that they wouldn't even let her talk to the fawning media until they basically had to, at which point she demonstrated why they wouldn't let her speak to the media in the first place. She blew her most important decision, selecting her running mate, by [1]channeling Harvey Korman and not picking Josh Shapiro. Instead, she invited Tim Walz to prance out onto the national stage, purportedly because he could attract men, proving once again that context is everything.

The Democrat Party has become utterly feminized, its leadership a collection of Chardonnay-swilling, SSRI-gobbling, urbanized pinko crones – and that's just the ones who identify as male. The allegedly female ones – let's not even get started with the party's bizarre trans obsession – are mostly middle-aged, naggy Karens with sour apple doll faces and the conviction that Gaia has instilled in them the duty to ensure that the manager hears about how America is misbehaving. The exception is the phony likes of Jasmine Crockett, whose transformation from articulate, educated young lady to finger-wagging, ghetto-fabulous stereotype is just plain embarrassing. It says a lot – and nothing good – that harpies like these run the Democrat Party.

Naturally, that repels anyone with descended testicles. The Democrats have now realized that they have a man problem, starting with the fact that they hate men – real men, the kind who like beer and guns and God and America. Like Hollywood is always trying to push glum, hefty shrews like Lena Dunham and Amy Schumer upon disgusted and appalled moviegoers, the Democrat Party seems obsessed with the idea of forcing flaccid phonies like Walz and Pete Buttigieg down our throats, thereby redefining manhood into something that has nothing to do with manhood. Just look at fey X influencer Harry Sisson; despite his fumbling online catfishing, he's less a masculine role model than a sassy sidekick. They put David Hogg in as a DNC vice chair, at least for a little while, presumably to capture the loyalty of the key "males who yearn to be disarmed and neutered" demographic. As many men appeared at the polls to vote for "Shotgun Tim" Walz as Tim Walzes appeared for deployment.

Stunningly, their femboy ploy has failed, and the Democrats remain utterly baffled by how to appeal to people with penises. Naturally, their bright idea is to throw money at the problem. They're dunning the usual billionaires to pony up some cash to find themselves a comparable podcast voice to Joe Rogan and similar new media influencers, except you can't buy authenticity. Cue visions of Steve Buscemi showing up [2]to greet his fellow kids: "Young male-identifying persons, like you, I enjoy a hearty brew, video games, and sportsball."

But it gets even better. According to [3]the New York Times, the ace anthropologists of the Democrat Party have decided they need to perform an in-depth study of what makes men male and how to communicate with these backward primitives:

"The prospectus for one new $20 million effort, obtained by The Times, aims to reverse the erosion of Democrat support among young men, especially online. It is code-named SAM - short for 'Speaking with American Men: A Strategic Plan' - and promises investment to 'study the syntax, language and content that gains attention and virality in these spaces.' It recommends buying advertisements in video games, among other things."

They have tried this stuff before, with [4]hilarious results. Say what you will about the Republican Party, but at least it's not squandering its sweet, sweet cash on syntax studying - which is too bad because I totally would've taken its money and built that wine cellar I've been wanting. Oh well, I'll give you the 411 for free, GOP: Don't be sissies.

Shhhh, do not share this valuable advice with the Democrats!

Oh, go ahead. They won't listen. In fact, their proposed solutions indicate that they don't even understand the problem. They seek to find a lefty podcast superstar and "gain attention and virality" not to learn about what men actually want but to find better ways to tell men what to want. Here's the challenge for the Democrats - they want to appeal to the people who their ideology has driven away without changing their ideology. They're offering normals the same reeking dung as always, just polished up.

Have you ever heard a single Democrat explain which of their prized political positions they're willing to compromise, much less abandon, in order to reach out to the people they've alienated? The voters they've lost didn't wander away and head towards Trump because he's shiny. They left because they don't like the things the Democrats stand for. So, what do the Democrats propose to change to get them back? Are they going to moderate their jihad against babies? Are they going to keep naked dudes out of girls' locker rooms? Are they going to start putting criminals in jail instead of back on the street? Will they quit trying to take our guns? Will they stop trying to steal our money to pay off the debts of blue-haired gender studies graduates? Will they cease their efforts to make us stop barbecuing and driving trucks in order to appease their angry weather goddess? Are they going to quit talking about how America sucks and how Americans are white nationalist racists of racism?

Of course not. Their offer is nothing. They're not going to do any of these things because these are all sacred tenets in their secular pagan religion. To them, holding these stupid positions makes them good people. It's what distinguishes them from the masses. To ask them to change is to ask them to give up their identity as well as the moral high ground, so their plan is to hector and pester more intensely so that normal people will submit.

This brings us to the key difference between the current Republican Party and the current Democrat Party. It's the difference between bottom-up and top-down evolution. The current Republican Party changed over the last 20 years in the direction that normal people wanted. The GOP base got sick of useless hacks like the Bushes and Mitt Romney, guys mostly concerned with gentlemanly managing decline and went with the guy who got the things they wanted done while owning the libs. But the Democrats did the exact opposite. The Democrat Party doesn't want to be led by the voters; like all good communists, its leadership considers themselves the cadre who will lead the masses. The Democrats are finding out what happens when you give a revolution and nobody comes.

Fortunately for us, they can't change direction anytime soon. They have dug themselves into a hole, and they're still digging. We've seen it before. After their 1968 loss, the Democrats decided that the voters were wrong, and they should tack super-hard to the left. They were destroyed in 1972. After their 1980 loss, they decided the voters were wrong, and they should tack super-hard to the left. They were destroyed in 1984. After their 2024 loss, they will decide the voters are wrong and that they should tack super-hard to the left once again. They will convince themselves that it's a great idea to nominate AOC or Buttigieg or some other spazzy clown who is extremely popular in Manhattan's Upper West Side, Scat Francisco, and the Harvard faculty lounge (if there's anything left of it when Trump gets finished with it) but who repels and disgusts normal people. They will get destroyed in 2028.

And you know what? Good. Because the only way a party as stupid as the current establishment Republican Party can win is if it's competing against a party as stupid as the current Democrat Party.

2.5.25 DEI Enthusiasts Allowed the Free Palestine Movement to Get This Far (2025-05-29 14:45)

Recently, two Israeli diplomatic employees in Washington, Yaron Lischinsky and Sarah Milgrim, [1]were shot. Apparently, the killer, Elias Rodriguez, emptied his handgun and fired off 21 rounds, killed them almost instantly, and then ran into the museum where they were working and started to act as if he was a victim until he shouted out “Free Palestine.”

And what are we to make of this? I think what we’re seeing throughout the United States right now is a lowering of the bar of what’s acceptable in terms of violence.

We saw that Luigi Mangione became a cult hero to the Left because he, in a premeditated fashion, killed a UnitedHealthcare executive, shot him down in cold blood on the specious excuse that they were overcharging people. But he became a hero.

And we saw that [2]Kilmar Abrego Garcia—who beat his spouse, threatened to kill her, apparently, she thought he was gonna kill her; and was an illegal alien and had, at one time, deportation orders; and was a member, pretty clearly, of an MS-13 gang; and was engaged in human trafficking; and was deported—became a cult hero to the Left.

We had an incident in Texas where a young teenager stabbed another one and then he became a victim. No need to go into the details.

We had the two assassination attempts. And I think, if you collated the social media content of those two killers, it was pretty much, to [3]the Left, kind of reminiscent of the shooter of Rep. Steve Scalise and the wounding of others who was a Sen. Bernie Sanders—what am I getting at?

There has been a general lowering of the bar, as I said, of what’s acceptable violence. And we saw that with the Tesla excuses and contextualization when somebody ran somebody off the road or destroyed a charging station or firebombed a station—even the media reports of the tragic deaths.

I was reading today an NPR account. And after about six paragraphs, they get uneasy describing the murder. And they just have to, they just have to put something in. And they do. And they say, “And this was during a period of tensions,” because of the people getting killed in Gaza. In other words—just a little bit—how can we get in there to justify this in some ways or contextualize it?

So, that is one thing that's happening. And that makes violence more permissible. The other is [4]this endemic antisemitism.

Let's be honest. It's not some cowboy in Wyoming in 1950 that doesn't like Jews. We're talking about two nexuses that come together and promulgate antisemitism. The one is wealthy people in the universities—many of them DEI, but not all—who feel that it's either en vogue or, as DEI people, they cannot be criticized as victims for victimizing others, meaning foreign students from the Middle East.

And in that cauldron, it becomes permissible to say, "Globalize the intifada," "River to the sea," the eliminationist rhetoric about Israel, storm a library, chase Jews into a library, damage the president's office, rough up a Jewish kid on campus. It was all acceptable. There were no consequences. That's why those three college presidents either were fired or had to resign.

So, what we're seeing is that the unhinged come out of the woodwork because the general climate rewards that type of behavior.

So, Rodriguez thought, A) If I use violence, in this case, bring a gun into Washington, D.C., from my home in Chicago, and I have good, firm left-wing credentials—his father was asked to be a guest at the Trump speech by a left-wing congressman, [Jesus] Garcia from Illinois. So, he comes in and he knows that if he shoots and murders someone, there's going to be a lot of people who will praise him or at least excuse what he did, No. 1.

And No. 2, he's killing Jews. So, he knows on campus that one of the Harvard Review people roughed up a Jew and was given a $65,000 honorarium scholarship from one of the groups that sponsors Harvard Law School.

Bottom line: This is gonna continue until somebody says, "We're not gonna put up with it anymore. You're not gonna be a foreign student and come over to the United States on a student visa and spout hateful rhetoric and torment Jews and make it uncomfortable. And you're not gonna be one of these elite students who crashes into the president's office at Stanford or crashes into a building at Columbia and thinks there's no consequences."

And that's why [5]President Donald Trump is trying to shock treatment to the universities to say: You don't know what you're doing. You're a global embarrassment, that you permitted and you have fueled antisemitism. And the Left's atmosphere, anyway, is to condone violence when it's used for revolutionary purposes.

Add it all up and we get two wonderful people murdered in D.C.

2.5.26 The Truth About South Africa's Anti-American Agenda (2025-05-29 14:46)

We've had another "ambush" in the White House. Ambush, remember, means an unexpected attack on someone from a secretive place. That was not an ambush. Cyril Ramaphosa, the president of [1]South Africa, wanted that meeting with President Donald Trump. He requested it. And when he came in, he was prepared to refute Donald Trump.

In fact, if you look at the media before the meeting, they didn't use the word "ambush." They were giddy. They thought, "Wow, he's going to give Trump a bill of goods." What he didn't think was that Trump was ready for the bill of goods and had his own bill of goods.

But here's the real backstory to the whole thing. Why did he want to meet Trump? He wanted to meet Trump because he had a free trade agreement with the United States with no tariffs placed on South African agriculture—everything, metals, everything. And he was running a $9 billion surplus. And in addition to that, he was getting $500 million in foreign aid from the United States.

And in addition to that, his ambassador had just been fired or expelled by [2]Secretary of State Marco Rubio. Why? Because in a performance art fashion, he made a video and said Donald Trump was a white supremacist. This is the ambassador, just before this visit, not too long earlier. And then said that he was part of a white victimhood movement. So, they kicked him out. Was he embarrassed? No. He had a hero's welcome when he went back.

And then we have the larger context of South Africa. It usually votes at the United Nations against the United States. It's signed onto the International Criminal Court's farce that was going to arrest Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu as a war criminal. We had the video that was shown about the leader of the third-largest party in South Africa saying that they wanted to "kill the Boer, kill the farmer" to a big crowd.

And by the way, the year before—he said that in 2022—something called the South African Equality Court declared that "kill the Boer, kill the farmer" is not hate speech. I don't know what hate speech is in South Africa if it's not kill a designated minority.

And so, when you look at all of this, Donald Trump got sick of it. And he said, this country, we don't have any problem with it. We don't hate South Africa. But they're not our friends. This is not Nelson Mandela. This is not the age of conciliation. This is not the South Africa with such promise 30 years ago. This is a racist state. It's one of the most violent countries in the world. And it's one of the most anti-Western and anti-American.

And so, when Ramaphosa came to set [3]Donald Trump straight, Donald Trump said: You know what? I don't think you like us. So I'm not gonna give you $500 million in foreign aid. You know what? I don't think you like us because you think I'm a white supremacist, so we're not gonna give you free trade into our markets. We're gonna charge 30 % tariff. You know what, you know, your ambassador—all you guys come over here, you don't like us, you think that the left-wing foundations, the left-wing media, the left-wing universities are running the country, the left-wing—but they're not. They're not. So, when you come over here and attack us and call us racist, maybe you shouldn't come over here. You know, just have a little peace. Maybe all your foreign students, your green card holders, your visitor visa—maybe we should just have a little cooling off period.

And so, what Donald Trump was saying is that this is not the South Africa that we used to know. But it was running on the fumes of Mandelaism. At the [4]United Nations, it's hostile to the United States. It takes advantage of the free trade agreement to run up a $9 billion surplus. It gets $500 million in aid. And it shows no gratitude. It attacks us. It attacks us.

And then when we try to say that you have a law that is going to appropriate land without compensation, you deny that you're doing it. That was the whole purpose of it. No compensation. You can say, "Well, it was for public domain," but everybody knows that. So, everybody who confiscates land does it for the public, but they compensate people, except you.

And finally, you know, you want internet. You want internet like Ukraine has. You want internet like remote places in Asia and Africa have. And you want, therefore, Starlink. And you think that [5]Elon Musk is a native son, so you're going to invite him in and have Starlink. But you can't even do that.

You say, "You can come in. We'll give you the privilege to come into our market," as if Elon Musk needs that. "But we're gonna take a third of your company and your franchise here in South Africa. And it has to be staffed, partnered with people who are of a particular color, black people."

And Elon Musk says, "I think I'll pass on that nice invitation." And then they get very angry. And now they'll probably bend.

Final word, I think Ramaphosa will be—I don't think Donald Trump will visit South Africa, but I guarantee you Ramaphosa will want another meeting, like Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy did.

And he will come in and he will say, "Please take away the 30 % tariff. Please give us the $500 million handout in foreign aid. Please let all the South Africans, not just the 48 people—and who, by the way, whom he called cowards because they didn't want to play the lottery whether they were gonna get killed or not—but let all of us come back in. Please. Please. Please. And we promise that we'll not allow people to pack stadium, say, 'Kill the Boer, kill the farmer,' and say, 'That's not hate speech.'"

2.6.1 The Lasting Damage of the George Floyd Riots (2025-06-03 14:23)

This week was the fifth anniversary, May 25, of the tragic death of [1]George Floyd.

It seems that it just happened but it was actually five years ago. And almost everything that has transpired after that in terms of racial relations has been disastrous. And now, maybe at the end of five years, we can look back with a little bit more circumspection and see what actually happened.

George Floyd was a career felon. He was in the process of trying to pass off counterfeit bills. He was reportedly under the influence of severe, powerful drugs, perhaps fentanyl, in addition. He may have been suffering from post-COVID-19 syndromes. He had a heart condition. One of his prior felonies was putting a gun to a woman's belly in a home invasion.

Nevertheless, when he tried to pass this counterfeit bill, the store owner called the Minneapolis police. They tried to arrest him. He resisted arrest. He was a very big man. And then [2]Officer Derek Chauvin, who was supposedly an expert in techniques that were institutionalized by the Minneapolis Police Department, unfortunately, put his knee on George Floyd's neck. And there were varying autopsies. One said that killed him. Another one, perhaps, said it didn't.

But nevertheless, the expression on Officer Chauvin's face was frozen into eternity. And that sparked the idea that he was a white policeman conducting a typical murder of an unarmed black suspect. And what followed was near mayhem.

Officer Chauvin, remember, was convicted of second- or third-degree murder. He was sentenced to 20 years. His appeals have run out with the [3]Supreme Court. He'll be in prison probably for much of his life. George Floyd, of course, died at the hospital or on the way to the hospital.

And what happened immediately was this huge riot, five years ago. Unlike the Jan. 6 riot, this thing went on for the end of May, June, July, August, September. Remember, [4]former Vice President Kamala Harris said it wasn't going to stop, nor should it stop. It's going to keep going to Election Day. She said that, of course. Then later, when called on it, she said she didn't mean the violent aspect.

But violent aspects there were. There was $2 billion in damage. There was a police precinct burned to the ground in Minneapolis. There was a federal courthouse that was burned. There was a historic St. John's Church—across from the White House—that was torched. A mob tried to go into the White House grounds and reach the president.

But even more serious than all of that, we were coming off COVID-19. People had been in a lockdown. There had been a national quarantine. And their news was from the television in an isolated situation in their own home with no human interaction.

So, these riots were kind of an expression of breaking out. And more importantly, they were subject to rumor, suspicion, lies. And one of the great lies was that George Floyd was iconic or emblematic of young black men, middle-aged black men that were systematically being killed while unarmed by the police. That was not true. The Washington Post even said it wasn't.

That year there were only 18 black males who were stopped by the police in the entire population of 340 million people. This year there were only 10. It was proportionate to the number of people by race who were stopped by the police, 11 million or 12 million each year.

Professor Ibram X. Kendi and professor Robin DiAngelo, or journalist DiAngelo, they created this idea of systemic racism. And you had to be racist in an anti-racist fashion. In other words, the only way to deal with this systemic racism was to be pro-black.

And what followed then was a defunding of the police. It caused a huge spike in crime. I think 20,000 murders in 2020. The [5]Black Lives Matter group was energized. And now as we look back at it, the architects of that movement have ensconced with the money. It has collapsed. The women that were in charge have, apparently, embezzled the money or taken it. They have nice homes. But it's an inert group.

It had a lot of other deleterious effects. Universities trying to get in on the virtue signaling and performance-art caring dropped the SAT. They dropped the comparative ranking of high school GPA. They dropped meritocracy. They started really enforcing DEI, in the sense of loyalty owes—you have to show us that you're loyal to the concept of DEI, that you've done something for it, or we're not going to hire you. And the universities then went into something that we could call repertory admissions.

Fast forward five years, looking back, and looking at all the damage of the downtowns in America—many of them that were destroyed. Today they have not recovered, in many cases. Look at the intense dissension and acrimony and racial relations that related to it. Look at the universities who were chastised by the Supreme Court for using race in a racist fashion in admissions. They've been discredited. And the people who capitalize on the death of George Floyd are, for the most part, discredited.

And the country now is learning its lessons. It's trying to find a sober solution, a reaction. I think they're trying—we're trying to come to a conclusion. Why in the world did we go completely collectively insane? And the result of that is we don't think the quarantines were a good idea. They were more injurious to the country than was COVID-19 itself.

We don't think and we know that the police should be defunded. Much less are they attacking black unarmed males. Just the opposite is happening.

We look at the career of professor Kendi, he went through $45 million at Boston University for an anti-racism center. And apparently, the money was squandered. I mentioned the BLM squandering.

So, we're getting back to the idea that, when you use race in any fashion, for bias or preference, it's racist. It doesn't matter what professor Kendi says or it doesn't matter about the reactions to the death of George Floyd, it's racist.

As far as George Floyd is concerned, had Officer Chauvin not had that expression on his face and had he lifted his knee up when George Floyd said he couldn't breathe, this entire catastrophe probably could have been avoided—or maybe not because there were people who were looking for an occasion like this to spread mayhem and to recalibrate race relations in the United States into what they would call anti-racism. Which means it's permissible for someone who considers themselves a victim to be a victimizer. If you think you're a victim of racism, then you can use racial preferences yourself with impunity.

In any case, it was a sad chapter in American history.

2.6.2 How the 'Pravda-Like' Press Distorts the News (2025-06-03 14:24)

So much has been said about the media, the mainstream media, the legacy media. There's not really much to add because we all know that it's not really a disinterested media but it's kind of a Pravda-like propaganda organ. I'll give you a few examples.

More recently, when Cyril Ramaphosa came to the White House, the president of [1]South Africa, did you see the word "ambush"? It was in every mainstream paper, every left-wing website, every radio—NPR, PBS, CBS, MSNBC. It's like the Democratic operatives issue a Pravda-like order and then these mindless people just say, "Okay, today's talking points are..."

He met President Donald Trump. He wasn't really surprised that Trump was going to confront him because he bragged that he was gonna confront Trump. There was no secret place. It wasn't a sudden, unexpected attack from a secret place—the definition of an ambush. Yet, it was "ambush," "ambush," "ambush," "ambush."

And when some questions arose about the visit, it was just typical. The White House press secretary, [2]Karoline Leavitt, fielded a question from an NBC journalist. She was very angry because Donald Trump mentioned to President Ramaphosa, "See this picture of a thousand graves." She said, "Well, he was lying. There weren't graves." And the press secretary replied back, "They were commemorations." Each one of those crosses represents a dead South African who was murdered by virtue of his race. And she said, "Yes, but it's not..."

So what they were arguing about—NBC—was semantics that Trump had improperly—and he had improperly—confused "grave" with "cenotaph," a cenotaph. That's "kenos" in Greek, meaning "empty."

So, these crosses were not on top of a dead person but they represented a dead person. But NBC was so fixated on embarrassing the president that they didn't even want to discuss the fact that there were a thousand crosses and they did represent individual lives destroyed because of their race. But she just wanted to make the point that you could nullify all of that and excuse it by saying they were not graves but cenotaphs. And there you have it.

So lately, we see it everywhere. And we had the tragic killing of Yaron Lischinsky and his fiancée, Sarah Milgrim, the two Jewish diplomatic workers in Washington. And what was interesting about it—I've been reading the mainstream media accounts. So, Elias Rodriguez goes in there, shoots—empties a gun—21 times, murders this wonderful couple, and then he yells, "Free Palestine."

And they just can't resist. They have the description of the shooting. They mention who he was. They don't mention the left-wing groups that he worked with or the funding that came from places like the MacArthur Foundation that funded groups that he used to work for. Or they don't mention the fact that his father attended Congress as a guest of a Democratic congressman.

But they do do this: About eight, usually about eight paragraphs down, they say, "And tensions rose because of the Israeli assault on Gaza and the thousands of deaths." In other words, they're trying to contextualize the murder by saying that this person was driven to it in the manner, perhaps, like Luigi Mangione, who shot the UnitedHealthcare executive. In other words, there's always a contextualization.

And when you start to add all of this stuff up, it all is in an atmosphere of Jake Tapper co-authoring this "Original Sin" book when he was one of the principle people who promulgated the idea that [3]former President Joe Biden was completely fit and anybody who questioned it—Lara Trump was a good example—he demonized and tried to destroy on national TV. Now he's gonna make millions saying, "I didn't do it. They did."

And it's an indictment of the Biden circle, who knew that he was cognitively challenged. We knew it. I shouldn't even say they knew. Everybody knew it. But they were prevented from commenting or they were demonized if they did comment by the media and by the Biden team.

And this is on top of the fact that the media never even looked at the released records. They never even asked a question—as they did of Donald Trump's cognitive abilities. They never said, "Did he have a PSA test?" Trump, it's on his medical records. [4]Former President Barack Obama did. They didn't ask any of these things.

And now they're trying to say, "We were hoodwinked." No, you weren't hoodwinked. You were operating in the same fashion you did to promulgate the Russian collusion lie that you never apologized for, the laptop disinformation lie that you've never apologized for, the 51 intelligence authorities that you never apologized for, the partnering of [5]the FBI with social media to censor the news before the 2020 election that you never talked about.

This is a pattern. And it won't stop with this. And the result is you wonder why, whether when you look at liberal polls or liberal media, nobody has any confidence anymore, nobody trusts you.

Don't you understand that when you say, "Ambush," "ambush," "ambush," "ambush," or you ask questions that don't even get to the point, just a matter of semantics, we know what you're doing? You're trying to gin up momentum, enthusiasm for a cause, a left-wing cause that 50 % of the population just doesn't support.

2.6.3 Trump's Message to Putin: You Blew It (2025-06-03 14:26)

There's been a new development, a new phase in the Ukraine war.

I know we've talked about it before, but more recently, [1]Russian President Vladimir Putin has escalated his attacks. Not so much on the battlefield per se, but on civilian targets that he is hitting with missiles and drones as far west as Kyiv. And this has solicited an angry response from [2]President Donald Trump.

I think the subtext of Donald Trump is:

Well, wait a minute, Vladimir. I have sort of told Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy not to ask for so much and be willing to have a ceasefire. And we have a deal in the works. And now you're kind of fouling it all up.

And the deal was, pretty much, you're gonna get the Donbas and Crimea and institutionalize it. And we're gonna get some kind of arrangement to arm Ukraine, but it will not be officially in NATO. And somewhere where the battle line is today we'll have a ceasefire. And then there will be an economic zone of rare minerals. It'll be kind of a tripwire. And out of that general framework we can have a peace conference and hammer out the details.

But now you're doing this escalation that's kind of fouling up my dreams of solving the problem that I inherited from former President Joe Biden.

And Trump is kind of exasperated. He said, you know, Vladimir's acting "crazy." The Left went kind of ecstatic. And they said, "See, see, see, see. Trump finally came around to our point of view. He now agrees with us. It was all Putin's fault. And he stopped appeasing Putin. And now he's gonna follow our lead."

I don't think that's quite what's actually happened. What Trump is really doing is saying to the world:

If we had followed your lead and put pressure only on Vladimir Putin, we would've never got a deal because the Russians would be seen as sort of sympathetic to parts of the world. And they would've said the United States was too pro-Ukrainian. But I came in and was willing to give him a chance. And now the world sees that he doesn't want that chance. And the world sees that he's blowing a deal.

The next question is: Why would he do that? Why would Vladimir Putin pass up a deal?

And I think the answer is that he has to account for a war that he preempted and started that was designed to take all of Ukraine by decapitating Kyiv in February of 2022. Fast forward, there's probably 1.5 million dead, wounded, and lost—on both sides—and climbing. But the majority of those losses are Russian. There's probably 1 million dead Russians, wounded Russians, or missing Russians.

And Vladimir Putin—although he is a dictator with absolute power, no dictator is quite with absolute power—he has to account, informally, to a complex of oligarchs, wealthy oligarchs, bureaucrats, high-level bureaucrats, and the military. And there is a point in which he has to show that what he has done in Ukraine is worth 1 million dead, wounded, and missing. And he thinks he's not there yet.

In other words, he's going back to them and saying, "Only Vladimir institutionalized the acquisition of the Donbas and Crimea. Which, by the way, I got for you in 2014. And now there's no question that they're part of Russia. Only Vladimir got [3]Ukraine out of NATO. Only Vladimir advanced 40 to 60 miles westward from the Donbas and Crimea."

And I think he thinks that complex that I just mentioned as saying, "You mean you basically didn't give us anything you. We had the Donbas. We had Crimea. We were already pushing a little bit westward. We knew they were Ukraine. Europe didn't want them in [4]NATO. United States didn't want a NATO. So, what did you really give us, Vladimir? You're not far west enough. Now, you go back over there and you've got to justify a million casualties. And there's not much on the battlefield."

So, I think what Vladimir Putin thinks is that he's going to continue the war; continue the terror campaign; get greater concessions from the Europeans, the Americans, and the Ukrainians; and move the battle lines a little bit to the West.

And I think he's sorely mistaken. He's misreading Donald Trump. Because the reason he did not invade in 2017 and 2021—of those four recent administrations, that was the only one he did not. He did not invade during Donald Trump's administration. But he did invade a neighbor during former Presidents George W. Bush, Barack Obama, and Joe Biden's tenure.

In other words, he saw—in a way that he does not see now—that Donald Trump is very unpredictable and very erratic, in some ways, that it's beneficial in the making of foreign policy.

And if he continues to go westward or continues to have this terror campaign, I think he will see that Donald Trump will be able to hold his MAGA coalition together and continue to arm Ukraine. And the Europeans will continue, probably, to arm them as well. And this, the quagmire, will only escalate. And he will not be able to knock Ukraine out of the war and it will be increasingly difficult for him to justify any continuation to his constituents.

If I was Vladimir Putin, I would cut a deal today. And then I would resume natural gas and oil shipments to Europe, I would open the economy back up, and I would tell the Russian people what you did.

I don't think it would be quite accurate, but you could tell them: "Only because of me, Crimea forever is where it belongs, in [5]Russia. The same as Donbas. And I stood up to the West and said, 'No NATO.' And I won this war."

And that's a lot better—it's not a good scenario, but it's a lot better than another Stalingrad or Verdun or Somme for the next two years for Russia.

2.6.4 Biden's Border Nihilism Will Live Long After He Is Gone (2025-06-09 15:42)

The spiteful [1]open-borders legacy of Joe Biden will plague America for generations to come, long after the former president is a fading bad memory.

Somewhere between 10-12 million foreign nationals are believed to have entered the U.S. illegally under his watch, to add to the existing 12-20 million illegal aliens.

Almost all were unaudited.

They stormed the border for four years without background checks of the sort that American citizens must undergo to purchase a firearm or take out a loan.

At a time when citizens were expelled from the military for not submitting to [2]the experimental mRNA COVID inoculations, millions of foreign nationals, with the Biden administration's encouragement, crossed the southern border, exempt from any vaccination requirement or medical examination.

When Americans were required to present multiple forms of identification to apply for a mandatory "[3]real ID" to fly in 2025, millions of illegal entrants were flown across the country, often stealthily and under the cover of night, without any valid ID at all.

On some days, the Trump administration has managed to deport 800 of Biden's illegal aliens.

But 10 times that many entered illegally each day under Biden.

Trump's border patrol would have to deport over 8,000 people every day of his four-year tenure just to undo what Biden wrought by his dismantling of federal immigration law.

Some 500,000 illegal entrants are believed to have criminal records—a number greater than the population of Oakland, California.

Indeed, new reports relate almost every day that [4]another illegal alien has murdered, raped, or assaulted an American citizen.

The culpable Left often champions violent illegal alien criminals facing deportation. Their apparent assumption is that hurting Trump politically justifies hurting Americans even more by protecting violent illegal alien criminals instead of sending them home.

Thousands of these unknown criminals are deadly land mines waiting to explode.

Yet the Biden effort to destroy or subvert immigration law transcends just demolishing the southern border.

There are nearly 300,000 [5]Chinese nationals in American universities, the vast majority admitted without serious background checks.

They are welcomed by elite campuses because they pay the full cost and at a premium, with few questions asked about why exactly they came or what they are doing.

No wonder, then, that in the last decade, Harvard's Kennedy School of Government is reported to have trained and graduated hundreds of Chinese nationals who were[6] either Communist Party members or the children of prominent Chinese communist apparatchiks.

In other words, at a time when the U.S. is locked in an [7]escalating Cold War with the People's Republic of China, our universities find great profit in enrolling and educating the communist elite who threaten Taiwan, imprison and oppress the Uyghurs, jail Hong Kong dissidents, and send both bio- and agro-terrorists into the U.S.

Not a day went by during the last two years without Middle Eastern, pro-Hamas visa students [8]on some campus swarming students in libraries, assaulting and bullying Jews, trashing iconic buildings, illegally camping out in student quads, and screaming to bring the intifada home to the U.S.

Neither the Biden administration nor spineless college presidents took any action, despite such flagrant violations of both the terms and spirit of student visas.

Most recently, Yunqing Jian, a 33-year-old Chinese national with ties to the University of Michigan, was arrested as an "agro-terrorist."

The mission of Jian, along with his girlfriend, was to seed [9]toxic fungus into Midwestern farmland as a way of destroying the American food supply and thereby starve his hosts.

Sometimes the baleful Biden immigration inheritance was simply a matter of allowing "tourists" and "visitors" to stay far after their visas had expired—without consequences.

So, for example, Egyptian national and terrorist, Mohammed Sabry Soliman, along with his entire family, deliberately overstayed their visas. They were all residing here illegally when Soliman firebombed Jews, crying out "Free Palestine" as he tried to burn them up.

Americans overwhelmingly polled against this Biden border nihilism. Indeed, the House impeached his henchman, Alejandro Mayorkas, the Secretary of Homeland Security.

Yet Biden, or his handlers in the shadows, would not stop destroying the borders and immigration law.

So why would a president deliberately cause such mayhem that will cost hundreds of lives and billions of dollars in the years to come?

Was the reason Biden's characteristic incompetence or dementia?

Or did Biden simply want to alter the demography to find a constituency for his otherwise unpopular agendas?

Did he wish to grow the welfare state?

Was Biden hoping to expand the [10]DEI agenda by bringing in the poor and supposedly oppressed as new fodder in the Left's Marxist binary of victimized versus victimizer?

No one knows why Biden did it, only that he did — and we will suffer his nihilist legacy for years to come.

2.6.5 The Left Is Alienating Its Minority Base (2025-06-09 15:44)

I'd like to talk about a more sensitive topic today, and that's this new appearance or this growing—I would call it—reverse racism or racism among some left-wing elite black leaders, politicians, celebrities. I'll give you a few examples.

Not long ago [1]Susan Rice, the former top official in the Obama administration, was removed from the Defense Policy Board. That's a group of grandees that advise the Defense Department. They're political appointments. And traditionally, when a new president comes in, they get rid of most of the prior Defense Policy Board because they feel they're partisans.

And in the case of Susan Rice, she was appointed in a late appointment by then-[2]President Joe Biden, who pretty much wiped out all of the Trump appointments. So, her dismissal by Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth was not unusual.

And yet, she fired back at him and said he was dumb as a rock and ultra-MAGA. But what was interesting, she said, “white male, cisgender.” In other words, she attacked his race. And she said her administration would’ve fired him for the Signal chat scandal. But of course, she was the one that came out on Sunday talk shows and lied five times about the disaster in Benghazi, among other things later in her career. But why inject race into it?

At almost the same period, we had a number of Afrikaners—I should say a very small number, about 60 people—asked for refugee status, felt they had been endangered by black-on-white violence, which is demonstrable and beyond controversy in South Africa. And [3]President Donald Trump allowed them to come in as refugees. And of course, during the prior administration, thousands of people came in as refugees. But because, apparently, they were white, this caused a storm of criticism.

The Episcopal Church said they would no longer help with refugees because this was racist. Don Lemon went on a profanity-ridden rant about how this is horrible that these white people were coming in, this is disgusting, you shouldn’t be able to do that.

Not too long ago, Rep. Jasmine Crockett, D-Texas, talked about how the party might have to nominate “white boys.” Using that “boy,” that’s sort of a deprecatory term that has racial implications. Remember Joe Biden called two of his aides who are African American “boy.” That’s a very prejudicial term to use. And yet, she was using it in the reverse fashion for so-called whites.

And at the same time she was doing this, another tape surfaced from Rep. Ilhan Omar, D-Minn., where she said white men were the most likely terrorists and killers in America. That’s demonstrably untrue.

So, what am I getting at? I’m getting at the elite—the elite in politics and celebrities—are using this idea of white, white, white, white in a prejudicial manner. It’s very ironic because it’s exactly what we were evolving away from in pursuit of Martin Luther King Jr.’s “content of our character, not color of our skin.” And apparently, they believe because they’re African Americans or they’re left-wing that it’s OK to stigmatize somebody by their race. But of course, it’s not.

And here’s my point about this entire discussion. Lately, the Rasmussen polls—who have been very accurate, they were in the 2024 election and they are now—they surveyed the first 100 days of the Trump administration. And they found that—contrary to most of what, candidly, are left-wing polls—that Donald Trump had a positive appraisal by most people.

But here’s my point. Sixty-two percent of those who were surveyed that were Hispanic expressed approval. African Americans were about 39 %. And Hispanics were higher than whites.

So, what am I getting at? You have two centrifugal forces at a time when African Americans and Hispanics are considering economics, cost of living, real issues, and they consider them more important than their superficial appearance.

You have a panicky elite on [4]the Left, who, let's be candid, they have been the primary beneficiaries of diversity, equity, and inclusion. Diversity, equity, and inclusion did not help the inner city. It didn't stop the crime rate. It didn't increase the per capita income. It did help a professional class.

But my point is this, while the professional class is obsessed with race and chasing white racist unicorns, the majority of the Hispanic community and a near majority of the black community have moved beyond the elite.

This is gonna have political repercussions in the future because the [5]Democratic Party, the more they pound this tired, weary racial mantra, the more their constituents—they think they're appealing to—are moving on.

2.6.6 Trump's Second Term Gains Momentum as Economy Soars, Borders Tighten (2025-06-09 15:45)

We're at four months now in the new Trump second administration. And a strange thing has happened.

If you look at the polls, after diving for [1]President Donald Trump with the announcement that he was going to subject certain countries to high tariffs—which panicked the stock market.

Now, the stock market's almost recovered, or has recovered, all of its lost. It went down a little bit when Trump said he was going to continue [2]the tariffs, to force the European Union to have reciprocal treatment toward the United States.

But nevertheless, Trump in the RealClearPolitics averages—which to be fair, have a preponderance of left-wing polls—is still only about a point, point and a half down. But in other polls, Rasmussen, he's either even or he is a couple of points ahead. And yet, all of the media and all of the major organs on the Left, but even in the center and Right—The Wall Street Journal, to take another example we've discussed—they have been uniformly negative.

So, how in the world is Donald Trump—and Donald Trump has not been reticent. He has tweeted all sorts of things about, you know, Bruce Springsteen and Taylor Swift and Canada—things that were very controversial. How can he be almost equal and much higher than he was at his first term at this time? And the answer is twofold.

No. 1 is what he's doing. Every time people say we're headed for a recession or his trade war is gonna tank the economy, data comes out. This week, it was the corporate profits were unusually high, strong. It came out that we're not in a housing recession, that housing sales are steady. Inflation is down. Energy prices are way down. Economic growth is up. Joblessness is down. So, that is one reason.

The second is Donald Trump has been touring the world. And you can call it mercantilism but essentially, the Trump doctrine is we're not going to get into optional military engagements on the ground anywhere and we're going to have our relations be transactional. So, even our enemies—to the degree it's even possible—we're gonna try to find some mechanism by which we can stop wars. Maybe rare earth mineral corridor in Ukraine or maybe we're dangling an end of sanctions for Iran—I don't think that's going to work.

But the point is people appreciate the idea that Trump, first, is trying to exhaust peaceful avenues before he uses force. And he's trying to address the theater wars that former President Joe Biden left him in Ukraine and the [3]Middle East.

The economy is strong. The border is 99 % closed. We've gone from over 150,000 entries down to less than 8,000, in many places fewer. The wall is going to be continued. The Border Patrol is increased. The deportations, despite the court orders, continue.

So, the things that he's doing are very popular, especially to the working classes: black, white, Hispanic. They like cheap gas prices. They like news that there's going to be $8 to $10 trillion of investment and new jobs and assembly manufacturing in the United States. They like the idea that we're cutting unnecessary funds for government and we're not touching Social Security. They like the idea that Trump is trying to reduce taxes on the middle class in terms of Social Security or tips. But there's another facet. And that is not Trump, but the people who despise Trump and are attacking Trump.

When the electorate looks at that and they say, "Well, Trump—I like everything he's doing but I don't like what he said about Canada. It just kind of bothers me." Or, "I don't like him lowering himself to attacking Bruce Springsteen, in kind." Yes. But what is the alternative?

Well, the alternative is the Left is glorifying a murderer, Luigi Mangione. And the campuses will not, cannot, do not want to stop the antisemitism. So, we see foreign guests with masks on who continue to use violence and vandalize our campuses. Now we have two wonderful Israeli citizens who have been murdered. And doesn't seem that anybody in the core base of the [4]Democratic Party is objecting at all.

This comes on the heels of attacks on Tesla. This comes on the heels of this strange Democratic reaction to Trump, where they use almost pornographic language: "s—," the F-word. Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz can't give a speech without either comparing Trump to Hitler or calling him some pejorative.

The result of all this is when they look to the Democratic alternative, there is no alternative. There's no explanation why they opened the border. There's no explanation, opposition to what Trump is doing. Why aren't they saying, "We like an open border. Stop it, Donald Trump"? They're not even doing that.

They're not presenting any positive, constructive alternative. There is no shadow government. There is nobody in the Democratic Party that is popular. Not [5]Tim Walz. Not former Vice President Kamala Harris. Not Sen. Chuck Schumer. Not even Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. Especially not Rep. Jasmine Crockett. I mean popular to the American people in general.

And so, when you add the fact that the economic news is pretty good and there's a lot of initiatives on the horizon—peace initiatives, foreign investment initiatives, trade initiatives. And when you look at the people around Trump—Secretary of State Marco Rubio, Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent—they're very good. And when they go before Congress, they're calm, they're rational, they're data-driven. The Democratic senators who press them and inquire of them and mock them are usually poorly prepared, hysterical, angry, and make fools of themselves.

Add it all up: Things are going pretty good in the country. Donald Trump is a whirlwind. He's staging a counterrevolution. And most of the issues that he's trying to undo of the progressive project, the public supports him.

And his Democratic opposition—four months into his tenure—has still completely lost its mind and not only does not offer an alternative agenda, but personally, emotionally, psychologically puts people off. They do not like the way that they're talking. They do not like the way they're acting. And they don't like them in general.

2.6.7 The Quiet Economic Boom of Trump 2.0 (2025-06-09 15:47)

The Trump budget is making its way [1]through the Senate. And people on both sides of the issue of fiscal sobriety are arguing because the Biden deficit, which is somewhere between $1.9 trillion and $2.1 trillion, doesn't seem to be radically reduced, given the DOGE cuts are offset by not cutting other programs that came in under Biden.

The [2]Build Back Better and New Green Deal—all of that stuff is not radically cut. And more importantly, there are some tax cuts—things like taxes on tips, the SALT state tax deductions—that suggest that either there won't be this sizable budget deficit reduction, as promised by the Trump administration, or it won't occur until later on, or it could get bigger.

But there is a wild card here. And consider that in March through April, all the way into May, we had some monthly data. And income—real income—is substantially up. So is the savings rate. [3]Energy prices are down. The inflation rate came in at April at 2.1 %. The economy, according to the Federal Reserve Bank in Atlanta, will not grow at 3.8 %, but it could, they think, at an annualized rate of 4.6 %.

That's critical, because in a $33 billion-plus economy, if you get two or three points of additional economic growth, then obviously, you're going to have more federal revenue. It could be $200 or $300 billion more.

Also, people discounted the [4]Trump tariffs. They said, either one of two things would happen. They would either, and believe it or not, they said the trade deficit might increase because of retaliatory tariffs that would increase faster than ours or decrease trade. But we might be in a recession.

And yet, when you look at the April data, the $160 billion monthly [5]trade deficit has been halved. It's incredible. It's almost like the story on the border: That we went from 10,000 people a day to virtually nobody.

So, what does all this mean? We saw these gyrations in the stock market. We read The Wall Street Journal every day: recession, slow growth, market uncertainty, trade wars, recession, but if you actually look at the data, two things pop out at you.

The economy is doing very, very well. And a lot of it is the expectation of the things that are in process. The $10 trillion of foreign investment. The extensions of the tax cuts. Incentives for investment in the new budget. And so, this is completely unknown territory. If Donald Trump were to get—as Ronald Reagan did in the first half of 1984, he got up to an annualized rate of 7 %. Especially in the latter part. If he were to get 4.6 % or 5 %, then this mythical idea that we all discounted, that you can grow your way out of deficits, it wouldn't quite be realized but it would really help. And that $1.9 to $2.1 trillion deficit could go down substantially.

All of us never believed supply side will solve the problem. It won't solve the problem without physical cuts and discipline. But it will do a lot for the economy.

And this is emblematic of this first mysterious four months of Donald Trump, when people said that Donald Trump could shut the border down, nobody believed him.

When people said that he could deal with the universities, and then Harvard had a lot of exposure, violating the Supreme Court's rulings, not reporting Chinese and Middle East money, overcharging the government. And yet, all of this exposure that's happening on the campus is enlightening the American people about issues they didn't think was possible, just in the first 120 or 130 days of this administration.

So, what's the bottom line? What am I getting at? There are revolutionary—maybe counter-revolutionary—developments going on at the border, going on with the universities. But especially with the economy. It's being rebooted. It's being redirected in ways that economists are not even able to figure out because we haven't done this before. And the net result might be that we're going to make progress, both in the expansion of the economy and through growth in federal revenues and cut down these deficits.

2.6.8 Gavin Newsom's 'Reckless' Surrender of LA to Foreign National Riots (2025-06-16 23:23)

This weekend we saw rioting in Los Angeles against Immigration and Customs Enforcement for its efforts to apprehend illegal aliens and employers who were hiring [1]illegal aliens.

And the riots started out initially without very many numbers but then they turned violent. And by violence, I would define that as throwing rocks at cars, torching cars, defacing government buildings, and attacking law enforcement.

But here's what's interesting. The mayor, Karen Bass, came down, in her public comments, on the side of the protesters who were protesting the idea of deportation at all. Kind of like [2]former Vice President Kamala Harris used to march against deportation.

And California Gov. Gavin Newsom then gave a series of editorializations that I think have ruined his chances ever to be a serious national candidate. He said this was "chaotic," this was "reckless." And he said that they were just trying to have "an arbitrary" deportation "quota."

Gavin, 12 million people came into the country illegally. That was 3 million a year. That was 250,000 per month. That was over 8,000 a day. They have not been able to deport more than a thousand on most days—sometimes 500. They would have to deport 8,000 people every single day for four years to get back where we were with 20 million illegal aliens when [3]President Joe Biden entered office. So, it's not a quota, it's an effort to stop an invasion.

And it's a very funny invasion because now Gavin is mad that they nationalized the California guard. [4]President Donald Trump has that ability. And people said, "No. No president—they have to request it.” No, they don’t. You think that JFK said to George Wallace, when he nationalized the Alabama National Guard, said, “Would you please let us nationalize your guard so you can be removed from stopping African American people going to the University of Alabama?” No.

So, what I’m getting at is, on one side of these violent acts, you have these protesters. And I’ll just give a word of advice. You’re going to lose the optics—Democrats, the Left, and immigration protesters—if you have a lot of people here illegally and they’re waving, not the American flag, but the Mexican flag, as they’re committing acts of violence.

Think of the logic: “I am waving the flag of the country under no circumstances I want to return, but I am attacking the officers and the infrastructure of the country that under every circumstance I want to stay in.”

That might explain why, in the midst of all of this negative publicity, a CBS poll taken to show that people were outraged showed that just the opposite: 54 % of the American people are for continued deportations.

So, you know what is really “reckless,” Gavin? You know what is “chaotic?” It’s you. You. You. You. You did not intervene to stop the violence.

Donald Trump does not want to see a May, June, July, August, September 2020 $2 billion in property damage, 35 people killed, 1,500 officers assaulted, $14,000 in arrests, precinct burned, courthouse burned, historic church burned. He doesn’t want to see that.

And you’re egging this on. And you think it’s going to be peaceful when people throw rocks at cars, innocent bystanders and people wave the flag as they burn things—the Mexican flag of a foreign country. You are undermining your own argument.

And what is your argument? I don’t know what it is. What is your argument, Karen Bass, the mayor—now that you’re not in Ghana and you’re here in the United States during a burning? Is it burning is OK, whether it’s burning a car or burning a whole neighborhood down? And you don’t act.

It was pathetic, the chief of police of Los Angeles, I felt like it was some Soviet apparatchik, he was saying, “There is no violence. We are very proud of First Amendment.” And it’s like, I was given a text that my job is in danger, probably, if I say the truth because meanwhile, the LA County sheriff was saying, “We’re going to warn you that we will stop this. And we will make arrests. And we will use tear gas.”

And apparently, they saw a different riot. And they were more in charge of that area of the rioting than the Los Angeles Police Department.

But I guess Mayor Bass—they're scared, the LA police chief and the police hierarchy. Because they see that when the fire chief objected to Mayor Bass being on—I don't know—a junket, or the deputy mayor being arrested for phoning in a bomb threat, or the water and power director leaving a reservoir that was critical to the survival of Pacific Palisades empty and unattended for months and fire hydrants not working and she voiced—they fired her.

So, I guess this police chief says, "If I tell the truth that these people are violent and they are assaulting officers and the mayor is doing nothing and the governor is doing nothing, I will be fired. So, I will lie and say it's mostly—I am really impressed by the restraint of the protesters."

Final bottom line: If you take an oath to enforce the laws of your state or the country and you see people swarming detention centers, swarming the streets, obstructing traffic, burning cars, trying to injure people with rocks, and you do nothing, then you are forsaking your oath of office.

And secondly: Mayor Bass, Gov. Newsom, would you please tell us what is your position on 12 million people who entered the United States illegally, who are residing illegally at a time when the country is running a $2 trillion deficit and your state, at one point, recently owed $75 billion that it did not have?

What is your solution? Is it to let one more million in? Three more million in? Five more million in? What is it? What is your solution to find the 300,000 to 500,000 people believed to have criminal records? Just tell us, what is your solution?

What is your solution when you have, apparently, violent protesters waving the flag of a foreign national country as a way of persuading us that we should not deport them when they are burning things and committing violence about the country they want to stay in but waving the flag of the country they do not want to return to?

What is the position of the Mexican government? Because I can tell you that there is a bill right now—the big, beautiful bill—that will tax remittances, the $63 billion.

And all this is going to do is give rise to voices who will say, “I think we need a higher percentage to tax these remittances because they’re not getting the message. The people who are demonstrating and violent apparently think that we are going to subsidize them with social services, to free up money so they can send to Mexico, on tax, $63 billion—their greatest source of foreign exchange—while they run $170 billion trade surplus, while the cartels kill between 60,000 and 80,000 Americans.” That’s an unsustainable situation, as are these riots.

Bottom line: I think, [5]Gavin Newsom, you took your recent effort to be moderate, centrist, your podcast, and you lit a fuse and you blew it up. Nobody in their right mind would ever vote for you for anything after you went into a volatile, dangerous situation and tried to pour gasoline on it by essentially saying you, the governor, will not do anything to restore order or quiet. And you sided with people committing violence against their fellow residents of Los Angeles.

2.6.9 Biden Dismantled Basic Immigration Law. Now, Americans Are Suffering. (2025-06-16 23:25)

Immigration is not just back in the news, it’s in the news every single day.

Almost every single day we see someone here illegally like Mohamed Soliman committing an act of terror when he tried to burn Jewish activists. Burn them. Burn Jews.

We saw [1]Kilmar Armando Abrego Garcia, who was an MS-13 member and became a cause celebre when he was deported. He was a spousal abuser. He was a gang member. He was a human trafficker.

I don’t even want to get into the sad, tragic tale of all of these young, beautiful, vibrant women who have been killed by [2]illegal aliens. I don’t want to get into the issue that here in Fresno

County about a half of the traffic accidents, the people involved that were culpable have left the scene of the accident.

So, it's a real problem.

And let's put in some historical perspective. Former President Joe Biden's legacy will be very—he has a legacy and it's gonna be very hard to deal with. For the next 20 years, we're gonna be dealing with the fact that he and former Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas deliberately, deliberately, intentionally destroyed immigration law as we know it. They opened the border and they let in 12 million people.

Keep in mind some data. The administration—the Trump administration is doing a heroic job to close the border, but that's not the problem now. They solved that existential problem. The problem is that you have 12 million people here that are completely unaudited. And this is in addition to somewhere between 10 and 20 million that were here already, prior to Biden.

And on a good day, acting Immigration and Customs Enforcement Director [3]Tom Homan and ICE and the Border Patrol can maybe deport, they find, 800. But Joe Biden let in 10 times that number per day. So, they would have to step up their efforts by a magnitude just to get back to where Joe Biden started.

If you let in 12 million people in the space of four years, you're talking about 3 million a year. You're talking 250,000 per month. So, you can see it's 8,000 a day and there's no way that that seems even feasible, even when the Left tries to obstruct that effort with sanctuary cities and district judges who entertain these lawsuits to stop it.

The other thing to remember is what was really tragic about what [4]Joe Biden did is he privileged illegal aliens over U.S. citizens. Now, what do I mean by that? His Defense Department—it started under other Trump-era defense secretaries—but they drummed out 8,500 of some of our best soldiers because they did not trust the experimental mRNA vaccine. Many of them have had COVID-19 and had natural immunity. Think about that.

At the same time they did that, they were letting about 7,000 to 10,000 people a day come through with no worry about whether they were vaccinated or not.

So, they were telling some of our bravest soldiers: "We're going to go after you and drum you out of the military if you don't get this vaccine. But over here, we're gonna let in 10,000 people, 8,000 people. We don't know who they are. But they don't have to have a vaccine."

Take another example. We were supposed to all get something called the Real ID in 2020. It was delayed because of COVID-19. And it was enacted, I think, on May 7, 2025. But here's the point. For the last two years, people have had to get ready to get that ID or they can't fly. They have to have a passport or a birth certificate. They have to have proof of residency in their state, you know, bills or a lease or something. It's a difficult process. You've got to go in person to the DMV.

So, what's my point?

We were flying people in from Southern Mexico—to take one example—into particular airports in the United States, mostly in the Southwest but not exclusively. And we were doing it in the dead of night. And sometimes when you went to an airport, it would say “immigrants” but they were not checking anybody's ID.

In other words, a person in Chiapas or Yucatan or Oaxaca or Michoacan could say that they were a refugee, get on an app—you know, hit the app—get on a plane, and fly to an airport at 2 in the morning without passport control. Think of that.

That happened while most Americans, as I speak, cannot get on a flight unless they have a real super ID that has been certified and adjudicated by forms of ID, in addition to your driver's license.

Again, we are treating people who are breaking the law by coming here and residing here better than we are U.S. citizens.

And the wall is a wonderful thing that's continuing. [5]President Donald Trump's efforts to secure the border have been widely successful but the problem right now is an existential one. What do you do with 12 million people when you can only deport 800 or a thousand a day? And you need to deport, if you want to solve the problem and get back to square one on Jan. 20, 2021, you've got to increase that by 10.

Final query: Why did Joe Biden do this? Or the people around him? What was the purpose? Was it to expand the DEI agenda? Was it to bring poor people that didn't speak English, without skills or high school diplomas, so they would grow the entitlement industry? Have to raise taxes? Redistribution? Was it nihilism? He just got angry at Trump people and he thought, “This is one thing they won't like, we're just gonna open the borders”? Was it to change the demography so with mail-in and early voting these people could be instant constituents? Or was it just that he was mean? Mean. He was ?nihilist. He just said, “I'm going to blank blank this up.” Or was he incompetent? Good old Joe from Scranton.

I don’t know the answer to that. But I do know that we’re gonna have to find it in the next 20 years because this is the most grievous thing of all the terrible things that happened under the Biden administration. This one will be his legacy and we’re gonna have to live with it.

2.6.10 Ukraine War Heads in a Dangerous New Direction (2025-06-16 23:27)

Remember, it’s now gone on for over three years. And we had pretty much discussed the contours of the fight. Russia has now controlled about 20 % of [1]Ukrainian territory. And it’s using its enormous advantage in manpower, gross domestic product—10 times the GDP, four times the manpower, 30 times the territory—to grind down the Ukrainians, which have been slowly withdrawing net withdrawals. This is in addition to Crimea and Donbas that the Russians already had annexed.

The general consensus was that [2]Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy was being unrealistic. He was counting on more than the $400 billion from the EU and the United States and NATO powers to continue the fight with the express purpose of gaining not just territory taken by Russia in 2022, but also what was taken during the Obama administration, the entire Donbas and the entire Crimea.

And the Trump administration had said: This is unrealistic. This is $1.5 million dead and wounded. It’s Stalingrad. It’s the Somme. It’s Verdun. We have to have some kind of peace to stop this slaughter, this cauldron of death, on the doorstep of Europe.

Ukraine has pretty much given up the idea that it can win a slugfest with Russia on the ground. Its army is pretty much static. The average age is up into the 30s of recruits. About 10 to 12 million people have left Ukraine. So, its problem is not technology. It’s not weaponry. It’s not money. It's manpower. So that was pretty much what we saw.

And the Trump administration was basically saying what the world did to Gen. Carl Gustaf Mannerheim, the heroic Fin, in 1939 that withstood a Soviet invasion that wanted to absorb 10 % to 15 % of Finland. He fought for four months. And then finally, Mannerheim said, "I can't resist this juggernaut. I'll cut a deal with Stalin. Give him 11 %. Promise not to use Finland to launch attacks in the future on Russia." And he saved modern-day Finland for what it is now.

So people had sort of said that paradigm might work, that Zelenskyy could get real and give up the idea of getting back the Donbas and the Crimea, not get into NATO, and you might have a deal.

But the problem was [3]President Donald Trump, who pursued that line of peace negotiations, found out that [4]Russian President Vladimir Putin cannot take that back, apparently, after he started this insane war and tell the oligarchs, "I reified the fact that we have Donbas and Crimea. I went in a few miles into Ukraine. I expanded on it. Maybe we now have 20 % of Ukraine. And they won't be in NATO. And we're going to have a ceasefire." They said, "You did—that's all you got? And you lost a million Russians, dead, wounded? No. No."

So then we were in a stalemate. And Trump sort of pivoted and said now not Zelenskyy was unwilling to make a deal, but actually it was Putin.

And then something happened this week. Two things happened. A brilliant Ukrainian strategy of bringing by truck, stealthily, drones into the remote parts of Russia. Some of them are 2,500 miles away. Arctic bases, strategic bases that Russia counts on for the delivery of nuclear weapons and cruise missiles. And they have been used against Ukraine. Tupolev bombers.

And lo and behold, they launched this stealthy raid by drones. And we've never seen anything like it in military history. It destroyed 30 % to 35 % of the Russian strategic bomber fleet— $7 billion, 41 of these huge planes, some of them were sort of intelligence planes as well.

And then following up, there was a drone attack on the Kerch Bridge, that only link, really, that's accessible for easy transport from mainland Russia into the Crimea. It's essential. Now, the bridge will probably be repaired, but what am I getting at?

It shows you that Ukraine is now kind of having a turtle strategy. It's not going to waste its limited manpower slugging it out. But it's going to use drones and it's going to make over a million of them. And they are the cutting edge of inexpensive, effective drone fabricators, producers in the world. They're going to attack targets deep in [5]Russia.

Is that going to bring Putin to the table? I don't know. Strategically, it's justified to show Putin he could lose all of his bomber fleet because it's not just that they destroyed 41 bombers, but there is no deterrent. So, Putin and the Russian military are thinking: If they destroyed a third, what's stopping two-thirds or the whole thing? How do we stop this? And who got them that close to be launched? And do we have enemies in our military? What's going on?

So it was very effective. But the point I'm making is there's going to be a retaliation. And there were certain rules in the Cold War that the two superpower rivals that were nuclear did not use a proxy to attack the homeland of another. So, imagine if during this Cuban Missile Crisis, Fidel Castro launched missiles that took out a third of our B-52 fleet. We wouldn't just go after Castro. We would say to the Russians, "You broke the rules. You are attacking the American homeland using a proxy."

I don't know if that rule still applies, but what I'm getting at is while we all applaud Ukraine for doing something that was strategically necessary, geostrategically, it opens a new phase of the war. And Russia's going to retaliate. And it's talking about a type of retaliation we haven't seen before. I'll leave it at that.

But just when we thought the war might have some type of conciliation or armistice, Ukraine struck in a way that it had never done before and it was very effective. And we applaud that. But it's going to earn a counterresponse that could lead to a cycle of escalation that could be very dangerous not just for Ukraine, but for NATO in general and the United States in particular.

2.6.11 The Left Is Selling Chaos. America Isn't Buying. (2025-06-16 23:29)

I was looking at the polls today. Given all the negative views of [1]President Donald Trump on the economy, he still has a 17-point lead over the Democrats when the public is asked, "Who do you have greater confidence in, Donald Trump or the Democrats, to manage the economy?”

We're getting a lot of bias reporting on the riots in Los Angeles. The governor of California here, [2]Gavin Newsom, and the mayor of Los Angeles, Karen Bass, have come down decidedly on the side of the violent protesters against the federal government trying to enforce federal immigration law.

And yet with all of that bias and prejudicial news reporting, 54 % of the American people favored deportation. Not just apprehension. Deportation.

And then when we look at the transgender issue, that's been in the news because there was a baseball game in Minnesota where a boy—a biological male, transgendered female, if you will—dominated sports and kept pitching inning after inning to ensure their victory.

We had one here in Clovis, California, the same type of situation where a biological male dominated the sporting event, taking the awards away from his female competitors. Same thing in Northern United States in Washington.

So, what I'm getting at is that the criticism of Donald Trump is not resonating with the people. On all those issues he polls favorably. And why is that? I think it's a disconnect.

I talked about The Wall Street Journal in the past, they seem disconnected from reality after they told us we would now be in a recession, the stock market would be in the proverbial toilet, it would not recover, there would be high inflation and high—that didn't happen. We just looked at the news. Inflation: down. Job growth: good. Unemployment: steadily low. Personal savings and real wages: up. Record profits for the Standard and Poor index.

And yet, when you look at The Wall Street Journal, they've learned nothing and forgotten nothing. Most of their stories today—and I'm speaking over the weekend and early part of next week—what are they talking about? They're talking about a recession coming and people are jittery. But their own news stories do not validate their headlines.

So, the same thing is true of the transgender. People think that's a popular issue. That is a losing issue. Donald Trump is on the right side—70 % to 30 % of the American people—just as he is on the economy. They believe that if you have fair and not just free trade, it's in our interest. They believe that if you cut federal spending, it's in our interest.

They believe, in the case of the Los Angeles riots, they do not want another May, June, July, August, September 2020. They do not want their officials, like [3]former Vice President Kamala Harris, saying, "These riots are not—these demonstrations are not gonna end. They're gonna go on to election." They don't want that. They do not want a Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz's wife saying that she opened up the window so she could smell the burning from the rioting. They don't want that.

So, he nationalized the guard. And when Gavin Newsom, the governor of our state, sides with the protesters, and the mayor, Karen Bass, sides with the protesters who are now violent, we say to them:

Is there something about fire you like? You didn't do anything about the fires in Pacific Palisades. You had policies that discouraged conservation of the hillsides and reasonable trimming and clearing up bushes and shrubs. Didn't you learn from that, Mayor Bass? You were in Ghana of all places. Didn't you learn from that? So, why would you and Newsom attack the federal government for trying to enforce a federal law and then using federal troops to restore order so we don't have a 2020-like riot? And what credibility do you have when you are saying 'reckless' and 'chaotic,' the government. What's reckless and chaotic is right before our eyes. People burning and looting.

So, what am I talking about? I'm talking about the Left's insane opposition to anything Donald Trump does when the evidence is clear that the economy is doing well, that most people want deportations and an orderly [4]immigration process and favor deportation to people who broke the law, and that they don't want biological males in female sports.

And yet, [5]the Left doesn't see that. And so, they just hammer away on unpopular issues. And they wonder why people are kind of tired of them and why Donald Trump seems to be more popular than ever and more successful. It's because he reflects what the people want and the people who oppose him don't.

2.6.12 Strong Fathers Build Civilizations—Weak Ones Lose Them (2025-06-16 23:30)

. June 15th is Father's Day. It's always the third Sunday of June.

It derives, in our country, from the early 1900s, when people wanted to because we had a previous holiday of Mother's Day. They wanted to also honor Father's Day. In Europe, I think, it's called St. Joseph's Day to honor the husband of the Virgin Mary.

And, in any case, we honor what our parents did for us by Mother's Day and for Father's Day. It recalls something that I like to share with you. One of the roles of fathers is to give young children, especially males, a sense of direction. And almost this tragic sense that sometimes you have to do things that you don't want to do, but somebody else won't do them, you're going to be in trouble.

And I look back at my father—I'd like to relate just three things very quickly.

Once he wanted us to work in the summer. We were working on the farm. There wasn't enough work, so he had a friend that wanted us to shake almonds with a mallet. In those days, there was no machine. You just hit the mallet with a canvas. But it was 110 degrees in August. So, he dropped us off in this 40 acre almond field—the four of us—and he started to worry. He said, "My God, it's hot. I've got to go talk to this guy." And the guy said, "No, you said you're going to drop them off." Bottom line. He came back in his early fifties and he had his work clothes on and he got a mallet. And he worked every day, for a week, hitting the trees while we moved the canvas and put them in gunny sack. And he was completely in sweat. And he said, "You boys are going to be in trouble." And every hour, he went down to a mountain drive-in and brought back drinks and water. But he stood by us the whole time. And he outworked us.

Second thing I remember was, I was in Greece and I had a torn ureter. That's when a kidney stone—a staghorn calculus—gets lodged and the ureter and begins to cut. And I was in pretty bad shape and I called my parents—they knew about it—and I said, "The doctor can't take it out. I've got to get home." My father said, "You get on the next flight, I wire you the money. Your mother will find a surgeon. And I will pick you up." I said, "Well, how am I going to get from the airport to Fresno?"

"You worry about that. You worry about the flight. I will get you." So, 20 hours later, I go there and here's my father at the airport. I was 20 years old—excuse me—24. And he picks me up. He was 6'4". He puts me into this old Buick station wagon, that he'd made into an ambulance. He put down all the seats. He had pillows, and he said, "We're off on a wild ride, Victor." And we drove 200 miles, in the middle of the night. And he pulled up right to the ambulance entry at Fresno Community Hospital. He pulled over in Los Banos. He called the surgeon and said, "I'm going to be here. You operate." He pulled in. And within 40 minutes, I was being operated by a surgeon, in Fresno. Because of him. He saved my life.

The other thing that I remember was, I was—very quickly— at Stanford University, in a very bad neighborhood. I didn't have a lot of money. I was on a scholarship. And he was very worried. My mother, of course, was too. And he said, "I'm going to drive up and see this." So, he went up and he saw it was a rough neighborhood. Didn't have a lot of money. The next thing I knew, he came over to my apartment and he had these sacks of frozen foods. And they weren't just prepared foods, they were steaks, they were roast. And he said, "I bought you enough meat for six months. Let's put it in the freezer."

And I said, "Oh my gosh." And my roommate, he was very poor. He was from a steelworker's family in Ohio. So, he had all this meat. And then he said, "You have any money?" And I said—he looked—"Give me your wallet." So, I had $20. And that was a lot of money, in 1975. So, he pulled out his wallet. He had three twenties. He gave all three to me. I said, "You don't have any money to drive home." He said, "You don't worry about it." And he said, "That $80, now you're going to be—I want you to eat well." He did that every time I was in trouble. And I think that's the role of fathers.

And finally, I said to him, "Dad, why do you always do this?" And he said, "Because that's my responsibility. And that will be your responsibility, when you have children. You're always there if they need you. You're not there to pamper them. You're not there to subsidize them. But they need you to keep them going, when they can't go on their own." And he didn't mean that, in the sense of dependency. And he was always like that. And I cherish the memory of him.

And I think all of us, in this period of turbulent times, I think we must reevaluate the role of fathers. To the degree this country will make it, it will be a strong father figure that instructs us how to be masculine. How to be a man. How to protect the weak. How to stand forward and challenge bullies, that prey on the weak and the innocent. And that's a lost art now. And to the degree, that we've had strong fathers, as I did, I think each year of our lives, we appreciate it evermore on Father's Day.
Thank you very much.

2.6.13 The Rogue's New Gallery of Left-Wing Scoundrels (2025-06-16 23:37)

The entire career of [1]race-baiter Al Sharpton was founded on falsehoods about the Tawana Brawley scam.

Nearly everything the Left told us about [2]the Trayvon Martin fight was false.

The “hands up, don’t shoot” Ferguson fable and [3]the Covington kids myth were quickly exposed.

The Daily Signal depends on the support of readers like you. [4]Donate now

The Duke lacrosse and [5]Jussie Smollett melodramas were laughable.

Russian “collusion,” “laptop” disinformation, and [6]Joe Biden “fit as a fiddle” gaslighting were utter lies.

But more recently, the hard Left lost its mind championing a host of violent, unsavory characters.

The illegal alien and El Salvadorian national, Kilmar Abrego Garcia, was portrayed as a victim of unfair deportation in the Left’s larger, losing war for open borders.

Abrego Garcia became a “Maryland Man”: a supposed poor victim of Trump overreach.

He was constructed as a family man engaged in construction to feed his family, who somehow forgot to become “documented” and was deported.

In truth, Garcia is now facing felony indictments for human trafficking. He was a likely MS-13 gang member, a violent and bullying woman-beater, and rarely employed gainfully in construction.

Luigi Mangione was a rich, spoiled kid who dabbled in Jacobin politics.

Posing as a revolutionary, Mangione ambushed Brian Thompson, the CEO of UnitedHealthcare. He murdered him in cold blood near a New York hotel.

Instantly, some on the Left embraced Mangione as a revolutionary hero who delivered justice to a supposedly greedy corporate capitalist.

Mohammed Sabry Soliman, like Garcia, was a violent illegal alien. He bragged about his hatred of Jews in general and Israel in particular.

So Soliman made some Molotov cocktails and tried to incinerate Jewish marchers advocating on behalf of Israeli hostages still held by Hamas.

Soliman's wife and five children, to whom Soliman filmed a video explaining his dedication to violent jihad, were also illegal aliens.

Soliman may well have preferred to burn Jews to remind us of the fires of the Holocaust ovens.

In the mind of the mainstream liberal media, the Soliman family was cruelly detained by the evil Donald Trump administration that was considering returning the illegal aliens to their Middle East homes.

But recently, during the LA riots, the Left went completely crazy as the entire Democrat Party and California state officials sided with violent protesters and illegal aliens.

The open border rioters soon got the message that left-wing California officials were on their side.

So, throngs began burning cars. Illegal aliens waved Mexican flags and burned American flags.

Protesters spat on law enforcement and pelted them with rocks, firecrackers, and concrete blocks.

Stores were looted. Critical freeways were swarmed and shut down.

And for what?

To protest the legal efforts of U.S. Immigration of Customs Enforcement to serve deportation warrants to a few hundred of some 10 million-12 million illegal aliens who had illegally swarmed into the U.S. during the Joe Biden administration's four-year destruction of immigration law.

California Governor Gavin Newsom damned the federal immigration efforts as "chaotic" and "reckless" and seemed obsessed only with Trump.

Then Newsom dared ICE to arrest him.

Like some antebellum, neo-Confederate, states' rights activist, Newsom threatened to withhold California's federal income taxes from the federal government—a possible felony.

Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass—recently infamous for junketing in Ghana while Pacific Palisades burned down—warned ICE that, "We will not stand for this."

What did her threat mean? Did she intend to use force to support the street thugs against her fellow American officers?

California Democrat Congresswoman Norma Torres screamed at overwhelmed ICE agents seeking to issue arrest warrants with the obscene threat, "Get the f— out of LA!"

As the mob violence increased and public outrage grew, a desperate and now embarrassed Newsom could only double down on his obsessions with Trump.

What has caused Newsom's Trump Derangement Syndrome?

Is it because Trump called out the National Guard and Marines to aid an overwhelmed Los Angeles Police Department to stop the violence that left-wing officials and the media had appeased?

In sum, is the Left once again trying to commit political suicide?

Polls showed overwhelming public support for deporting those who illegally entered and reside in the U.S., especially the nearly half a million believed criminals.

Trump's own most supportive demographic in recent polls has been Hispanics. Like all Americans, they are appalled by violent thugs and illegal aliens waving Mexican flags who have no wish to return to Mexico while burning American flags as they demand illegally to stay in the U.S.

The more the incoherent Left claimed the protests were "peaceful" and damned the Trump administration for sending them help, the more the violence continued.

And the more the public was relieved that Trump was trying to stop the riots.

Democrats currently lack sane and effective leaders.

But that is no excuse to swoon over creepy gang-bangers, spoiled-brat assassins, antisemitic burners of Jews, and illegal aliens breaking the law and damning America—while waving Mexican flags.

2.6.14 elon musk and donald trump (2025-06-16 23:41)

All of a sudden, Elon Musk started to attack the “big, beautiful bill” that’s now in the Senate because he said it spent too much money and it was contrary to all the work that he had done with his [1]Department of Government Efficiency team. They were cutting spending. And yet, this was too generous, I suppose. It may increase the deficit, if the economy is not stimulated, as the bill intends.

But the point is that Donald Trump then said he was kind of bizarre, that he has a very thin margin in Congress and he was kind of surprised that his friend and ally would attack him that way. And then that started a cascade.

So, in the next 48 hours, we heard from Elon Musk that Donald Trump owed his victory to his efforts in Pennsylvania. He won the Electoral College, remember, beyond Pennsylvania. It was critical. But it was not sine qua non. He could have won without Pennsylvania, given the Electoral College margin.

And then he said, in addition, that Donald Trump might look at impeachment. That’s a little scary because if the Democrats win the midterms, that’s the first thing they’re going to do. So, that was kind of eerie. He also mentioned the Epstein files. He said he was going to disconnect his SpaceX Dragon component from the national space effort. I don’t think he’s going to do that. That would be nihilistic. And then Donald Trump replied that in kind but not nearly as intense as Elon Musk.

So, what was it all about? People have given all sorts of different explanations. One of them is that the new big, beautiful bill will phase out subsidies for all electric vehicles. And given Tesla’s attacks on—people attacking stations, chargers, dealers, individual drivers, the bad publicity the Democrats ginned up, he can’t afford that right now. He was very upset.

Maybe it was his nominee, he thought, to head NASA that the Trump people felt was—correctly—that was a Democrat and too far left.

And then there were Cabinet secretaries that said that [2]Elon Musk was not just advising them where to cut but sort of demanding.

So, there was always a tense relationship that grew out of an unnatural relationship, in the sense that rarely—we haven't seen anything like this since President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Hopkins, who was a personal adviser to FDR. Unlike Musk, he moved into the White House and basically crafted the whole detente with Josef Stalin's Soviet Union, as a leftist himself.

So, it was a relationship that was very, very close in an unusual way and it was bound to have these tensions.

Then Musk said, you know, he started making these threats. But he can't go anywhere because, remember, the California Coastal Commission, left-wing Coastal Commission, tried to stop additional rocket flights. The Left demonize him. They hate him for what he did with DOGE. He's under assault on Tesla. His whole philosophy is entrepreneurship, lower taxes, less deregulation—not what the Left has. So, he's frustrated because he knows he can't go back to [3]the Left. And yet, he's angry about this bill. And then, when Trump sort of brushed it off, he went DEFCON 1.

Is there a hope to this relationship being healed? I think there is because it was historically rare to have a private citizen so close with the administration. But if you take that away, you can see they have the same enemies—the Left are delighted right now and they're fueling this.

They have the same enemies and they have the same friends. They're not perpendicular, they're parallel. They have the same eventual visions of what America should be. They want less government, less deregulation, fewer taxes, a cultural counterrevolution, unleashing of entrepreneurial talent, a meritocracy, instead of DEI, closed border, legal-only immigration. So, they're almost synonymous.

So, what happens to heal this rift? I think we all know what has to happen. Donald Trump is the most powerful man in the world. But unlike Elon Musk, he doesn't run a private company or even a public-held company by fiat. Even though he has majorities in the House and Senate, he has to compromise. It's like herding cats. He can't get the bill he wants or his advisers want. So, this beautiful bill has elements on border security, on defense that are good. And it's the beginning, not the end.

So, Musk needs to see that, as a CEO, he can rule by directive. He can rule by fiat. And in some ways, he has more power over his domain than Donald Trump—or any president does—over his. So, he has got to appreciate that.

The other thing that he has to appreciate, I think, is that Donald Trump is now in negotiations with three of the meanest SOBs in the world: Xi Jinping, the head of China; Vladimir Putin; and whoever the lunatic theocrats are running things in Iran.

He can't afford to back down in a private dispute with an individual American, even one that's the richest man in the world, because it would send a message to these three characters that if you press Donald Trump, you get him angry or you do something, he will back off. And the Left has been already using that mim.

So, what needs to happen is intermediaries come forward and they spell out the new relationship. It will not be as intense. It will not be as close. It will not be as frequent. And therefore, it will avoid these disruptions. But it will be based on mutual admiration, respect.

But more importantly, Elon Musk needs Donald Trump for the space exploration, for a fair shake on his business deals. And Donald Trump is aided by Elon Musk, especially the SpaceX. So, it's a mutually beneficiary relationship, not just for both of them, but for us, the American people.

And make no mistake about it, [4]the Democratic Party may be neutered, but it is not inert. It is waging potty-mouth videos, congressional disruptions, attacks on Teslas, huge donor-supplied lawfare going after the Trump agenda in these lower district courts. It is all geared up and frenzied for the midterms.

Now is the time for unity, not disunity. And the quicker these two very talented and powerful people can form a new relationship based not as intensely as the past but on mutual respect, the better it is for the country at large.

I'd like to comment on this strange, bizarre, surreal, sudden fallout—or was it so sudden—between Elon Musk and [5]President Donald Trump.

All of a sudden, Elon Musk started to attack the “big, beautiful bill” that's now in the Senate because he said it spent too much money and it was contrary to all the work that he had done with his [6]Department of Government Efficiency team. They were cutting spending. And yet, this was too generous, I suppose. It may increase the deficit, if the economy is not stimulated, as the bill intends.

2.6.15 How the Transgender Movement Turned the Left Against Women (2025-06-24 18:47)

One is that [1]President Donald Trump had issued an executive order suggesting or maybe threatening K-12 sports programs—and indeed, college and higher education as well—that if they allowed biological men to compete in women's sports, then he was going to consider cutting off federal funds for that.

But at the same time he did it, the number of transgendered women—that is biological men who have transitioned to supposedly women—has increased and soared in [2]women's sports.

So, here on the West Coast, a trans athlete dominated the state high school track and field competitions, winning three or four main events. The same thing happened in Oregon. The same thing had happened in Washington. The same thing is happening in Minneapolis with girls baseball in the finals.

The point is it's usually a phenomenon in blue states and in particular, blue cities. And Donald Trump's executive orders are going the way of sanctuary cities. People are just ignoring them because they feel that he wouldn't dare cut off federal funds because it would shut down the whole school.

But let's get some background on this whole transgendered sports phenomenon. And maybe there's five or six things we should keep in mind.

No. 1: We know a lot about gender dysphoria. There's a long history of sex research about people whose psychological or hormonal makeup does not match their physical characteristics. But here's the key: They're very rare.

Until the transgendered—I don't know what we would call it—phenomenon in the last 10 years, we accepted classical epidemiological studies that showed there were about five people who suffered from genuine [3]transgendered phenomenon per 100,000 people: 0.005 %. If you do the math, in a country of about 340 million people, we're talking maybe 20,000, maybe 0.005 %, or five per 100,000, maybe 10.

But you see the Pew poll and other polling ask students on campus, they ask the general public and they say there may be 20 million people. But there has been no history of that once the science of epidemiology started, which suggests it might be more of a trendy phenomenon than actual biological or scientific matter.

The second thing to remember is this is not new.

As a classicist, I can tell you that there are documented fables, myths, poems, histories about people who feel they were in the wrong bodies. The most famous is Catullus Poem 63, about a young man who performs transsexual surgery on himself in a fit of mania in honor of the god—the sexually ambivalent god—Cybele and castrates himself and is very unhappy when he wakes up out of the frenzy.

We have this novelist Petronius' "Satyricon," where a lot of men are cross-dressers—which is a different phenomenon—but transvestism. And we have—I think there's a fable in "Phaedrus" about men who change into women. And we got to remember the god Hermaphroditus that comes from Hermes and Aphrodite—the combination of a male and female god. And there's many fables about that.

So, it's an ancient phenomenon.

Here's another thing to remember. Does anybody know—and I'm asking a genuine question—does anybody know of a female athlete who decided that she was in the wrong body and she transitioned to maleness, manliness, and she won a major event? I know of none.

So, when we talk about transgendered sports, we're talking about one phenomenon. We're talking about men.

And if anybody—let me ask a corollary question as I pause here. Does anybody know a famous, well-known, but especially spectacular male athlete that transitioned? I don't. It's usually men that were not very successful, at least in the elite of their division or their field, who transition to feminism. And then they become very, very successful.

And this is very important because we are told that once you transition, you are a genuine new sex. That your prior muscular skeleton frame doesn't really matter, given your hormonal treatment. But it does. Because when we're talking about transgenderism [4]in sports, we're not talking about women who become men. And because they don't succeed in that sport, that reminds us that they're not fully men. Or if they were, they could just declare their new gender and compete competitively.

And by the same token, 100 % of what the controversy is about are men who have bigger frames, more muscles who transition and dominate women's sports in a way they did not dominate male sports. In other words, they're taking.

Final thoughts: It has so many political ramifications. One is the party of the left, the Democratic Party, has embraced this 20-80 political issue—20 % to 30 % tops support this, of the American people. And yet, they're going down the road of a very unpopular development and supporting transgendered women who are decimating and destroying female sports.

The second thing is it's counterintuitive. The Left was supposed to be for gender parity. And that meant—that was defined by giving money and attention and resources to women so that their sports would be equivalent to male sports. And now we're kind of reactionary. We flipped it upside down, where males go around the back, take over women's sports, and essentially, destroy it. And yet that is popular among many on the left.

And then there's a final political corollary. We were also told by some radical feminists—especially as it applies to women in combat units—that women could do anything that men could do. A small percentage can, physically. But the vast majority—in terms of muscularity, size, frame, endurance, lung capacity—cannot.

So it kind of, in a weird way, also affects that issue that women cannot really compete with men on the battlefield—at least in tasks that require physicality and muscularity.

Let's just end the discussion with a brief summation.

Transgenderism is an old phenomenon. It was very, very rare, a very small percentage of the population. Sometime around 2005 to 2015, it exploded as a civil rights issue. And the numbers have been vastly inflated. It's been trendy among young people on campus. But it has almost destroyed female sports in a way that's ironic, tragically ironic, because [5]the Left once was a protector and the champion of female sports and now it's de facto, it's destroyer.

2.6.16 Misunderstanding Trump (2025-06-24 18:48)

Many are now demanding that [1]President Donald Trump act abroad in the way they think he had promised and campaigned—which can be mostly defined as how closely he should parallel their own version of MAGA.

But Trump's past shows that he never claimed that he was either an ideological isolationist or an interventionist.

He was and is clearly a [2]populist-nationalist: i.e., what in a cost-to-benefit analysis is in the best interests of the U.S. at home and its own particular agendas abroad?

Trump did not like neoconservatism because he never felt it was in our interests to spend blood and treasure on those who either did not deserve such largesse, or who would never evolve in ways we thought they should, or whose fates were not central to our national interests.

So-called optional, bad-deal, and forever wars in the [3]Middle East and their multitrillion-dollar costs would come ultimately at the expense of shorting Middle America back home.

However, Trump's first-term bombing of ISIS, standing down "little rocket man," warning Russian President Vladimir Putin not to invade Ukraine between 2017-21, and killing off Qasem Soleimani, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, and many of the attacking Russian Wagner Group in Syria were certainly not Charles Lindbergh isolationism but a sort of Jacksonian—something summed up perhaps as the Gadsen "Don't tread on me" or Lucius Sulla's "No better friend, no worse enemy."

Trump's much-critiqued references to [4]Putin—most recently during the G7, and his negotiations with him over Ukraine—were never, as alleged, appeasement (he was harder in his first term on Putin than was either Barack Obama or Joe Biden), but art-of-the-deal/transactional (e.g., you don't gratuitously insult or ostracize your formidable rival in possible dealmaking, but seek simultaneously to praise—and beat—him.)

Similarly, Winston Churchill initially saw the mass-murdering, treacherous Josef Stalin in the way Trump perhaps sees Putin, someone dangerous and evil, but who if handled carefully, occasionally granted his due, and approached with eyes wide open, could be useful in advancing a country's realist interests—which for Britain in 1941 was for Russia to kill three-quarters of Nazi Germany's soldiers and, mutatis mutandis, for the U.S. in 2025 to cease the mass killing near Europe, save most of an autonomous Ukraine, keep Russia back eastward as far as feasible, and in Kissingerian-style derail the developing Chinese and Russian anti-American axis.

Trump was never anti-Ukraine, but rather against a seemingly endless Verdun-like war in which after three years neither side had found a pathway to strategic resolution—a war from the distance fought between two like peoples, one with nuclear weapons, and on the doorstep of Europe.

Usually, Trump prefaced the war as a nonsensical wastage of life, at staggering human cost that his supposedly more humane and sophisticated critics never mentioned all that much.

At best, one could say Trump really did lament the horrific loss of life, and at the least, as a builder and dealmaker, wars for him rarely made any practical business sense, i.e., it seems wiser to build things and mutually profit than to blow them up and impoverish all involved.

Add it all up, and what Trump is doing vis-à-vis Iran seems in line with what he has said and done about “America First.”

He sees Israel’s interests in neutering the nuclear agendas of the thuggish and dangerous Iran as strategically similar to those of our own and our allies—but not necessarily tactically in every instance identically so. Thus, Trump wants the Iranian nuclear threat taken out by Israel—if feasible. And he will help facilitate that aim logistically and diplomatically.

If it is not possible for Israel to finish the task, in a cost-to-benefit analysis he will take it out—but, again, only after he is convinced that the end of Iran’s nukes and our intervention far outweigh the dangers of a superpower intervention, attacks on U.S. installations in the region, a wider, ongoing American commitment, spiraling oil prices, or distractions or even injury to his ambitious domestic agenda.

Trump is willing to talk to the Iranians, rarely insults their thuggish leaders, and wants to show that he always preferred exhausting negotiations to preemptive war.

That patience allows him to say legitimately that force was his last choice—as he sees all the alternatives waning.

Thus, Iran’s fate was in its own hands, either to be a nonnuclear rich state analogous to the Gulf States but no longer a half-century rogue terrorist regime seeking to overturn and then appropriate the Middle East order and to threaten the West with nukes.

Tactically, Trump thinks out loud. He offers numerous possible solutions, issues threats, and deadlines (some rhetorical or negotiable, others literal and ironclad). He alternates between sounding like a U.N. diplomat and a Cold War hawk, and sometime pivots and reverses himself as situations change.

All this can confuse his allies, but perhaps confounds more his enemies.

In sum, he believes as far as enemies go, public predictability is dangerous—unpredictability even volatility being the safer course.

Add it all up, and there is a reason Putin did not invade Ukraine during Trump's first term; why for the first time in nearly 50 years the Middle East has some chance at normality with the demise of the Iran's Shia crescent of terror; and why Europe and our Asian allies may be more irritated by Trump than by Obama and Biden, but also probably feel that he is more likely to defend their shared Western interests in extremis, and will lead a far stronger and more deterrent West than his predecessors, one that will prevent war by assuring others that it is suicidal to attack the U.S.

2.6.17 Israel Dismantles Iran's Defenses, but Will It Be Enough? (2025-06-24 18:49)

We are at a historic time in the Middle East. Never in our lifetimes have we been closer to a complete revolutionary fervor that gives promise of normalcy for the Middle East. And never have we been in more danger of seeing the entire region blow up.

What am I referring to? The war right now between [1]Iran and [2]Israel.

It is surreal. If we had this conversation five years ago and I said to you, the Iranian nation—that is huge compared to Israel, 10 times the population—the Iranian nation has lost all control of the Houthi terrorists and they are themselves neutered. Their surrogates in the West Bank, Gaza are neutered. They're gone, Hamas as a fighting force. The formidable, the terrifying

Hezbollah cadres, they're inert.

There is no more Syria—the Assad dynasty, the pro-Iranian Syria—it's in chaos. But whatever the chaos is, it seems to be anti-Iranian. There is no Shia Crescent, starting with Tehran, all the way to the Mediterranean. Lebanon is free of Iranian influence. So is Syria. Gaza, de facto, will be.

There is no Russian presence. It's not a patron. It is not a protector. It's not a power in the Middle East. It's tied down in Ukraine.

And Iran itself, the formidable powerhouse of the Middle East that evoked terror all over, has no defenses.

And now we've seen five days of war, in which the Israelis have systematically dismantled all of the Iranian missile defenses. They have air defenses. They have dismantled the terrorist hierarchy. They have dismantled the people who are responsible for the nuclear program.

We're down to a single critical issue. They have suffered casualties. The Iranians have sent over 400 ballistic missiles and drones into Israel. And 90 % are stopped but that 10 % gets through.

But here's the crux. All of this chaos and all of this war will be for naught if Iran's theocracy emerges intact from this war and its nuclear infrastructure can either be quickly rebuilt or there are elements of it that have been missed and maybe there is enough fissile material—if not already, soon—to make another bomb.

So, here we are at the critical point.

Should Israel continue, does it have the ability to nullify the entire [3]nuclear program, which was the object of this war? Or must it rely on the bunker-buster devices, bombs of the United States?

And if the United States should try to go into these key nuclear facilities and blow them up—with the ordinance and the aircraft that it has, which Israel lacks—will it be fighting an optional Middle East war? Of which the MAGA doctrine says: No more forever wars. No more intervention in the Middle East. No more ground troops.

Or can [4]President Donald Trump say: “I’m not an isolationist. I’m a Jacksonian. You should have known that when I took out Qasem Soleimani in my first term, when I took out Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, when I took out the Wagner Group. I don’t like to intervene. But when people threaten the United States and our deterrence as a matter of conjecture, I want to ensure that they understand the repercussions.”

And so, is there a fight between the isolationists and the Jacksonians or is it just a minor group of people on the right who don’t want any action at all?

And we don’t know the answer yet. But if this war should end with the Iranian regime intact and the elements of its nuclear program recoverable, then, in some ways, it will be all for naught. And people will make the necessary adjustments in the [5]Middle East. And it won’t be necessarily, well, Iran is still very weak. They’ve lost all their terrorist surrogates. They have no air defenses. They’ve lost their media. They’ve lost their commanding—it will be more like, my gosh, Iran survived everything that Israel and, by association, the United States threw at it. It’s indestructible.

And so, we’re at a critical cusp. It’s, do you risk more danger by taking out and eliminating the nuclear threat for good and, by association, humiliate the theocracy to the point it can be overthrown, or do you play it safe and have negotiations and allow the regime and the remnants to survive?

I don’t like forever wars. I don’t like preemptive wars. I do not like the United States intervening anywhere in that godforsaken area. But if the war ends with the regime intact and a recoverable nuclear program, it won’t just be back to square one, it will be a disaster.

So, we’ll see what happens. And hold on, everybody. I think we’re going to see things that we haven’t seen in a lifetime in the Middle East. And it could turn out very bad, but it could also turn out to be quite revolutionary and remake the map of the entire region.

2.6.18 The 'Donald Trump Is Evil' Routine Isn't Going to Cut It Anymore (2025-06-24 18:50)

We're in very troubled and chaotic times. We've got a theater-wide war in the Middle East with the Iranian theocracy on the ropes. We've had mass "No Kings" demonstrations in the United States. And we've had kind of a hysterical reaction to President Donald Trump's deportation warrants.

But here's my point. We're not hearing alternative proposals from the opposition party. What I mean is, if you do not want the 12 million who entered the United States illegally under President Joe Biden, you might want to issue alternative proposals.

Maybe you could say to [1]Donald Trump: "Well, wait a minute. If people have been here five years and they have no criminal record or they're gainfully employed, they're not on any public assistance, can we issue them a green card? Pay a fine?"

I'm not hearing any of that. Nothing. All we're hearing from [2]California Gov. Gavin Newsom and Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass is that everything was peaceful and then Donald Trump nationalized the California National Guard, and the result is chaos.

But that's not what we see. We see people spitting on police officers. We see people throwing concrete at them. We see people looting stores. We see stores boarded up. We see buildings defaced. We see people taking over the street. We see people stopping the 101 Freeway and major traffic. We see people waving the Mexican flag, of the country they don't want to go back to, and spitting and burning the flag of the country they insist on staying in.

So, there's chaos. And the more that Karen Bass assures us that everything is fine, the more that we know that she's not telling the truth. And we're back to the Palisades Fire, where, then, she was physically in Ghana. Now, she's mentally or psychologically somewhere else. But she's not the mayor, as we interpret the mayor.

So, we're looking for positive suggestions from the opposition party.

All we hear about Iran is that Donald Trump wants to start a theater-wide world war. This is what we're hearing from Democratic senators. No American president has said, "I am willing to negotiate," more than Donald Trump with the theocracy.

When we look at the Democratic Party, what do we find? We had a North Carolina representative, she recently posted a media photograph of Donald Trump's head decapitated next to a bloody guillotine with the idea that we need cuts. Think of that. This is an elected representative disseminating, basically, a call to behead the president of the United States, who had survived a year ago two targeted assassination attempts.

Then we had our own senator here in California, [3]Alex Padilla. He deliberately did not wear his identification. In fact, nobody knows him. If I saw Alex Padilla on television, I wouldn't know he was our senator. He's never done anything. But nevertheless, he had no identification. He heard that Kristi Noem, secretary of homeland security, was gonna have a press conference. He barges in. He disrupts it. He tries to make a scene. And what happens? The Secret Service doesn't know who he is either, so they restrain him. And then he becomes a folk hero with his street performance.

Unfortunately for Padilla, he thought it would be a Sen. Cory Booker moment. Remember Cory Booker—25 hours to filibuster nothing? There was no impending law. It was just “Donald Trump is evil” for 25 hours. He thought he would get the same media attention. But unfortunately, there was the “No Kings” parade and the war in Iran, and nobody really knew much about what he had done, other than he'd made a complete fool out of himself.

And then we had this No Kings parade. And it was really funded by multibillionaire left-wing donors, like Christy Walton, one of the heirs, by marriage, to the Walton fortune; #MeToo; all of these groups.

But what I don't understand—maybe you can help me—is “No Kings”? Donald Trump has been subject to more lower court district injunctions in the first five months of his administration than President Barack Obama and Joe Biden combined throughout their whole 12-year tenures.

He has been the object of five civil and criminal suits when he was in the political wilderness. He was the subject of an effort to take him off the ballot. He was the only president ever in history to be impeached two times. King? He has had more judicial, executive, and congressional restraints placed upon him, which he has followed, than any president in history.

So, the whole basis of this No Kings demonstration was incoherent.

Let me just quote, in finishing, a few vital statistics. At the height of all of this paranoia and hysteria about [4]illegal immigration, deportations, the people—the people, us—CBS took a poll, 54 % supported Donald Trump to continue deporting people who had come here illegally. Illegally. And then we had a poll from Rasmussen—a weekly tracking poll—that, you know, sampled about 1,700 people: “Do you support what Donald Trump is doing as president?” And it was 53 % positive.

But here was the really stunning statistic: 54 % of African Americans expressed positive appraisals of Donald Trump. I think it was mostly because they support the deportation of illegal aliens. But 53 % of Hispanics did too. This is at a time when Donald Trump is being smeared and slandered as a racist, a fascist, a dictator. Yet, minority groups, constituents polled higher—in the case of African Americans—than so-called whites. And Hispanics polled the same, 53 % approval, as whites.

So, something is missing here. And I think I know what it is. If you do not have a coherent, positive message—and [5]the Democrats don't—and you keep haranguing and trying to smear and slander and talk about killing the president of the United States, then people are going to lose confidence here. And that's what's happened in California with Mayor Karen Bass, Gavin Newsom. And it's happening on a national scene.

We're getting incoherent chaos and nihilism when we need a two-party system and people to offer constructive suggestions. We're not getting that and I don't think we will.

2.6.19 The Optimistic, the Realistic, and the Pessimistic Scenarios for Iran (2025-06-24 18:51)

We're in the midst of about the seventh to eighth day of this Iranian-Israeli conflict and we're getting all sorts of information. It's not disinformation or misinformation, it's just speculation because we don't really have enough information coming out of Iran or out of the [1]White House or out of Israel to make a firm consensus—a solid consensus—of what's actually going on.

In that lacuna, maybe we should just, very quickly, look at a pessimistic, an optimistic, and a realistic appraisal.

Here's what the pessimists are saying—these are not my views. I'm trying to give an accurate portrayal of what they're saying.

The pessimists, both here in the United States and abroad, are of two types. They are the MAGA base and they are saying:

This breaks [2]President Donald Trump's promise not to intervene in wars that are optional. This is a forever war. If we hit the Iranians, that will not be the end of it. That will be the beginning. They will send cadres all around the world to attack our diplomats, our soldiers. They may try to kill Trump, again. And this is a violation of his campaign oath.

Realistically, some military analysts say:

Well, wait a minute. Even if you take out some of the more prominent nuclear facilities, doesn't mean they can't be rebuilt very quickly. So, then the question hinges on: Are you going to take out the regime?

There's not a lot of evidence in the past that airstrikes will take out a regime. We tried it with Saddam Hussein, as you remember, in 2003. And it did not work. We tried it with Muammar Gaddafi during the Reagan administration. It did not work. We couldn't quite get rid of Slobodan Milosevic. That was a combined air, in the Balkans, and we had troops on the ground.

So, it doesn't seem that even if the Israelis or us took out the supreme leader, it doesn't necessarily mean that the government would collapse or that whatever replaced it would be much different, in this pessimistic appraisal.

And the pessimist then would say:

Why not negotiate and bring back the monitors? And you would have a breathing space of three to four years, given the rubble of the current nuclear infrastructure, whether it be heightened, the tension. And we could negotiate ourselves out of this and stop this war that has ripples throughout the [3]Middle East and involve superpower possible intrusion from China, Russia.

Let's go through the most optimistic scenario, very quickly. There are people who are saying:

No, no, no, no, no, no. This is going great. Israel's taken out 50 % of the mobile launchers. If you look at the number of missiles that are reaching Israel each day, they are diminishing. And Israel's ability, therefore, to knock out these vestigial attacks will increase. And they have wiped out all of the command and control of people in their 50s and 60s in the military. They have taken out a whole generation of nuclear physicists.

Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei is all by himself. And now that he's hit an Israeli hospital, he can be taken out. And the Iranian people may come up and decide—come out of the shadows and say, 'We're tired of them, especially because most of these people that have tormented and directed the torture and the oppression and the destruction of our daily lives are dead.'

And now, Khamenei is under assault. And he may be killed and that would create a revolution. And if you have a revolution, even if you did not hit all of the sites that would be necessary to ensure the end, forever, of the nuclear program of Iran, a new government would be better. And they, on their own initiative, would take it out.

That's an optimistic appraisal.

Here's a realistic appraisal. That Donald Trump is going to wait for at least a week. And he is going to see if the Israelis can come up, on their own, with a formula, in lieu of a bunker-buster, to diminish or actually end all of these nuclear infrastructures, viabilities.

And what do I mean by that? Send commandos on the ground. Take F-35s with small bunker-busters just again and again, every day. Send them through the same blast hole. Or maybe get a C-130 and jerry-rig it up to get a—I don't know—a 30,000-pound bunker-buster. You wouldn't be at 50,000 feet. It might not have the momentum. But if you came in at 30,000 and you had air supremacy, maybe you could drop two or three of them, four or five of them with a C-130. And the United States would not be involved.

And then more importantly, [4]Israel is achieving complete supremacy of the air. And by that I mean not just the ability to go into Iranian airspace, but more importantly, to diminish both the number and the effectiveness of Iranian missiles that are landing in Israel.

As far as the MAGA base, the fact that Donald Trump said that he would take up to two weeks to make that decision and that he's talked to people in the MAGA base and he's assured them there's not gonna be a lot of boots on the ground, there's not going to be a long American presence. If he intervened, it would be a one- or two-shot deal.

I think he's pacified most of the criticism because the MAGA base isn't going to say, "My gosh, you sinned against us. We're going to look at—" Whom? There's nobody else there. There's only Donald Trump. There's no Republican alternative to him. And so, I think he's pretty safe there.

And finally, are Russia and China gonna come in? I don't think so. Russia looks at this and it starts to bully. It starts to say, "This is our former patron. We should protect it." But Russia's got its hands full in Ukraine. It's lost over a million wounded, dead, and lost. It is in a wartime mode against Ukraine. And more importantly, when they look at the Middle East and they see all this turmoil and oil prices creeping up, they think it's wonderful.

How about China? China, for just the opposite reasons, is not going to intervene. It looks at this and says, "Oh my gosh, we used to get 70 % to 80 % of the oil from [5]Iran, 50 % of all the Middle East oil goes to us. We don't want any turmoil. Please just cool it. Stop it. It's not in our interest to encourage this conflict to continue." And more importantly, China is in a trade war with us. And the last thing it wants is to get on the wrong side of a still military-superior United States.

Sum it up: The war seems like it's going well for Israel, in their point of view. There's a 50-50 chance there might be a regime change. There's probably a 25 % chance, if there were, it would be something much, much better. The United States may have to intervene but it's holding back because it still thinks that the Israelis, as brilliant as they are, will come up with some sort of new solution to destroy these underground facilities.

That is the realistic appraisal. And it's somewhere in between, as I said, the pessimistic and the optimistic outlook that I reviewed.

2.6.20 Can the Left Ever Stop Its Crazyiness? (2025-06-24 18:53)

California Sen. [1]Alex Padilla recently crashed a press conference by Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem. He deliberately wore no identification. He gave no advance warning that he would disrupt her briefing.

Instead, Padilla barged forward to the podium, shouting about the deportation of illegal aliens.

Immediately, Padilla got his media moment wish—once Secret Service agents, who had no idea who Padilla was, forcibly removed him.

Sen. Cory Booker, D-N.J., recently attempted a [2]pseudo-filibuster, speaking nonstop for 25 hours straight—not to delay legislation, but to fixate on President Donald Trump.

South Carolina Democrat state Rep. Julie von Haefen just posted on social media an image of a bloody guillotine. It bore the title “In these difficult times, some cuts may be necessary” and was juxtaposed with an image of a hanging, beheaded Trump, who, a year ago, was the target of two failed [3]assassination attempts.

The more Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass and California Gov. Gavin Newsom scream at Trump for [4]nationalizing the California Guard to stop Los Angeles’ nightly violent anti-ICE protests, the more the two appear on the side of those who riot, destroy property, and attack police.

Yet who really wants to side with illegal aliens who spit on and burn American flags while waving [5]Mexican flags?

Recently, some Democrats and leftists have romanticized [6]Kilmar Abrego Garcia—an illegal alien, accused domestic abuser, gang member, and alleged human trafficker.

They also canonized illegal alien Mahmoud Khalil. But that pro-Hamas “student” helped organize and defend sometimes violent and antisemitic demonstrations at [7]Columbia University.

For some on the Left, the assassin of a UnitedHealthcare CEO, the rich kid [8]Luigi Mangione, has become a folk hero.

Others champion the undocumented family of illegal alien Mohammed Sabry Soliman and demand that they not be deported home to the Middle East—despite Soliman’s recent attempt to murder Jews using a homemade flamethrower and Molotov cocktails.

Former Democrat candidate Hillary Clinton, along with other prominent Democrats, mocked the recent Washington, D.C., military parade commemorating the 250th anniversary of the army, comparing it unfavorably with their own concurrent “[9]No Kings” anti-Trump protests.

Those demonstrations—subsidized by left-wing billionaire donors—were utterly incoherent.

No other president has faced more lower [10]federal court injunctions blocking executive orders than Trump.

Indeed, dozens of cherry-picked,[11] left-wing district judges—the real unchecked “kings”—now routinely block almost every one of Trump’s executive orders.

Why are opposition Democrats not offering alternative agendas and compromises?

Could they partner with Trump to allow green cards to illegal aliens who have no criminal records, have not been on public assistance, are now employed, and have resided in the U.S. for over five years?

Could Democrats meet with the president to express bipartisan support for [12]democratic Israel in its existential war with theocratic Iran?

Instead, why do Democrats throw two-year-old temper tantrums to howl nihilistically at everything Trump says and does?

One, exasperated Democrats lack all levers of political power—the Congress, the White House, and the Supreme Court. So, they take to the media and the streets.

Two, Democrats are permanently frustrated that the more they scream and stomp, the more polls show radical declines in public support for their party.

Three, their nemesis, 79-year-old Trump, seems impervious to [13]Democrat lawfare, threats, and smears.

Despite the hysterical attacks, he is still polling now about where prior presidents like George Bush and Barack Obama were at similar junctures in their second terms.

The more Trump is smeared as a fascist or dictator, the more polls—like the latest liberal Economist/YouGov survey—show him gaining public support for securing the border and deportation.

And the more the Left damns Trump as a racist, the more he wins unprecedented black and Hispanic support. In recent Rasmussen tracking polls, Trump garnered 54 % approval from black voters and 53 % from Hispanics.

Four, Trump proves a hard-to-hit, moving target for the frustrated Left. He cannot quite be pigeonholed as a predictable right-wing bogeyman.

Unlike the Left, when Trump weighs in on the Ukraine war, he first begins by deploring the tragic waste of over a million lives.

No one is more pro-Israel. Yet no one has offered a losing Iran a chance to negotiate its way out of total and humiliating defeat.

Trump talks nonstop about protecting the middle class. Unions like him; Wall Street mostly despises him.

Trump wants to deport as many illegal alien criminals as possible. But he is willing to consider green cards for unlawful aliens who are working, crime-free, and with long residence in the U.S.

The Trump counterrevolution barrels ahead. The people cheer. And Democrats keep barking at the moon.

2.6.21 Iran Has Only One Negotiating Chip Left: Its Survival (2025-06-24 18:54)

On June 22, this past Saturday night, [1]President Donald Trump ordered B-2 bombers—these are the multibillion-dollar bombers based in Missouri—and seven of them apparently flew almost 15 hours one way, 6,000 miles. And each of them perhaps was equipped with two of these terrible bunker-busters, 30,000 pounds. Fourteen of them were dropped on the Fordow nuclear site. And cruise missiles from submarines then hit the other two as well.

And the question is, what happens now?

We have to get some context. Usually, when an American president does anything in the [2]Middle East, it doesn't work out well for a variety of reasons.

Jimmy Carter's presidency was destroyed by his failed 1980 April rescue attempt. Joe Biden was about 50 % approval until the disastrous flight from Kabul, Afghanistan. George W. Bush, when Saddam Hussein's statue fell in spring 2003, had about a 55 % approval rating. But after the insurgency and the surge and the insurgency, he left office with historic low polls.

I don't think Barack Obama even recovered from that misadventure in 2011, where he—under the influence of Samantha Power, Susan Rice, Ben Rhodes, and Hillary Clinton—bombed Libya. And that went off and on for five years.

So, it doesn't have a good pedigree.

And what follows from any air campaign is not necessarily good. We took out Slobodan Milosevic mostly by air, that tended to work, there was something better. I think that we took out Libya, something worse followed. There was chaos. We took all out Saddam—maybe after years and years of turmoil and blood, maybe something's better in Iraq.

But the point is, when you take out a leader or you bomb, it's not easy for the people on the receiving end to sympathize with you or to rise up against the dictator.

So, what's going to happen? Well, we gotta remember that what Trump did was not 1991, first desert war, where it's a preliminary to a ground invasion. It was not 2003, preliminary to a ground invasion. It was not 2011, bombing Libya for regime change. There was a specific task. And that was to take out what remained of the nuclear acquisition program in [3]Iran. And apparently, it did that in spectacular fashion.

So, what is going to be the reaction to all of this? Everybody says, "Well, there'll be—" I don't see the people rising up, a Green Revolution redux. But what might happen is that the military should be feeling very uneasy.

The top 20 or 25 officers were taken out by [4]Israel. They know there's a list. The subordinate officers, the next tier, must know their name is on it. They must know that people are angry.

That over 50 years, nearly, they spent a trillion dollars subsidizing the Houthis, Hezbollah, Hamas, the Assad dynasty. And for what? It's all up in smoke. And then they probably lost another trillion dollars, over 50 years, through sanctions and oil embargoes. For what? It's up in smoke.

And so, people in the military must know that the public will be pointing their fingers at them, as well as the theocracy. They must know that any association with the theocracy got their superiors killed. And it'll be interesting to see what the military's attitude is if they were further humiliated.

Will Russia and China do anything? I doubt it. I'll talk about that in a subsequent episode.

So, where are we right now? Right now the ball is in the court of Iran. Trump has said to them, "You can come back and negotiate." But what would they negotiate over? Their one card was, "We have the specter of a nuclear bomb. So, you better come to us and talk." They don't have that anymore, at least not for the foreseeable future. The only negotiable item is whether they survive or not. And I don't think they're going to want to negotiate that. And so, what are they going to do?

It's probably going to descend into something like the Houthis, Red Sea, western Israel, tit for tat, tit for tat, until finally they get exhausted.

Finally, what is the stature of Israel and Trump in the aftermath? Well, Israel has done the unbelievable. If we had this conversation on Oct. 8, 2023, we would've said the very idea that they're going to take on the formidable Hezbollah legions, that they're going to destroy Hamas, that they're going to neutralize some of the Houthis, that they're going to cause the Assad dynasty to flee, that Russia's going to be out of the Middle East, that Iran is going to be defenseless—no one would have believed it.

Their only problem, Israel's, will be overconfidence. After the Six-Day War, the Yom Kippur surprise happened. After their success, since then, we had Oct. 7 to the day 50 years later. I don't think they're going to get overconfident anymore.

As far as the United States, they have restored the deterrence that was lost by [5]Joe Biden in a variety of ways but most spectacularly, in Afghanistan. So, it's a very tense situation. No one can predict what's going to follow. But for right now, things are much better, now after Saturday night, than they were before.

2.6.22 The Left Calls Trump's Iran Strike 'Illegal.' Its History of Inconsistency Says Otherwise. (2025-06-24 18:55)

What will be the reaction, here and abroad, in the coming days and weeks to the June 21, Saturday night destruction—for all practical purposes—of the Iranian nuclear program by the United States, as ordered by [1]President Donald Trump?

If you look at home, I don't think the Left is going to have much complaint. I mean, they're going to try to say that Donald Trump should have had permission from Congress. But after all, Sen. Tim Kaine, he's the author of the new legislation chastising Trump for this, but he was the head of the Democratic National Committee in 2011 when Hillary Clinton, Susan Rice, Samantha Power, and Ben Rhodes urged then-President Barack Obama to bomb Libya. And that was a disastrous decision and there was no congressional authority to grant that.

Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi was in the middle of a reform with his children, and we got rid of him. And then, we were bombing them on and off for the next five years. The last thing that Barack Obama did in office—remember this—on Jan. 19, 2017, he ordered B-2 bombers, just like we saw, all the way over to Libya to bomb Libya. There wasn't anybody in the Democratic Party that tried to stop that or said that was unconstitutional.

So, the Left has no history of consistency, no logic, no morality on this. And privately, they understand they had no solution to force Iran to give up this bomb. After all, Donald Trump came in in January and all of a sudden, he was told they almost have a bomb. And his first reaction was, "Well, what did [2]former President Joe Biden do? Why did he lift the sanction? Why did he give them $100 billion in new revenue?" So, the Left is going to be inert and quiet, I think.

How about the MAGA Right? Everybody says, "The MAGA Right's going to defect. Stephen Bannon, Tucker Carlson, Candace Owens—everybody's upset—Rand Paul." They have concerns that this "America First," MAGA agenda does not want to get into optional wars in the Middle East. But this is not a 1991 preliminary to an invasion, 2003 preliminary to invasion, 2011 preliminary to Gaddafi regime change.

This was a designated, finite act. And now it's over with and it's up to Iran to do what it wants. It can either negotiate and become a peaceful presence with peaceful nuclear power or it can continue its terror. But it has no terrorist appendages to hurt us, really. And we'll see.

But even Tucker Carlson, remember, quite logically said, when he had that fiery exchange with Sen. Ted Cruz, he said, "If I had known that Iran wanted to kill Donald Trump, I would order—I would want somebody to order to bomb Iran." We now know that the terrorist that was planning to kill Trump is being tried in absentia. He's in Iran. It's not in doubt. And so, we bombed Iran.

And where would anybody go? I'm a MAGA supporter. If I was vehemently opposed to this one-off strike, I'd say, "Well, how about illegal immigration? It doesn't exist anymore. Look at the border. Look at all of these things that Donald Trump has done, like, with the universities, with the tax relief." So, there was so much of the MAGA agenda that his critics agree with, I don't think they're going to be very vehement.

How about abroad? The Europeans were going to be very disturbed. This was not multilateral. The U.N. wasn't involved. And I can guarantee you they're calling Donald Trump up right now and saying, "Thank God you did this because we were much closer to Iran than you were. And we were very worried about this crazy regime—according to the Israelis—days away from obtaining a nuclear weapon."

How about the Arab world? The Arab world, before this attack, was very—it was angry at Israel. Remember they said, "The Zionists should not have had a preliminary, preemptive war. This was wrong. It's disruptive." And they had a point. They ship oil out of the Strait of Hormuz. But that was the public reaction.

Privately, they were telling the Israelis or the United States, "If you're going to get rid of the Iranian nuclear threat and neuter that regime, please, please do it. But do it completely. Do not leave this wounded animal in our backyard because we can't handle it. So, either get rid of it or promise us that you will get rid of it."

And now, the reaction to this destruction, especially at Fordow, is typical: Express public regret, instability, da, da, da, but private relief.

And then finally, what are China and Russia going to do? Russia, everybody says that [3]Russian President Vladimir Putin is very angry. Dmitry Medvedev, the deputy chairman of Russia's Security Council, has said that he might give nuclear weapons to Iran. I don't think he'll do that because the last thing in the world you want is nuclear proliferation because there's a lot of people in Japan and South Korea and Australia and Taiwan that want [4]nuclear weapons and, unlike the ones in Iran, they will work. And we are doing our best to ensure them they're all under our umbrella. So, that would be an empty threat and a stupid threat.

But more importantly, Putin is saying, privately, "I'm tied down in Ukraine. I can't do anything. I've lost a million dead and wounded. I've been kicked out of the Middle East when I lost the pawn of Bashar Assad. But the fact there's turmoil in the [5]Middle East and the price of oil will go up benefits me because I'm broke. And this will be very good for my war machine."

As far as China goes, China's got the opposite reaction, in one way, but it's similar: "I don't want to get involved. Until all this happened, we bought 90 % of Iranian oil. I want that oil on the market. And we bought 50 % of the oil that left the Strait of Hormuz. I don't like what happened. But on the other hand, I think that Trump is a little bit too volatile and is a little bit too uncertain and is a little bit too fluid for me. So, I'm going to quiet down and make sure that stability returns to the region and we get our oil."

And that, finally, that dittos Putin as well. Putin is going to say to everyone in his circle:

There was a reason that I went in under George Bush into Georgia and Ossetia when he was wounded from Iran. There was a reason I went in—Barack Obama. Remember the 'hot mic deal' in Seoul? 'Give me some space, Putin. And this is my last election, and I'll dismantle missile defense.' That's when I went into the Donbas and Crimea. There was a reason—once I saw what happened in Afghanistan—why I went in, during the Biden administration, back in and tried to take Kyiv. I didn't go in during the Trump administration. And I don't want to do anything like that again, either, during the second Trump administration. He's just too unpredictable.

Bottom line: All the critics here and abroad, they're going to be loud, but I don't think they're going to have any consequence.

2.7.1 128 Democrats Reject Latest Trump Impeachment—Here's the Major Reason Why (2025-07-02 21:15)

The Democrats, under kind of a volatile and unhinged Rep. Al Green, introduced articles of impeachment in an effort to impeach [1]President Donald Trump for a third time.

Remember, there were two successful impeachments. But of course, they failed to get a conviction in the Senate during Trump's first term.

And this one was strange because 128 Democrats of the House caucus voted against it. And so, Reps. Al Green and Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and Rashida Tlaib and Ilhan Omar and all of these people that were affiliates for "the squad" and the radical fringe couldn't even get a majority of Democrats.

And you know why that was? Think about it for a reason. One of them was that Sen. Chuck Schumer in the Senate and [2]Rep. Nancy Pelosi, who's not speaker but she still has the influence on Rep. Hakeem Jeffries, the speaker who voted against the resolution, said, "Wait a minute. You got to remember that if we do this, we're going to get killed by clips every day during the midterms."

And those clips are going to show [3]President Barack Obama, in the single year 2016, he dropped 26,000 bombs. And it wasn't just in Syria. It wasn't just in Iraq. It wasn't just in Afghanistan. He dropped them in Libya. He dropped them in Somalia. He dropped them in Yemen.

Twenty-six thousand bombs. And they all had one thing in common. He didn't think he had to go to the Congress to ask permission. Why did he think that? I don't think he was legally required to. But there was a political reason.

At that time, in 2016, he had no majority in the House. He was down over 40 seats. And he had no majority in the Senate. And had he gone and said, "I'm the Mad Bomber. And I've been bombing Libya from 2011 to 2016 without your approval. And I want to keep doing it. I've dropped 26,000 bombs this year. I want to keep bombing," they would've said, "No. It's partisan, maybe."

And so, Nancy Pelosi and Hakeem Jeffries knew that that was hypocritical.

On the last day—as I said earlier—the last day that Barack Obama was in office, he knew that Trump was coming in. And he knew that he had to go out with a bang. So, he took the B-2 bombers, probably some of the same pilots, and he ordered them to take off from Missouri. And they flew 5,000 miles longer to Libya. And they bombed supposed terrorist elements of this Libya chaotic mess that he had created by bombing it earlier in 2011. Nobody in the House, on the Democratic side, said a thing.

So this opposition is really hurting the Democrats because it's so hypocritical. But more importantly, it's an act of omission.

You want to say to them: "Nancy Pelosi, [4]Hakeem Jeffries, AOC, what's the status of homeless people in your district? What do you want to do with illegal immigrants? You brought them in, 12 million of them. And they're here illegally. Why would you have sanctuary cities that protect even the criminal element? Why would you not want to deport them when 54 % of the American people do?"

In other words, they're not paying any attention to what people want: affordable housing, affordable gas, affordable energy, safe streets, secure borders, deterrent foreign policy. None of that.

All they're doing is saying, "If Donald Trump does something, we are going to be irate. We're going to use pornography. We're going to use smuddy language. And we're going to oppose him. And now, we're going to impeach him."

And some people in that party said, "This is so unhinged. It's so contradictory. It's so paradoxical. It's so hypocritical. It's just fodder for campaign messages in every purple House race in two years. Don't do it."

So, it was a surprise.

And as far as people on the Right, to finish, we were told that 30,000 people were going to die, from some of our close friends in the MAGA group. We were told this was going to be World War III. And then you wanted to say to yourself: Well, who would do that? Who would do that? Who would start World War III? Russia? Russia's bogged down in a theater-wide war. It's lost a million dead, wounded. It's not going to do anything.

Well, China? China. China. China's got about 500 or 800 nuclear weapons. We have about 6,000 or 7,000 that could be deliverable very quickly. But more importantly, China's oil comes outta the Strait of Hormuz. They don't want to go in there. They don't want to send anything to Iran.

And finally, our people who impeached Donald Trump should remember a great truth. One of the subtexts of this entire war—I should say two—Iran was a complete paper tiger. It had never any military ability. It had almost lost the war against Saddam Hussein from '80 to '88. It sued for peace. Its only method of hurting people was through third-party terrorists. It had no military capability to speak of. And yet, it scared seven or eight presidents. That was No. 1.

And finally, Iran is the most hated country in the world—the theocracy is. So, when we had this strike and the aftermath, the only people who were voicing support were people like North Korea, Venezuela. And that's about it. Anybody else basically said, "Well, I don't like the United States. And I don't like Europe. But these people are crazy. And I do not want them to get a bomb."

So, they have no support. And they weren't militarily capable. And the only people who failed to see that—and indirectly, by this impeachment, were trying to help Iran—were whom? Our own [5]Democratic Party—at least a minority of them.

Seventy-nine of our Democratic colleagues in the House wanted to embarrass Donald Trump and line up on the side with a few lunatic regimes that did not even include Russia and China and others of that ilk.

2.7.2 In the End, Everyone Hated the Iranian Theocracy (2025-07-02 21:17)

It is hard even to digest the incredible train of events of the last few days in [1]the Middle East.

[2]Iran had been reduced to an anemic, performance-art missile attack on our base in Qatar—the last Parthian shot from a terrified regime, desperate for an out—and a ceasefire.

Iran would have been better off not launching such a ceremonial but ultimately humiliating proof of impotence.

Even worse for the theocracy, Iran's temporary reprieve came from the now magnanimous but still hated [3]U.S. President Donald Trump.

So ends the creepy mystique of the supposedly indomitable [4]terror state of Iran, the bane of the last seven American presidents over half a century.

For Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei, it was hard to swallow that U.S. bombers got their permission to fly into Iranian airspace from [5]the Israeli air force.

A good simile is that Trump put a pot of water on the stove, told Iran to jump in, put the lid over them, then smiled, turned up the heat—and will now let them stew.

As postbellum realities now simmer in Iran, the theocracy is left explaining the inexplicable to its humiliated military and shocked but soon-to-be-furious populace. All the regime's blood-curdling rhetoric, apocalyptic threats against Israel, goose-stepping thugs, and shiny new missiles ended in less than nothing.

A trillion dollars and five decades' worth of missiles and centrifuges are now up in smoke. That money might have otherwise saved Iranians from the impoverishment of the last 50 years.

How about the little Satan Israel, to which Iran for nearly 50 years promised extinction?

Israel had destroyed Iran's expeditionary terrorists, Iran's defenses, its nuclear viability, and the absurd mythology of Iranian military competence. And worse, Israel showed it could repeat all that destruction when and if necessary.

So, the most hated regime in the world crawled into the boiling pot because it looked around in vain for someone to void Trump's ultimatum for a cease and desist.

But there were no last-minute saviors to rescue them.

The dreaded decades-long Iranian nuclear threat?

It is either gone for now, or if it resurfaces, it will be again far easier to vaporize at will than to rebuild a lost trillion-dollar investment.

Russia? Its former Barack Obama-John Kerry re-invitation back into the Middle East lasted only a decade.

It will now cut its losses like it did with the vanished Assad kleptocracy in Syria. Putin exits the Middle East not entirely displeased that his lunatic Iranian client did not get a bomb—but did get its just desserts. A tense Middle East tends to prop up Russian export oil prices.

Did China come to the mullahs' aid?

No, they were not shy about ordering their Iranian lackey to keep the Strait of Hormuz open, through which 50 % of Chinese-purchased oil passes.

For Chinese leader Xi Jinping, the Iranians are treated as little more than Uyghurs with oil.

The world decided that it was tired of a half-century of crybully terrorism, empty nuke threats, mindless mobs screaming scripted banalities, cowardly murdering, and medieval theocrats threatening the general peace.

So, the world turned its back on Iran. And with a wink and nod, it let Israel and the U.S. do what they must.

As for Iran's terrorist appendages, Hezbollah's commanders are either dead, maimed, or in hiding.

Hamas has fled into a subterranean labyrinth.

The last Assad thug fled to Russia.

The crazy Houthis? They are reconsidering the idea of launching their last missile at the cost of their last port or power grid.

The anti-Trump Democrats and loony left?

Their talk of impeaching Trump for the supposedly "illegal" 35-minute, one-off strike will fade.

The Trump mission equaled less than one day of Obama's predator drone strikes, targeted killings, or his five-year chaotic bombing in Libya.

Is the incoherent left furious that there is no more Iranian nuclear threat?

Mad that no Americans were killed last Saturday night?

Furious America likely killed few if any Iranians.

Or is it raging because Trump ignored Iran's last-gasp attack and instead orchestrated a cease-fire?

Of course, in the Middle East, there is never a real end to anything.

We may see freelancing terrorists try to fill the vacuum of Iran's decline. Or Iran itself may try to let loose a terrorist cell. It may later boast it has hidden away some enriched uranium.

But no matter.

The dimensions of this new Middle East will persist.

The new reality is that either Israel or the U.S. —if they keep their earned confidence within proper limits—can now ensure a non-nuclear Iran by easily blowing up its costly nuclear program as often as it is rebuilt.

2.7.3 The Cost of D&D and Warhammer: Are They Really That Expensive? (2025-07-04 08:10)

Tabletop hobbies like Dungeons & Dragons (D &D) and [1]Warhammer often come with a reputation for being pricey. Between rulebooks, miniatures, dice, paints, and accessories, it's easy to see why. But how does the cost of D &D and Warhammer stack up against other pastimes? More importantly, are they really as expensive as they seem when you consider the value they provide?

Let's break it down and explore why these hobbies might just give you the best bang for your buck.

That Initial Sticker Shock

When you're starting out, the cost of D &D and Warhammer can feel like a big investment:

- Dungeons & Dragons: A core set of rulebooks ([2]Player's Handbook, Dungeon Master's Guide, Monster Manual) can cost around $150. Dice and accessories might add another $20– $50.
- Warhammer: A starter set can range from [3] $100– $200, and paints, brushes, and additional miniatures can easily push your spend to $500 or higher.

That's no small sum. But let's compare this to other popular leisure activities.

Cost Comparisons: Hobby vs. Entertainment

1. Cinema Nights

A single movie ticket averages around $15. Add popcorn, a drink, and maybe a snack, and you're looking at $25– $30 for about two hours of entertainment.

- Annual Cost: If you go to the cinema twice a month, that's $600+ a year.
- Value: While a great movie is enjoyable, the experience is fleeting, and you leave with nothing tangible.

2. Video Games

A new video game costs about $60, and you might buy 3–4 games a year. Factor in subscriptions like Xbox Game Pass or PlayStation Plus ($120/year), and your annual expense can climb to $300– $400.

- Value: Video games can provide dozens of hours of entertainment, but they're often solo experiences and offer limited creative engagement.

3. Sports and Fitness

Joining a gym or a fitness class can cost over $100 per month, depending on where you live. That's in excess of $1,200 a year. If you play a team sport, equipment and league fees can add hundreds more.

- Value: Great for health and social interaction, but the cost often doesn't include tools for creative or intellectual growth.

The Bang-for-Your-Buck Advantage of D &D and Warhammer

Dungeons & Dragons

- Initial Cost: $150– $200 for core books and dice.
- Recurring Costs: Minimal. Many players stick with the same materials for years, and free resources (like online tools and community content) reduce the need for further purchases.
- Hours of Fun: A single campaign can last months or even years, with weekly sessions that provide hours of entertainment.

The Math: If your group plays weekly for a year (50 sessions), and your setup cost is $200, that's $4 per session. Compare that to a $15 movie ticket for just two hours!

Reduce your Costs: As a player the cost of D &D can be minimized. You can get away with buying only the players handbook and some dice. There are always second hand versions available reducing the initial cost even more.

Warhammer

- Initial Cost: $300 for a starter set, paints, and brushes.
- Recurring Costs: New miniatures and paints can add to the cost, but many players focus on building their collection gradually over time.
- Hours of Fun: Painting and customizing models alone can provide dozens of hours of creative enjoyment, not to mention the hours spent playing battles with friends.

The Math: If you spend 50 hours painting and 50 hours playing in a year, a $300 investment works out to just $3 per hour. That's incredible value for a hobby that combines art, strategy, and social interaction.

Reduce your Costs: Of course there is a thriving second hand market for all things Warhammer. Facebook market place and Ebay have huge discounts on pre-loved armies and units. Another way to reduce cost is to start with a smaller game like Kill Team. This skirmish game needs only 10-12 models for an army reducing the initial set up to below $80.

What You Get That Other Hobbies Don't

1. Creative Engagement

Both D &D and Warhammer are deeply creative hobbies. Writing campaigns, role-playing characters, painting miniatures, and designing battle strategies engage your mind in ways passive entertainment simply can't.

2. Social Connection

These hobbies are built around shared experiences. Whether it's laughing with friends at the gaming table or bonding over a close-fought battle, the social value is immense.

3. Lifelong Skills

- D &D: Enhances storytelling, improvisation, teamwork, and leadership.
- Warhammer: Builds patience, artistic skills, and strategic thinking.

4. Tangible Rewards

When you finish painting a miniature or complete a campaign journal, you have something to show for your time—something you created with your own hands and imagination. There aren't many (if any) mainstream entertainment activities that can give you that.

Finding Value on Any Budget

You don't need to break the bank to enjoy these hobbies. Ways you can further reduce your costs include:

- For D &D: Free rules are available online, and many campaigns can be played with just a few dice and a borrowed handbook. Theater-of-the-mind play eliminates the need for minis or maps.
- For Warhammer: Start small with a single squad or box of miniatures. Community groups often trade or sell models, and plenty of budget-friendly paints and tools are available.

The True Value of Hobby Time

Yes, the cost of D &D and Warhammer can be expensive up front. But when you break it down, the cost per hour of enjoyment is actually incredibly low compared to other forms of entertainment. Even better, these hobbies offer something that movies, video games, and gym memberships can't: a blend of creativity, community, and personal growth.

So, next time someone raises an eyebrow at the price of a rulebook or a box of miniatures, remind them of this: the value of a hobby isn't just in dollars spent—it's in the countless hours of joy, connection, and self-expression you get in return.

2.7.4 Trump Isn't Doing Anything Unprecedented (2025-07-13 10:57)

He's getting attacked by the Left for autocratic use of presidential powers, he's dictatorial. You'd almost forget that the Left and the [1]Biden administration, in particular, through five criminal and civil courtrooms, fined him over $400 million, coordinated those legal harassments, and indicted him for 93 felonies. They tried to destroy, not just his candidacy, but his person, to bankrupt him and to jail him.

You would've forgotten that 25 states tried to take Donald Trump off the ballot. Nobody had ever done that before. Nobody had ever impeached a president twice. Nobody had ever tried a president, probably unconstitutionally, as a private citizen in the Senate, when he had already left office. No presidential candidate had been the subject of two ex-presidential assassination attempts. No ex-president ever had his home raided by the FBI.

So, we've forgotten all this and we're supposed to think that Donald Trump is acting extra-constitutionally. But Donald Trump, I think, could remind people that he's just following the precedents that he inherited. I'll give you a few examples.

So, they're saying he is deporting, deporting, deporting people. Well, [2]former President Barack Obama deported more people in his tenure than any other prior president—2.5 million. And he focused on criminal aliens. He said so. Just like Donald Trump did. And as far as cages and detention centers, Obama created them. So, Trump just said, "I'm just following the precedent of Obama."

They're talking about extra powers of the president to harass people. Donald Trump had two members of his administration—Steve Bannon, in the first term, and Peter Navarro, his trade adviser—who were subpoenaed by Congress and they felt for no other reason but harassment in connection with Jan. 6. And they didn't show up. And they tried to negotiate with Congress. And Congress jailed them.

[3]Former Attorney General Merrick Garland was also subpoenaed by Congress, remember? And he just refused and there were no consequences. Former Attorney General Eric Holder was subpoenaed by Congress. There was no—and he refused.

And so, all Donald Trump should say, if anybody wants to be subpoenaed from the Biden administration, “We’re just following his example. We don’t really know what the rules are.”

He should also say that he didn’t really know what the rules were about using presidential power and bombing. He was in enemy airspace for about 30 minutes. And it was a successful strike to neutralize and put out of commission the Iranian nuclear infrastructure.

Almost immediately, people said that he was tyrannical, he had violated the Constitution. And all he should have said: “I don’t know quite what the rules are. It’s ambiguous. So I just followed the example of Barack Obama.”

In 2016, Barack Obama bombed seven different countries. He bombed—26,000 bombs he released. The last day he was in office, in 2017, he sent B-2 Spirit bombers all the way to Libya—the same planes that Donald Trump did—again, without congressional authorization. Donald Trump should just say, “The law is ambiguous, so I’m following the precedent set by Barack Obama.”

And so, what I’m trying to say is that whether it’s executive orders—and I could mention that Barack Obama issued about 260 executive orders. He got, at one point, so exasperated, he said, “I have a phone and I have a pen, and I’m going to bypass Congress.”

So, whether it’s executive orders or the border, or the president’s executive powers as commander in chief, or the question of subpoenas and presidential counselors or Cabinet members, all he has to say is he’s doing nothing, nothing ahistorical or unprecedented.

He came into office and he looked to prior precedent. And the prior precedent was established by [4]former President Joe Biden and Barack Obama. And if there was criticism of them, he never heard about it. And he is just following in their illustrious tradition.

2.7.5 Leftists Embrace Sedition and Insurrection as Democrats Lose Power (2025-07-13 10:59)

We've talked in the past a lot about the unfortunate turn to the hard Left that Democrats have made. But in the last week, it's become surreal.

We had this minor official—a Democratic official—Sade Perkins, and she posted that she was almost happy that we lost over a hundred people, the majority of them children, in this [1]flash flood in Texas. She said they were “all white,” and therefore, they were discriminatory. I've never seen anything like it.

And then, people weighed in. And they had some atrocious comments. [2]A pediatrician was almost gloating. And they had a variety of mechanisms to show how grotesque and ghoulish they were.

One group of people said, “It was global warming. You people in Texas”—where, by the way, there's more, I think, there's more wind turbines and solar than almost anywhere—“you people denied global warming. This was caused by global warming. And therefore, you got your just desserts.”

It was not caused by global warming. It was a once-in-a-century flash flood of a magnitude no one had seen in a hundred years.

And then there were other people who said, “You supported the [3]Department of Government Efficiency cuts, so you got what you deserved.” And in her case, she said, “You're white people.”

So, it's very, very, very disturbing.

At the same time, we've had now two organized assassination attempts of Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents, who are just following the law. Remember what they're doing. Apparently, in the mind of the Left, it was a moral thing to break the law and let 12 million people—without vaccinations, without audits, without criminal background checks—come into the United States. But it is an amoral thing to enforce the law and restore the rule of law, and ask people, who came in illegally, to please return.

But in that conundrum, we've had now 10 people arrested. And they were kind of Antifa types. I'm not saying they were Antifa. But they were dressed in black. They had radios. They had semi-automatic weapons. They had body armor. They were young, mostly white kids that looked like they were children of the middle class. And they shot an ICE agent in the neck. And they had a gun battle. And then, this was following an earlier assassination attempt.

Now, you think that [4]the Democratic Party would be worried. But we've got even more disturbing reports that Democratic Congress people said, "Well, what are we supposed to do? We meet with our constituents and they're telling us that one of us should be shot. I don't mean shot by punishment. They're urging us to use violence and be willing to be shot by others to promote a radical agenda."

And I don't know if that's true because they won't report any circumstances that would substantiate that. But basically, the congressional Democrats are saying, "I don't know what I can do. These people are pushing us to the radical edge."

And then you saw House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries, didn't you? He was posing with a bat like he was going to club people, in opposition to the "Big, Beautiful Bill."

I could go on with all of these examples. But I mean, this is an age in which people tried to kill [5]President Donald Trump twice. And we know what happened to House Majority Leader Steve Scalise and other congressional personnel. And so, we're getting a Luigi Mangione, etc. The attacks on Jewish people in Washington, D.C. We're getting to the point now, the Left is entering the era of sedition, insurrection.

We had Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass go to a park and confront ICE agents who were federal law enforcement people, obeying and enforcing, and trying to restore the legitimacy of federal law, which surpasses municipal and state law, remember? And she said, "You've got to get out of my city."

This is insurrection. Why is it happening? We've said in the past that part of it is that the Democratic agenda nobody wanted, there were 80/20, 70/30 issues, and as a result of that, they lost the Congress, they lost the White House, they lost, of course, in most cases, the Supreme Court.

So, they don't have any power. So, they're frustrated. But I think, even more importantly, in the first administration, Donald Trump addressed symptoms of the progressive project: Let's restore deterrence. Let's try to deal with the border. Let's try to stop crime. Let's cut taxes. But he didn't have time or the knowledge or the constituencies. And he was working with a hostile Congress to address the root causes of those symptoms.

This time he's saying, "This lunacy, it's caused by certain institutions: foundations, universities, the Democratic Party, public broadcasting, the media." And so, what he's doing is he's going after blue-stockings, left-wing law firms. He's going after the endowment and taxing university endowments. He's looking at grants on federal—grant surcharges gouging the federal government on university grants. He's dealing with countries that are openly promoting open borders.

So, he's dealing with the symptoms. And the Left is saying, "Oh my gosh, we have no institutional power. And now the way that we exercise power without having legislative or executive influence is institutions, foundations, media, K-12, universities. And Donald Trump is starting to address our left-wing monopoly and dominance of those institutions. And if he were to be successful, we would collapse, dissipate, disintegrate. So, we're going to go take to the streets and we're going to use violence and we're going to do anything possible to stop this Donald Trump counterrevolution."

It's going to be very dangerous times. We've got to be very careful about what everybody says and not escalate the situation. But it's mostly, now, coming from a frustrated and impotent Left.

2.7.6 Zohran Mamdani's Skeletons Are Coming Out of the Closet (2025-07-13 11:01)

e've talked before about the front-runner in the [1]New York mayoral race, [2]Zohran Mamdani. And we've mentioned before that he talked about "seizing the means of production," which comes right out of Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels' "Das Kapital," "The Communist Manifesto."

We talked about his claims that he never advocated defunding the police, even though there's an extensive social media trail where he advocates just that.

He talked about going into “richer” and “whiter” areas and taxing them, specifically, at a higher rate. Kind of ironic, as we mentioned that the highest income group in the United States by ethnic background are people from India, Indian Americans. Mamdani’s parents, for example. He didn’t say, in other words, richer and Indian American, he just used the word “white” because he is trying to cater himself to the African American vote.

All that being said, because he is such an extremist figure and because he has been pampered and grown up very rich, he was never really required to go out and get a job and go through audits. He’s been a rapper. He’s been an activist. He’s tried to run for office. He has an extensive left-wing record. And now that he’s in the public realm, everything is starting to come out.

Just to give you a couple of examples: His father was in a discussion—you know, a conference discussion—and said that Adolf Hitler’s idea for the final solution and many of his policies toward the Jews came from Abraham Lincoln, the way Lincoln supposedly treated Indians on reservations. That’s crazy.

Anwar al-Awlaki, I don’t know if you remember him, al-Awlaki. He was an American citizen that went to Yemen. And he advocated killing Americans. And he was a terrorist. [3]Barack Obama, when he was president, ordered a predator hit team on him and killed al-Awlaki in a targeted assassination—who was, by the way, an ISIS supporter, but he was also a U.S. citizen. So, we assassinated him without habeas corpus. Be that as it may, that was Obama’s decision.

But now we learned, in 2015, years after that Obama hit on this ISIS figure—was one of the captains of ISIS and living in Yemen—Mamdani was defending him and saying, basically, he turned radical because the FBI surveilled him. That’s like saying that [4]FBI Director Kash Patel turned radical because the FBI surveilled him. People don’t become terrorist kingpins because the American FBI thinks you’re a person of interest.

He has some other disturbing things as well. He posted a video on his social media of Indian Americans dressed as if they were Hasidic Jews. And they were making fun of the Hanukkah celebration. And they had a menorah there. And they were chanting, as if they were rap music. It was very derogatory toward Jews. Yet, why would he put that on his social media account?

That’s not the end of it. He’s very sensitive about the African American and Latino vote—which I don’t think he’s going to win. But now we learn that when he applied to college, to Bowdoin—and I think, further, to graduate school, in which he was not admitted—he claimed that he was an African American.

And you know, as someone who was in academia for three decades, I used to have students that were from North Africa, Egypt, or Morocco, or Algeria, but were not African American. That is, they were not blacks. And they tried that trick. And they were not successful. Neither was Mamdani.

But imagine, he's giving lectures—moral lectures, sanctimonious lectures, self-righteous lectures—about how unequal the United States is. And then, yet, he tries to mimic or pass on an [5]Elizabeth Warren or a Ward Churchill-like fraud that he's African American, that he is a black African.

Just because his parents, who were Indian and immigrants to Uganda and were one of the 1 % elite in that country, and they were thrown out as refugees, he's now claiming that he should have had special—I shouldn't say he's now claiming—he claimed that he should have had special preference in admissions because he was black.

You add all of this up and I guarantee you more will come out every day because he's a pampered, privileged, angry, young socialist/communist. He's had no experience. He's out of depth. And he has a long social media record.

And the only question that I have for you, the audience, and me, because I'm genuinely puzzled about it, the more that we hear that he's a lunatic and unhinged and anti-American and socialist, does that help him or does that hurt him, given the demographics of New York?

2.7.7 How the Left Lost Its Collective Mind (2025-07-13 11:04)

Across the political Left, from [1]orthodox Democrats to Antifa in the streets, the opposition to President Donald Trump has lost its collective mind.

The Democrat House minority leader and now self-styled tough guy, New York [2]Rep. Hakeem Jeffries, poses with a baseball bat to show how dangerous he is in opposing President Donald Trump's budget bill.

Jeffries harangued Congress for eight hours; New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker went on for 25—both to no effect.

[3]Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders and New York Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez hit the rally trail in private jets to rail about oligarchs, omitting that the ultrarich are not only mostly leftists but also the funders of the Democratic Party.

Sometimes the Democrats in Congress make bizarre videos, featuring profanity like f— or s—. On other occasions, they scream and interrupt Congress.

Some representatives now confess that they're being pressured by their constituents to take a bullet for the cause.

The racist Texas Rep. Jasmine Crockett—sometimes playing the prep-school prima donna, sometimes modulating her accent to pass as the authentic inner-city activist—gains headlines for monotonously ranting about old white men.

On left-wing social media, the assassin Luigi Mangione remains a heartthrob for murdering a health care executive, replacing the Tsarnaev brothers as the hot new left-wing killer.

He, too, might soon end up with a cover photo on Rolling Stone.

The left-wing internet mob grotesquely claims that children lost to the recent flash flood in Texas deserved their fate.

They even advance three sick reasons for their ghoulishness. Texas Christians supported the MAGA agenda and thus met a just fate. Or, as red-state Texans, they were deservedly collateral damage to the Department of Government Efficiency's bureaucratic reductions. Or, as climate denialists would say, the flash flood took righteous revenge on children for their supposed ignorance.

Add it all up, and there is a sizable leftist "base" that is completely amoral.

Then there are the college campuses, where left-wing antisemitism, pro-Hamas terrorism, and DEI-fueled racism risk costing elite universities their multibillion-dollar subsidies that fund the indoctrination of young leftists.

In panic, cash-strapped universities can no longer hide that they were gouging the federal government with outrageous surcharges on grants. They were systematically defying the Supreme Court by their race-based admissions and hiring. They institutionalized segregationist dorms, segregated graduations, and antisemitism.

Finally, there is the so-called left-wing Resistance and the street mobs' descent into violence and terrorism.

Sometimes, thugs ambush U.S. [4]Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents.

Sometimes, they firebomb Tesla dealerships.

Sometimes, they attack federal buildings, shut down freeways, and pelt patrol cars with concrete.

They continue with impunity because they know the Democratic Party cannot and will not censure them.

As in the monthslong rioting of 2020, leftist politicians assume their street bandits will cause so much mayhem, violence, and chaos that Trump will either be forced to call out the troops (and thus "prove" he's Hitler) or be too scared to—only to be blamed for the unrest, which could cost him the midterms.

But who or what drives the insane rages of these various armies of the left?

One is an obviously bleeding Democratic Party. Despite gushing about its new DEI, illegal alien, trans, and Middle Eastern constituents, it has no political power. Its issues are mostly 30-70 losers.

It has little power in the House or Senate beyond fake filibusters, performative outrage, or profanity-laced rants.

It lost the White House. [5]The Supreme Court eventually nullified the illegality of left-wing district judges.

It does not trust the people, so plebiscites and ballot measures are mostly out.

Two, unlike his first term, Trump is addressing the causes, not just the symptoms, of the progressive project, whether on the border, crime, cultural issues, or foreign policy.

This time around, there are no John Boltens, no Rex Tillersons, no Alexander Vindmans, and no Anonymouses from the inside to thwart the Trump agenda.

The administration is loyalist and committed to addressing the root causes of the left-wing influence, not just its manifestations.

So, Trump has focused on leftist sacred cows like NPR, PBS, the elite campuses, the United States Agency for International Development, and the administrative state—all the inculcators and laboratories of leftist ideology.

Finally, the Left is outraged that so far, the Trump counterrevolution is working.

The economy is solid. The border is closed. Military recruitment has radically recovered.

The budget bill has passed. The Iranian nuclear threat has lessened. [6]NATO is strengthening. The Middle East has a chance for calm.

Tariffs did not cause inflation. Deportations created more, not fewer, American jobs. Biological men will likely no longer be winning women's athletic contests.

Add it all up, and the impotent Left in all its orthodox and street manifestations [7]has become unhinged.

And why not when it rightly fears that not just its power, but the very sources of its power, are in mortal danger?

2.7.8 John Brennan's Checkered Past Comes Back to Haunt Him Amid DOJ Investigation (2025-07-13 11:08)

Recently, [1]Attorney General Pam Bondi and the Trump [2]Department of Justice have said they are running an investigation into James Comey's and John Brennan's careers as the respective FBI director and the CIA head during the Obama administration and, in the case of Comey, the first year of the Trump administration.

They are very angry about this, but let's just review why there might be some culpability.

Take John Brennan. He was a big proponent of waterboarding and enhanced interrogation under President George W. Bush's administration and the things that went on in Guantanamo. I'm not gonna comment on whether they were right or wrong. But he flipped to condition himself to go into the Obama administration, and then he attacked the very president that he had served, George Bush.

Then he began sounding off about Islam—"Religion of Peace"; "Jihadism is not a violent act"—to condition himself further to be appointed by President Barack Obama, which he was, eventually, a CIA director. But then he started lying. I mean, he always probably lied, but I mean, flagrantly so.

He said before Congress and the media there wasn't one civilian killed by Obama's targeted assassination program via Predators on the Afghan or Pakistan border. Actually, there were 50 or 75 innocent people we killed. He was caught in that lie.

Three years later, he went before the Congress and there was information that he had been tapping, his CIA, the staffers for the Senate to get into their computers. He not only lied about it, he did so emphatically—"Oh, we would never do that. That's horrible." Then he was forced to say, "Yes, I lied." In both cases, there were no perjury charges, nothing.

The pièce de résistance for John Brennan was in October 2020, on the eve of the second and critical presidential debate, [3]Joe Biden was in trouble. People were furious about this laptop. There was pornography on it. There was drug use. There were references to Joe Biden as "Mr. Big Guy." Ten percent that he'd been giving money. He was crooked. People wanted to hear, he had no excuse.

So, what happened? Antony Blinken, his future secretary of state, campaign aid, called Michael Morell, interim CIA director at one point, said, "Round them up."

So, 51 "intelligence authorities" swore the laptop had all the hallmarks of Russian information. Notice the words: All the hallmarks, escape clause, of Russian information. Not disinformation, but that's what they meant.

So, what happened in the debate? Donald Trump went right after Biden and said, "That laptop is real. It shows that you're a crook. It shows your son is a miscreant."

And Joe Biden's, "How dare you? Fifty-one Intelligence authorities swear that it's a product of Russian espionage. Only you and Rudy Giuliani believe that." And it was effective.

Later a poll showed, the TechnoMetrica poll showed that if people had known that it had been authenticated—and by the way, that laptop was sitting in the hands of the FBI and adjudicated to be authentic and not released to the public at a time when Christopher Wray's FBI was partnering with Twitter and Facebook to suppress any news story that was accurately reporting that the laptop was authentic.

John Brennan finally accused [4]Donald Trump of being a Russian traitor. He said that after Donald Trump spoke in Helsinki about Russian-American relationships, he said that he is treasonous.

When he said that, I think we all thought: Well, wait a minute. Donald Trump killed the Wagner Group in Syria. He upped the sanctions on the oligarchs. He approved offensive weapons to Ukraine that Obama had canceled. Russia didn't go into Ukraine under the Trump administration. It had invaded Ossetia under Bush. It went under Ukraine under both Biden and Obama, but not under Trump. He told the Germans, "Don't cut a deal with [5]Russian President Vladimir Putin on the Nord Stream 2 pipeline." He got out of an asymmetrical missile deal. He was the hardest president that we've had against Russia.

So, what was John Brennan doing? Here's what he was doing—and two or three of the most significant scandals of the last 50 years, he was at the center.

You could make the argument that the Russian collusion hoax almost swung the election to Hillary Clinton. You could argue that.

You could argue that the Mueller investigation, based on that stupid dossier, cost Donald Trump 22 months of his first two years in office. Forty million dollars to find nothing.

You could make the argument that if the FBI had just released its investigation of the laptop, told the people it was authentic, John Brennan would not, and his cohorts, been able to lie to the American people that it was cooked up in Russia and that Donald Trump was complicit in that.

That disclosure, that failure to disclose the true nature of that laptop, thanks to John Brennan and 51 intelligence authorities, and the debate by Joe Biden, and the false charges, may have affected the election. As I said, one polling company found that it did.

And finally, we wouldn't be in this big trouble about the Ukraine war and Russia had John Brennan and people like him not floated the spurious narrative that Donald Trump was working hand in glove with Vladimir Putin. Vladimir Putin. Russia, Russia, Russia. That colored and poisoned the whole relationship we had with Russia. It affected the Russian-Ukrainian war. And it was all a lie.

And so, here we are with John Brennan mad that he lost his security clearance for being a well-paid MSNBC analyst. He should be better worried, not that he lost his security clearance, that he might be indicted and go to jail. He's got a lot of culpability, both in not telling the truth and spinning lies and being at the heart of a number of scandals that affected the history of the United States.

2.7.9 Hey, DOJ, How About Growing Up and Doing Your Damn Jobs? (2025-07-13 11:18)

Washington, DC, is a high school with paychecks. The money is real, and there is a lot of it. However, the people running much of the show are still very much the same angry nerds, unlikeable geeks, aggressive jocks, and teacher suck-ups; everyone else thought people would outgrow after they graduated. Maybe there's something in the water, I don't know, but far too often, people near power revert to their worst instincts in a game of "pay attention to me," either desperate to get credit for something good or avoid blame for something bad. What doesn't get done is their jobs.

There's an old saying in Washington, which I've seen attributed to everyone from Harry Truman to Ronald Reagan, that goes, "It is amazing what you can accomplish if you do not care who gets the credit." It probably is true, or at least I'd imagine it to be, but we don't live in a world like that. I don't know if one ever existed, but it sure doesn't exist now.

We now live in a world where Democrats are doing all they can to inspire the murder of federal agents, and the Department of Justice and FBI are scrambling to do damage control and blame-shifting on over-promising and under-delivering on a dead pedophile.

Yes, I want to know if anyone else is implicated in Jeffrey Epstein's sick world, but I'd prefer to prevent the murder of ICE and border patrol agents as they do their jobs. I want the authorities to focus on infiltrating, tracking and dismantling the left-wing machine that exists for the express purpose of damaging this country's law enforcement institutions. And I really want them to throw the book - hell, the whole damn library - at those who fund these goon squads who, only for lack of aim, would have stepped up to murder by now.

Instead of doing that, we have leadership scrambling to make sure their social media followers remain loyal to them, not the President's agenda or any cause. We have people who've not been impressive in their jobs already – whoever decided to bring Kilmar back to try an old case they're likely to lose, instead of keeping his ass out of the country (I mean, we'd already won, why backtrack?) should be fired – running around, leaking to the media that they can't work with this one, or won't work with that one because their integrity won't allow for it.

Real integrity doesn't leak to the press, especially when you've made a lot of money complaining about the press.

No one looks good here, as no one is doing anything beyond a game of CYA.

President Donald Trump and his agenda are not being served. The attempts by all involved are not to make sure he knows what is really happening, they're for public consumption – they are to serve a career after government work; to keep media bookings flowing and audiences on the hook. If it were about the President's agenda the conversations would be taking place with the President, not “reporters” at CNN and Axios.

Honestly, President Trump should clean house. If these people won't put their egos aside (and they all have big egos) and do their damn jobs, replace them with people who will. There are people trying to murder federal officers enforcing the laws of the United States and one political party is leading that bloodthirsty charge while federal law enforcement makes sure they don't get hit with social media backlash from an unforced error. It's pathetic.

Everyone involved dropped the ball. They all spent years declaring things to be true that they had zero proof actually was, they sold tales from sources giving them information about alleged perverts they repeated as fact, but when they found themselves in a position to do something about it either discovered they'd been lied to and remained quiet about it or ignored it. The Attorney General was so misleading in her public statements while in office that you have to wonder if she understands basic definitions of words.

Advertisement

In all of that, someone decided to make up binders and give “social media influencers” already publicly available information in them and pretend it was A) new and B) just the first release of information.

I don't know who is to blame, or who is more to blame, and it doesn't matter because none of this has been anything but clownish, and none of it has been helpful to the America First agenda.

Meanwhile, somewhere out there, the radical left is plotting more ambushes, illegal aliens are committing crimes and victimizing Americans, and the 300,000 children the Biden administration "lost" are being trafficked into slavery, either labor or sexual. And the people charged with bringing it all to justice are playing PR games.

President Trump needs to summon them all to the Oval Office, chew them all out, tell them to grow the hell up and do their damn jobs or clean out their desks so he can put someone in those offices who will. Those jobs are too damn important to be occupied by people who have priorities other than doing them.

2.7.10 no women relationships in 30 years (2025-07-16 00:11)

I didn't have sex for 40 years with a woman. I thought I would on okcupid about 15 years ago. Now they don't have faces on JPEG files.

I like not working with disability. When I sent my resume to indeed, employers didn't want me with my bachelor degree for 10 years. I got jobs (laptop chips, western Wisconsin health, pulatech, walgreens, msu, radio mankato, fun.com) , but they didn't last. My most successful time was laptop chips during lunch break talking about spotify and atvs with employees. They went to subway during lunch. I talked about movies, music like northern invasion, and vacations. Zac brought his switch for show and tell. They liked pink floyd. I lasted 17 months. Pulatech, Western Wisconsin Health, Walgreens, MSU, fun.com I didn't make any relationships. The small talks in the lunch room failed, because it was a bad economy and they had girlfriends or were married. The museum women were married and talked about " The Way We Were" 1973 movie in the research room as I was doing obituaries and dead 4h children.

I played Ps4 a little bit, but mostly emulation station with old games like for Playstaiton , n64, sega saturn, because I spent a lot of time watching Canadian Prepper, Clownfish TV, J bravo, Jeremiah babe, I allegedly,

I have 18 dungeons and dragons books now. I started in October 2023. I read about 4 books through and I was at the game quest where everyone had had dungeon master from 2002. It was in demand like I remembered.

I spent 30 years trying to get girlfriends. I was unsuccessful. I never had a crush on someone in public school. There's nobody to see my hobbies collection and watch tv with me and play multiplayer, watch youtube, and go on vacations.

2.7.11 The World Woke Up (2025-07-19 23:51)

In less than six months, the entire world has been turned upside down. There is no longer such a thing as conventional wisdom or the status quo.

The unthinkable has become the banal.

Take [1]illegal immigration—remember the 10,000 daily illegal entries under former President Joe Biden?

Recall the only solution was supposedly “[2]comprehensive immigration reform”—a euphemism for mass amnesties.

Now, there is no such thing as daily new illegal immigration. It simply disappeared with commonsense enforcement of existing immigration laws—and a new president.

How about the 40,000-50,000 shortfall in military recruitment?

Remember all the causes that the generals cited for their inability to enlist soldiers: generational gangs, obesity, drugs, and stiff competition with private industry?

And now?

In just six months, [3]recruitment targets are already met; the issue is mostly moot.

Why? The new Pentagon flipped the old, canceling its racist [4]DEI programs and assuring the rural, middle-class Americans—especially white males—that they were not systemically racist after all.

Instead, they were reinvented to enlist as the critical combat cohort who died at twice their demographic share in Iraq and Afghanistan.

How about the “end of the NATO crisis,” supposedly brought on by a bullying U.S.?

Now the vast majority of NATO members have met their pledges to spend 2 % of gross domestic product on defense, which will soon [5]increase to 5 %.

Iconic neutrals like Sweden and Finland have become front-line NATO nations, arming to the teeth. The smiling NATO secretary-general even called Trump the “daddy” of the alliance

What about indomitable, all-powerful, theocratic Iran, the scourge of [6]the Middle East for nearly 50 years?

Although it had never won a war in the last half-century, its terrorist surrogates—Hezbollah, Hamas, and the Houthis—were supposedly too dangerous to provoke.

Now?

Most of their expeditionary terrorists are neutered, and their leaders are in hiding or dead. Iran has no air force, no real navy, no air defenses, and no active nuclear weapons program.

Its safety apparently depends only on the mood of the [7]U.S. or Israel on any given day, not to fly into its airspace and take out its missiles, nuclear sites, generals, or theocrats at will.

What happened to the supposedly inevitable recession, hyperinflation, stock market collapse, unemployment spikes, and global trade war that last spring economists assured us would hit by summer?

Job growth is strong, and April's inflation rate is the lowest in four years. GDP is still steady. The stock market hit a record high. Trade partners are renegotiating their surpluses with the U.S.

It turns out that staying in the U.S. consumer market is the top priority of our trading partners. It seems their preexisting and mostly undisclosed profits were large enough to afford reasonable U.S. symmetrical tariffs.

For now, news of [8] tax cuts, deregulation, "drill, baby, drill" energy policies displacing Green New Deal strangulation, and $8- $10 trillion in potential foreign investment has encouraged—rather than deterred—business.

Then there were our marquee elite universities, whose prestige, riches, and powerful alumni made them answerable to no one.

And now, after the executive and congressional crackdown on their decades of hubris?

Supposedly brilliant university presidents [9] have resigned in shame. The public has caught on to their grant surcharge gouging.

Campuses have backed off their arrogant defiance of the Supreme Court's civil rights rulings.

They are panicked about the public exposure of their [10] systemic antisemitism.

They are scrambling to explain away their institutionalized ideological bias and their tawdry profit-making schemes and mass recruitment of wealthy [11] foreign students from illiberal regimes.

So, the mighty Ivy League powerhouses are now humbling themselves to cut a deal to save their financial hides and hopefully return to their proper mission of disinterested education.

What happened to the trans juggernaut of sex as a social construct and its bookend gospel that biological men could[12] dominate women's sports?

People woke up. They were no longer afraid to state that sex is binary and biologically determined. And biological men who dominate women's sports are bullies, not heroes.

Where are the millionaire-scamming [13]architects of Black Lives Matter now? Where is the "DEI now, tomorrow, and forever" conventional wisdom?

Where is professor Ibram X. Kendi and his $30,000 Zoom lessons on how to fight racism by being racist?

They have all been exposed as the race hustlers they always were. Their creed that it is OK for supposed victims to be racist victimizers themselves was exposed as an absurd con.

So, what flipped everything?

We were living in an "emperor has no clothes" make-believe world for the last few years. The people knew establishment narratives were absurd, and our supposed experts were even more ridiculous.

But few—until now—had the guts to scream "the emperor is naked" to dispel the fantasies.

When they finally did, reality returned.

2.7.12 Gavin Newsom Abandons Californians for 2028 White House Delusions (2025-07-19 23:53)

Lately, Gavin has redirected his energies from the crises of California to his aspirations to run for president in 2028. He was in South Carolina, which is the first big primary, campaigning. I don't think that's a good look to go to, pretty much, a red state, given the status of [1]California. But nevertheless, he did that.

He's now inserted himself into the Immigration and Customs Enforcement deportations crisis in California and is siding with the protesters that are trying to obstruct ICE. And he has a very incoherent position.

He doesn't really tell us what his attitude is about the illegal immigrant community in California, which is the largest illegal alien group of any state in the Union, here in California. He's siding with the illegal aliens. He doesn't tell us why he's doing that. He has no reference to the 10 million to 12 million who came in illegally under President Joe Biden, in which Gavin was very silent.

And I guess the supposition is that Gavin thought it was quite moral for 12 million people to break the law, but it's quite amoral for somebody to try to rectify the situation and enforce the law.

But while he is doing his podcast and he is attacking [2]President Donald Trump, he called Donald Trump "scum." He went after Vice President JD Vance for going to Disneyland, said that was hypocritical, given his criticisms of California.

You can see he's flailing. He is desperate. And he's a social media creature now. He's on X all the time. He's doing these podcasts. Although, he's pivoted from the Steve Bannon-, Charlie Kirk-type, and he is going more left wing now because he thinks he has to win the primaries first, then he will pivot back.

But here's my point. We're facing an existential crisis in California. Newsom, there have not been very many building permits in Pacific Palisades. That is a catastrophe. And that's in addition to the catastrophe of your governance, when you did not allow the gleaning of hills and fuel and brush that caused the fire.

And when Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass was overseas in Ghana, and the water and power director closed down and did not fix or repair a reservoir, and when the vice mayor phoned in a bomb threat and was under house arrest, these were the conditions that led to that disaster. You're not addressing them.

I just drove six hours on the California freeway system, Newsom. In 2025, we have 40 million people and we have 40 million cars. Fifty years ago—roughly 45 or 50 years ago—we had 20 million people and 4 million cars. And guess what? When I went down the 99, I-5, the 101, there are still large swaths that are two lanes. They have not changed in 50 or 60 years. And there is public domain space where they could have been enlarged. You haven't done anything.

You were on the San Francisco City Council. You were mayor of [3]San Francisco. You were the lieutenant governor. You were governor. In some capacity or other, you've been almost 30 years in a position of responsibility. You've never been an advocate.

These are some of the most dangerous bloody highways in the world. Meanwhile, we have wasted $15 to $20 billion on high-speed rail. And not one foot of track has been laid. If we were to gift high-speed rail over to California and said, "From Bakersfield to Merced, it's free; we built it," it would still lose money. No one wants to go from Bakersfield to Fresno any faster than they can on Amtrak. It's a disaster. Why don't you address that?

We are looking at an—we have the highest gas taxes, Newsom. And now you've had a scheduled 60-cent or more increase. It's already started, a cent and a half. Why are we doing this? We have the highest gas taxes. And yet, we're sitting on the Monterey Shale deposits. We could be one of the greatest gas producers—natural gas and petroleum. Instead, we're importing petroleum from Saudi Arabia. And the price of gas, when I filled up today—when gas has gone down by two or three—was $5.50 in California. The poor can't afford that.

Our energy is out of sight, 30 to 40 cents a kilowatt. And this is before the AI boom will really deplete us. We're not building traditional natural gas or more nuclear generation or hydroelectric. The solar farms are not an answer. They do not create energy in the evening. The wind turbines, they all have to be subsidized. They're not giving us reliable energy. And it's very expensive to keep doing that.

You're in South Carolina, but we have 13.3 % income tax rate. It's the highest in the nation. Can you explain why we have that and we still had this massive $77 billion deficit to start the year?

We have the highest number of illegal aliens in the country in California. Twenty-seven percent of the California resident population was not born in the United States. This is an enormous challenge of assimilation and integration. You're not addressing it.

Twenty-one percent of Californians live before the poverty line. You're in South Carolina. You're on podcasts with your friends. You're in a fight with Donald Trump. You're going down to help ICE be impeded. And we have the highest poverty rate in the United States.

We have one-third of all people in public assistance here. One out of every two births in California is on Medi-Cal. Forty percent of the entire population is on Medi-Cal. Why would you try to impede ICE from deporting people [4]who are here illegally, using these services and crowding out the availability to your own state residents who are legal?

In other words, you look at a state that is in complete free fall, it is a catastrophe, and rather than addressing transportation, energy, poverty, housing, gasoline, what are you doing? You're campaigning for president. And you're in Twitter wars with the president of the United States. And you're defending the catastrophic governance in Los Angeles. And you're trying to impede the enforcement of a law that, if it was enforced, you would be the biggest beneficiary.

Please stop this because California is a disaster and you, more than anyone in the last 30 years, are responsible for it.

2.7.13 Why the Left Is Going Crazy (2025-07-19 23:55)

What are the sources, the causes of Democratic rage? We see the manifestations everywhere.

We have [1]House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries, D-N.Y., holding a bat, as if he's gonna club somebody. And then, he spoke for no reason for eight hours in the House. That didn't compare with Sen. Cory Booker, D-N.J. He did a pseudo-filibuster for 25 hours.

Almost weekly, there's a video cut by representatives and senators on the Democratic side with the S-word or the F-word. And then we have [2]Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., and Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, D-N.Y., going to these oligarch rallies on private jets, damning the oligarchical class, when they are the people who fund the Democratic Party.

That's one level of leftist outrage.

Then we have the internet mob. And they do everything from canonize and glorify the assassin Luigi Mangione—who killed the UnitedHealthcare executive—to even more grotesquely and ghoulishly, now they're on the internet suggesting that the over a hundred people who were killed, many of them children, deserved what they got for, A, they didn't believe in climate change. This had nothing to do with climate change. B, they're from red-state Texas that believes in small government. So, they got small government. The National Weather Service had given prior warning with plenty of time to evacuate, had they done so. And third, they believe in the Department of Government Efficiency. So, they deserve what they get. I'm being literal.

Can you imagine people going on there? One internet person, Sade Perkins, basically said they were white and Christian and they deserve what they got.

That's the second level of leftist outrage.

Then we come to what I would call the dregs. These are the mobs. These are the people who firebombed Tesla dealerships. These are the people who tried to run off the road Tesla drivers. These are the people who, in Los Angeles, waved Mexican flags and spat on and burned American flags. They destroyed patrol cars. They looted stores.

They tried to swarm Immigration and Customs Enforcement facilities. Two groups of them, one a single shooter and another 10 arrested suspects, tried to kill ICE officers. These are the people that the [3]Democratic Party either cannot or will not censor.

In fact, there's a bill in the Congress, on the part of Democrats, to disallow masks on ICE officers and to make them wear a badge, so they and their families can be ready targets.

I could go on with these examples, but what is going on? Why are they so angry? Why isn't this the old party of President Bill Clinton? Or even the party of President Barack Obama?

One: They have no institutional power. They do not have the House. They do not have the Senate. They do not have the White House. They do not have the Supreme Court. They do not have the issues. There are 30/70, 20/80 issues. And they're on the wrong side.

They can't have a plebiscite because the people would vote against men in women's sports. People would vote against "defund the police." People would vote against the Green New Deal. People would vote against the foreign policy that we've seen from Afghanistan to the Middle East.

So, they're angry. They have no power.

Two: This time [4]President Donald Trump is not looking at symptoms or manifestations of the progressive project. No, no, no. He's not just saying, "We're gonna address the border." He's not just saying, "We have to deal with crime or the economy." He's trying to say how things got out of control the last 50 years.

How did we get to a point where people actually believe biological men should compete in women's sports? How do they actually believe you could let in 12,000 people a day? How did you actually believe that you could let people loot stores with no consequences?

And he came up with a solution.

What are the sources of Democratic power? It's the universities. That's where people are indoctrinated. Ninety-five percent of the faculty are hard left. It's the foundations that fund all of these groups. It's the media: CBS, ABC, NBC, PBS, NPR. It's the corporate boardroom.

And so, Donald Trump decided that he was going to go after the universities and hold them to account. Their endowments taxed. Federal grants reduced to 15 % overcharges. Follow the civil rights rules or lose all of your federal money. No separation by race in graduations, themes, etc.

His two lawsuits have been settled with CBS and ABC about the media. They're very wary now of simply smearing and slandering and tell beyond truths.

There's a third reason, a third source of the anger of the Democratic Party and the Left in general. Donald Trump is successful. Had The Wall Street Journal and the other prognosticators been correct in March, we wouldn't have this violence.

They said Donald Trump would cause a recession. They said that his trade talk and tariff wars would cause the stock market to permanently—or at least this year—crash. They said we were gonna have a recession.

What happened? Jobs are up. Inflation's low. Tariff income is increased. The economy, gross domestic product is growing. It didn't happen.

They said that if Donald Trump bombed the installations in Iran, we would have a theater-wide war. Twenty-five minutes and a ceasefire the next day.

I could go on, but Donald Trump is having an amazing success. He stopped all illegal immigration at the border. There's zero. We were told you could not get 50,000 missing recruits back into the military. He did that. They're already back.

And so, to review, [5]the Left is going crazy because they can't enact their progressive agenda through any political method. There's no avenue for them to pass a law or an executive order or a Supreme Court decision.

They're angry because they thought that even though they didn't have these levers of power, they could use these other institutions—cultural, social, economic, political foundations, universities, K-12, media, sports. And now Donald Trump is going after them.

And third, they thought Donald Trump would fail and he'd be a buffoon. And he succeeded in a more dramatic fashion than any president in the last 50 years in his first six months.

Put it all together and they're mad, mad, mad. And they should be because Donald Trump threatens not just to take their power away, but the sources of their power.

2.7.14 $2.5B Fed Cover-Up? Jerome Powell Accused of Lying As White House Demands Site Visit (2025-07-20 22:52)

According to White House Deputy Chief of Staff James Blair, Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell offered a private tour to his group at 7 p.m. on Friday, well outside regular hours and during a time when no so-called “renovations” were taking place. The move raises serious concerns and fuels growing worries about transparency and accountability at the Fed. With $2.5 billion in taxpayer dollars reportedly allocated for renovations, Americans deserve answers, not secretive tours and dodged questions.

Blair called for an immediate site visit, stating, “They should show us all the revisions and just let us see what’s actually going on—and whether what Chair Powell told the Senate Banking Committee is even true.” He questioned the staggering cost of the Federal Reserve’s headquarters renovation, which is reportedly more than double the per-square-foot cost of any other historic building project. Blair also highlighted that the price tag is 25 percent higher than what it cost to build the entire U.S. Capitol, despite the Capitol being five times larger and accommodating five times as many staff.

On Friday, during an interview, Pulte[1] criticized Powell, saying that he is “sitting there like an obnoxious, arrogant, pompous person, saying I’m gonna keep these rates high.” He called for Powell to resign, arguing that he sees inflation where it doesn’t exist.

“He goes into a room, he sees a ghost, and nobody else sees the ghost, which is that tariffs cause inflation,” Powell said. “He’s a bad guy. There’s gonna be more coming out.”

This follows [2]comments from Pulte, who stated that several members of Congress may issue criminal referrals against Jerome Powell after he allegedly lied about the $2.5 billion “renovation” of the Federal Reserve building.

2.7.15 Watch Out: Texas Democrat Pushes Views That Clearly Contradict Clear Biblical Teachings (2025-07-20 22:53)

A Texas House Democrat is claiming that there's no biblical basis for Christians to oppose abortion. The lawmaker's comments reflect a growing trend on the Left to twist or dismiss Scripture to justify its radical pro-abortion policies. However, for millions of Christians, the Bible is clear that life is sacred, and it begins in the womb.

During an appearance on the Joe Rogan Experience podcast, Texas House Democrat and self-described pastor James Talarico claimed there's no biblical or historical foundation for Christians to oppose abortion or traditional marriage. Talarico argued that Christian beliefs against abortion and same-sex marriage are not rooted in Scripture but are instead modern political constructs—remarks that are already drawing backlash from faith-based conservatives who say his views distort core Christian teachings.

"So this idea that to be a Christian means you have to be anti gay and anti abortion... There really is no historical, theological, or biblical basis for that opinion," Talarico said.

However, it is clearly stated in the Bible, under Jeremiah 1:5, that "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart; I appointed you as a prophet to the nations."

The self-proclaimed "devout" Christian is openly pro-choice, having sponsored legislation to restore abortion access and push the issue to a statewide referendum. He has fiercely criticized Texas's pro-life laws, claiming they're about "controlling women" rather than protecting life. Additionally, he has opposed efforts to require the Ten Commandments in public school classrooms, arguing that such measures violate the separation of church and state

2.7.16 Trump Admin Ends Biden's SAVE Scheme, Blocks 460K Borrowers From Costly Giveaway (2025-07-20 22:54)

The Trump administration has officially shut the door on former President Joe Biden's hand-me-downs, putting an end to his controversial SAVE student loan scheme. As a result, it denied 460,000 borrowers access to what critics called an unsustainable handout. The move marks a return to fiscal responsibility, as the Department of Education aims to end student loan forgiveness and restore accountability, rather than providing blanket handouts.

According to an internal document from the Department of Education, approximately 460,000 federal student loan borrowers have been denied access to lower monthly payments through income-driven repayment (IDR) plans. The denial follows a sweeping overhaul of the department under the Trump administration, which confirmed that applications tied to the SAVE program can no longer be accepted for processing. The Biden-era SAVE plan has been deemed illegal under current law and has been officially withdrawn from consideration.

The SAVE Plan—short for Saving on a Valuable Education—was an income-driven repayment program introduced by the Biden administration, aiming to reduce monthly payments for borrowers by capping them at 5 percent of discretionary income for undergraduates and 10 percent for graduate loans. Promoted as a relief measure for low- and middle-income borrowers, the plan drew criticism for its high long-term cost and questionable legality. In 2024, a federal court blocked the program, ruling it exceeded executive authority. Interest is set to resume next month, leaving nearly 2 million borrowers in limbo as they await clarity on their repayment options.

As part of President Trump's One Big Beautiful Bill, signed into law on July 4, 2025, the sweeping tax-and-spending reform streamlines the federal student loan system by eliminating complex repayment plans like PAYE, SAVE, IBR, and ICR. In their place, it introduces just two clear options: a standard 10-year repayment plan and a new Repayment Assistance Plan (RAP), which caps monthly payments between 1–10 percent of a borrower's income over 30 years. The law also reins in runaway borrowing by imposing strict annual and lifetime limits on Graduate and Parent PLUS loans, with a hard cap of $65,000 on all PLUS borrowing, restoring discipline and fiscal sanity to the system.

2.7.17 Klobuchar's Deflection Fails: Trump Exposes Dems' Silence on Epstein Files While She Spins Wild Excuses (2025-07-20 22:55)

Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) fired back at President Donald Trump's claims that Democrats did nothing about the Epstein files during former President Joe Biden's time in office, comparing his excuse to the Astronomer CEO caught cheating, who then blamed the Coldplay lead singer for the scandal.

During an interview on CNN with Jake Tapper, Klobuchar dismissed claims from Trump that the Democratic Party failed to make a single effort to release any new information on the Jeffrey Epstein files, saying that the President "Saying the Democrats did nothing about the Epstein files for four years is like that CEO who got caught on camera blaming Coldplay!"

During the Biden administration's four years in office, the Democratic Party did not release any new information from the Epstein files. The Department of Justice, led by Attorney General Merrick Garland, chose to withhold certain documents to protect ongoing investigations and safeguard the privacy of individuals not charged with crimes. While the administration didn't actively suppress information, it also refrained from pushing for broader disclosure. Some Democrats, including Rep. Ro Khanna (CA) and Sen. Chris Van Hollen (MD), did attempt to force the release of Epstein-related materials, but their efforts faced roadblocks—the House Rules Committee blocked Khanna's amendment, and Van Hollen's proposal never advanced. The administration maintained that protecting due process and victims' rights was paramount, guiding its cautious approach to releasing sensitive files.

2.7.18 Obama Faked Trump-Russia Narrative and Almost Got Away With It (2025-07-24 20:55)

This week in the news, the director of national intelligence, Tulsi Gabbard, made a discovery that she has documents, under her purview, that are pertinent to the so-called [1]Russian collusion hoax of 2015, 2016, 2017, and 2018.

Remember what that was? During the campaign between [2]Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump in 2015 and 2016, there were allegations that Donald Trump was enlisting Russian President Vladimir Putin to disparage or hurt Hillary Clinton for his benefit.

That charge was never substantiated. Special counsel Robert Mueller—after Donald Trump was elected—spent 22 months and $40 million and found no evidence that Donald Trump was directly involved in any Russian escapade to throw the election.

But here's the two new sources of discovery. The first is that, apparently, the Dutch intelligence had tapped into Russian intelligence, unknowingly to the Russians. And they were concerned that they were being accused of colluding with Donald Trump by the Hillary Clinton campaign. And yet, they had intelligence that Hillary Clinton had actually hired—and we know now that that was true—through the paywalls of the Democratic National Committee, the Perkins Coie law firm, the Fusion GPS political operation, to give money to Christopher Steele for this so-called Steele dossier that was proven to be fraudulent and the source of this entire hoax.

So, here's the point. That had been completely proven false, both by the Mueller investigation—saw that no credible—but the intelligence agencies, one of these 18 or all of them or some of them, knew from information from the Dutch that there was no validity.

But here's the second thing. Apparently, John Brennan and James Clapper, maybe or not James Comey, the head of the FBI, also knew from their own intelligence teams, when they were trying to act on this information and prepare it for digestion by [3]Barack Obama, the lame-duck president, who was on his way out, they said:

Wow. All of the people who are investigating this Russian collusion, it's pretty clear there was no Russian collusion. They may have wanted to tamper in or troll or get on the, you know, websites, like the Chinese have done. But there was no evidence, according to our subordinates, our intelligence chiefs of these subdivisions, and Tulsi Gabbard, remember, oversees some of these well beyond the FBI or the CIA, there's no evidence that our team can find any evidence.

Now, what's [4]Tulsi Gabbard upset about? That was known to John Brennan. That was known to James Clapper. That was probably known to the FBI. But they have notes, they have information that when they prepared this digest daily, weekly digest of intelligence updates to lame-duck Barack Obama in 2016 and into 2017, he ignored it. He did not want to hear that. He wanted more information pertaining to Donald Trump and the Russians colluding. It was almost like, you find me the crime and I'll give you the criminal.

And so, what did Brennan and Clapper allegedly do? They reversed the opinion of their own intelligence subordinates. And they crafted or fabricated after the election, remember that? After the November 2016 election. And then, according to the wishes of Barack Obama, they created an intelligence falsehood, a false narrative, a fake narrative, that Donald Trump, now the president-elect, soon to elect office, had been colluding with the Russians.

And we know what happened after that. They destroyed the career of Michael Flynn. We got these false charges that Trump was Putin's asset or puppet. Jeff Sessions foolishly, but tragically, appointed Robert Mueller, who was an intimate of James Comey and many of the intelligence chiefs. His team, the “All-Stars,” as they were called, they were pretty partisan. Remember Andrew Weissmann and all that mess? That went on for 22 months, $40 million. I think it’s fair to say it nearly wrecked the first two years of the Trump administration. And I think Tulsi Gabbard is making the allegation that was by design.

We couldn’t stop him with a Steele fake dossier. Hillary couldn’t stop him. Nobody could stop him during the campaign. But Barack Obama, allegedly, by Tulsi Gabbard’s conjectures, said, “We can stop his presidency. So, you guys go back, ignore what your subordinates are saying, when they found no evidence, and ignore foreign intelligence that found no evidence. Just get me a narrative that Donald Trump is colluding with the Russians and we’ll spread it.”

And spread it they did. And it nearly destroyed [5]Donald Trump.

Is it serious? If it’s credible, then you have a conspiracy of the top people in the United States intelligence and investigative communities conspiring with a sitting president of the United States to destroy the administration of his opponent, successor, Donald J. Trump.

2.7.19 Trump Sends So-Called Experts Reeling After Historic First 6 Months (2025-07-24 20:57)

In this first six months of the Trump administration, we’ve entered unknown territory. I guess the best way to term it is there are a lot of known unknowns. We’re doing things we’ve never done before. And [1]our experts think they can predict it, but they’ve been wrong.

Let’s take some examples. Usually, tariffs are not a source of revenue because traditional economic orthodoxy says that whatever revenue they generate, they decrease gross domestic product by inflicting attacks on goods. But yet, we don’t know what the profit margin is in these countries. And perhaps the [2]tariffs are not resulting in rising prices. At least they haven’t in May and June.

Which suggests, again, that the Germans or the South Koreans or the Chinese were making so much money by exporting to the United States, while protecting their own industry and piling up surpluses, that they could pay tariffs and still remain in our market at a cost-competitive profit.

The result is that we're getting $26 billion a month and higher. No one anticipated that. Scott Bessent, the treasury secretary, said, "In theory, the year could end with a third of a trillion dollars— $330 billion." That's almost 5 % of our revenue is coming from tariffs, which we'd thought would be impossible.

Another impossibility is usually we're running a $2 trillion debt. That's what we were usually told by people. But in the month of May, there were more federal revenues than there were debits. And that was a result of the [3]Department of Government Efficiency cuts and the tariffs and the seasonal increase in federal revenues that come through taxation and other charges against the private sector.

Everybody said, "Well, May's always a good month. It's the one good month of the year." But we haven't had a surplus since 2017 in any month, which is kind of strange if we're going to run this huge $2 trillion budget deficit. And while we're discussing it, more money is coming in than going out. And we have this known unknown about tariffs. Then something's up. And that something's up is amplified.

When we look at the foreign investment, we were told, $4 trillion, $6 trillion, $8 trillion. That's a phenomenal number. Nobody has ever had $8 trillion of foreign investment in the United States in one year. The secretary of interior, Doug Burgum, says to us now that the actual income or amount or capital investment from foreign sources of various statuses could be $15 trillion. Economists have ratios for each billion dollars in foreign investment, depending on the nature of the foreign investment, the jobs created. If this were true, it's a phenomenal number.

He also said something that was quite striking. That the value of U.S. assets that have been untapped—natural gas, coal, oil, timber, rare earth minerals—is somewhere between $100 trillion and $200 trillion.

Now, we don't want to exploit and plunder our countryside, but it's something to think about, that if we were not buying rare earth minerals from China—and we probably may not be—or we had a mechanism to tap our coal and use it cleanly to help generate the electricity for artificial intelligence.

This is unusual. This is crazy: $15 trillion of foreign investment, $200 trillion of unrealized assets. And remember that the $15 trillion is coming from people who were not willing to do that prior to President Donald Trump. They're doing it in fear of tariffs.

There's a couple of other things, and that is [4]the military was short anywhere—depending on who you talked to—45,000 to 65,000 recruits. They could only get 50 % of their benchmarks. A year ago, at this time, about 50 %, only about half of the people were enlisting. But when they changed the ad campaigns, and they said they were no longer going to prejudice recruits for tenure promotion, enlistment, advancement, etc. by their race or gender, and they were going to stress battle efficacy, all of a sudden, recruitment soared.

Nobody thought you could do it in six months. But in less than six months, the military went from, "We're short 50 %. We don't know what to do. Maybe it's gangs. Maybe it's tattoos. Maybe it's drug use. Maybe it's obesity. Maybe we're competing—" to, "I don't know what happened but all these people have enlisted." And we all know what happened. They stress what the military is for in their ads and communications. And they got what they wanted.

And there's one other final thing that's inexplicable. We were letting in up to 10,000 illegal immigrants a day for over a four-year period. It's controversial how many in total came. But it could be from 8 million to 12 million.

So when [5]Donald Trump said he was going to offer a self-deportation, you get a thousand dollars, you get your way paid for, and you can apply for legal immigration at some future date—if you don't do this, you're disqualified for 10 years. And then the "Big, Beautiful Bill" will continue the wall. He put pressure on Mexico to enforce its own borders, to stop this trek northward.

We could go through all the things he has done. But we all thought that maybe he could reduce it from 10,000 to 2,000, maybe to 1,000. I thought maybe, "Wow. If he does all this, if he actually forces people and he creates a new deterrence, he might get only 500." Some months, there's nobody; 126 people I think it was in May. This is phenomenal.

There is no illegal immigration right now, as we speak. That frees the Border Patrol and the new agents that'll come online and the new Big, Beautiful Bill to round up the 10 million, starting with the 500,000 criminals that former President Joe Biden let in.

Add it all up and the orthodoxy, the conventional wisdom about tariffs, about foreign investment, about our assets that are unrealized, about military recruitment, about illegal immigration, they've all gone with the wind. We're in new territory. All the perceived wisdom is ignorance. And nobody knows what is what, except we're in a very exciting period.

If $9 trillion represents the market capitalization of all of Silicon Valley, you can imagine what $10 trillion to $15 trillion would do to this country. It's like bringing a new Silicon Valley—in total, one and a half of them—and plopping them down. And when you add in robotics and AI and the efficiency in government regulation, through these cuts and fast-tracking permits, we don't know where we are, but we might be on the verge of an economic boom.

2.7.20 New Evidence Suggests Trump-Russia Collusion Was an Obama Setup (2025-07-24 20:59)

There's news about Director of National Intelligence [1]Tulsi Gabbard's release of documents, alleging that then-President Barack Obama and our top intelligence head had conspired to create a false narrative that Donald Trump was, essentially, a Russian asset. And that that effort not only had damaged his 2016 campaign, it had damaged his transition to the presidency and his presidency itself in the first 22 months of the Mueller investigation.

And there's new information coming out all the time. Essentially, the new narrative says that despite all the references to "17 intelligence authorities" that had confirmed a [2]Trump-Putin collusion, there was no such consensus.

Now, we have had the Devin Nunes House Intelligence Committee majority report. We've had Michael Horowitz's inspector general's report. We have had various congressional, Senate and House committees report. And we've had the long John Durham special investigation.

And while there's some disagreement that the Russians tried to do this or tried to interfere—and let's be candid, the Chinese and the Russians always try to interfere—there was never any evidence that Russian President Vladimir Putin and Donald Trump colluded to throw the election to Donald Trump.

And what's new, as I said earlier, is that foreign intelligence tapped into the Russians. And they were baffled that they were being falsely accused. That might've had ramifications for our strategic relationship with Russia. Not that they're not adversaries, but they're kind of confused that we were using the same type of skullduggery that they do. And that undermined the high moral ground vis-a-vis Ukraine and other flashpoints with the Russians.

But it all boils down to this Dec. 9 meeting of 2016. Remember, Donald Trump had won the election. Barack Obama was going out. His intelligence heads and others at this meeting—John Brennan, CIA director; James Clapper, director of national intelligence; and James Comey, FBI director; surrounded by Susan Rice, national security adviser; Loretta Lynch, attorney general, etc.—they reported to Barack Obama, who would be out of office in six weeks.

And they said to him, “Here is the intelligence update.” And the intelligence update was, contrary to media reports and contrary to [3]Hillary Clinton, these 17 subordinate intelligence authorities had not found evidence, either in the campaign or during the transition, that Donald Trump was colluding. And so, that's what they reported.

They said that Barack Obama—or they have leaked that, or the documents, handwritten notes suggest that Barack Obama did not accept that, but said, “No, we don't want that assessment. We want an assessment that he did collude.” In other words, in Soviet Beria fashion: “Find me the crime and I have the criminal to insert into that false narrative.”

And they also were reporting, at various times, that, as I said, foreign intelligence sources thought that the Russians had no reason to lie, internally, in their internal communications. And they were baffled.

So, what's new about it? What's new is [4]Barack Obama was confronted with this. And he's basically said, “This is beneath the dignity of the president. This is nonsense. This is crazy. I don't have to reply to any of this.”

Why didn't he just say the following?

I, Barack Obama, when I was president, in the last few weeks of my term, I had a regularly scheduled intelligence committee meeting. People came in, of various branches, and they gave me an assessment. And it said that there was no evidence—as the media had alleged and as the Steele dossier had alleged and as James Comey, who was in the room, had earlier alleged when he contacted

Christopher Steele—that there was any Russian collusion. And when I heard that, I was dumbfounded. So, I just simply disagreed with them. And I said, ‘Well, this is important. Go back and find other things.’

Instead, he just completely denies it.

But the problem is that, as I’m speaking, there’s going to be new information. And these other subordinate intelligence directors that work variously for Clapper or Brennan are going to come forward in saying, “We found nothing. Clapper knew it. Brennan knew it.” And what will Clapper and Brennan say? That “we knew it, but we lied,” or, “We knew it and they told us to—Obama told us to lie,” or, “He lied. We lied.”

It’s not going to be pretty.

Will they ever go to court? No. I don’t think that they will be indicted because the so-called administrative state takes care of its own.

But this had a lot of ramifications. It undermined confidence in our elections. It tried to disrupt the campaign of Donald Trump. It tried to erode his transition. And it tried to sabotage his presidency.

And when we were dealing with Russia, our nuclear adversary, on Ukraine, we didn’t get anywhere, in part because [5]Donald Trump could not be a force in opposition to Putin because he was under constant allegations from Clapper and Brennan—now as MSNBC and CNN contributors—that he was a Russian asset, that he was a Russian puppet.

So, they kept advancing this false narrative, even after they left office, and it undermined the credibility of an American president to conduct foreign policy with Putin. And I think Putin’s concluded: “These guys are just as bad as we are. They lie. They lie. I am not going to negotiate with them.” And the rest is history, as is amplified by the Ukraine war.

Very sorted incident—worse than Watergate, worse than Iran-Contra, worse than Monica Lewinsky. A scandal whose dimensions we can’t even imagine. But we’re going to learn a lot more. But don’t expect any of these people to face the justice that they deserve.

2.7.21 The View Goes on Hiatus After Joy Behar Anti-Trump Rant (2025-07-24 22:33)

he View has [1]abruptly gone on hiatus following co-host Joy Behar's latest unhinged anti-Trump rant, a tirade so inflammatory that it prompted a warning from the White House. After years of pushing partisan narratives and ridiculing conservative voices, the show may finally be facing real consequences for its unchecked rhetoric. The break comes amid mounting calls for media accountability and a renewed effort by the Trump administration to rein in platforms that use their airtime to smear political opponents under the guise of daytime entertainment.

On Thursday, Behar appeared to reveal the show's upcoming hiatus accidentally.

"Before we go on hiatus, we only have one more show after this. I'm allowed to say that, right?" Behar asked, to which Alyssa Farah Griffin laughed and responded, "Too late now!" A producer chimed in from the background to add, "Doesn't really matter."

This followed the previous day's episode, where she and her co-hosts reacted to former President Donald Trump's demand that ex-President Obama be criminally investigated for allegedly fabricating intelligence related to the Russia collusion hoax.

"First of all, who tried to overthrow the government on Jan. 6?" Behar said. "Who was that again? That was not Obama. The thing about him is he's so jealous of Obama, because Obama is everything that he is not: Trim, smart, handsome, happily married, and can sing Al Green's song 'Let's Stay Together' better than Al Green. And Trump cannot stand it. It's driving him crazy. Green is not a good color."

White House spokesperson Taylor Rogers criticized Behar, calling her irrelevant and accusing her of having "Trump Derangement Syndrome." She blamed her for the decline in The View's ratings and suggested she's jealous of Trump's popularity, warning that her show could be canceled next.

After Stephen Colbert's late-night show was cancelled, The View's hiatus has many wondering whether the break will be a permanent vacation for the daytime show.

2.7.22 Actually, Trump Might Have Ended Jerome Powell Without Firing Him (2025-07-24 22:34)

Sarah will have more on this later, but I wish President Trump could fire Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell, whom he has eloquently dubbed "too late" for his refusal to lower interest rates. The president met with Mr. Powell, touring the multi-billion-dollar renovation to the Federal Reserve Building. Trump made it clear that if a site manager were causing costs overruns, he'd fire him, a not-so-subtle swipe at Mr. Powell (via [1]CNBC):

President Donald Trump and Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell went back and forth in front of the press Thursday over Trump's claims about cost overruns at the Fed headquarters in Washington.

The stunning side-by-side took place as Trump began touring the Fed building in what is widely seen as the latest chapter in his pressure campaign to get Powell to lower interest rates or resign as the central bank chairman.

But Trump also suggested that he was abandoning any consideration of firing Powell, despite floating that unprecedented and legally contested idea earlier this month.

"To do that is a big move, and I just don't think it's necessary," Trump told reporters at a separate press gathering after his brief spat with Powell.

He added, "I believe that he's going to do the right thing."

The president's visit to a construction site at the Fed on Thursday afternoon came as his administration has recently homed in on the costly renovations of two historic central bank buildings in D.C.

Shortly after his arrival, Trump and Powell were seen touring the site together, both wearing white hard hats.

He also joked with the chairman, saying that he wished he would cut interest rates, slapping him on the back in the process. Powell looked immensely uncomfortable during this part of the tour. He knows that while Trump can't fire him, if a shooting ever erupted between the two men, the president would win. He always wins.

He owned him. The liberal media is harping on a moment when Powell pushed back on some of the costs of the project or something. I don't know—it's not relevant. Trump got the final word, took over the spot, and owned Powell. He'll likely serve out the remainder of his term, but as Kellyanne Conway said tonight, the worst thing Trump could do to someone with these bureaucratic protections on their employment is to make them irrelevant. The president might have set that into motion today. He's going to let Powell die on the vine.

2.7.23 Trump Takes a Stand Against Homelessness (2025-07-24 22:35)

President Donald Trump signed an executive order urging states and municipalities to clear homeless encampments from public streets and relocate individuals to designated treatment and rehabilitation centers. The initiative marks a sharp pivot from the permissive, hands-off approach favored by many Democrat-led cities, which critics say has allowed public spaces to deteriorate into unsafe, unsanitary zones.

On Thursday, President Trump took decisive action by signing an executive order urging cities and local governments to remove homeless individuals from public spaces and restore law and order to America's streets. Unlike Democrats—who seem content to let homelessness spiral out of control while expanding the welfare state—Trump's plan offers real solutions. The order calls for the rehousing of homeless individuals, including drug addicts and those with mental health issues, in designated treatment centers. It also redirects federal funding to support these facilities, prioritizing states and municipalities that already take a tough stance on open drug use, urban camping, squatting, and other quality-of-life crimes. This move signals a return to accountability and common sense in addressing a crisis that progressive policies have only made worse.

The overwhelming majority of the homeless population, by some estimates, over 90 percent, are entangled in criminal activity, drug abuse, or both. A significant number are also in the country illegally. In cities like Los Angeles, they've transformed once-thriving neighborhoods into dangerous zones marked by crime, filth, and lawlessness. While local mayors and officials continue to turn a blind eye, President Trump is stepping in to do what they won't: restore safety and order to the nation's streets.

"President Trump is delivering on his commitment to Make America Safe Again and end homelessness across America," White House press secretary Karoline Leavitt said. "By removing vagrant criminals from our streets and redirecting resources toward substance abuse programs, the Trump Administration will ensure that Americans feel safe in their own communities and that individuals suffering from addiction or mental health struggles are able to get the help they need."

2.7.24 Democrats Are Addicted to Losing (2025-07-31 21:45)

After the defeat of Kamala Harris in November 2024, [1]the Democrats recently decided to run an autopsy, a discovery, so to speak, of why they lost that election. These autopsies are not uncommon for the losing political party, but they only tend to work if you're honest and you try to analyze every considerable factor or criterion without censorship or without fear.

In the case of [2]the Democrats, though, there are certain elements of that campaign that were obviously wrong and contributed to their defeat.

So, we would expect the following: Why was Joe Biden nominated in the first place? He seemed to—after the South Carolina primary of 2020—be suddenly coronated. He had lost

New Hampshire, he had lost Iowa.

And then the party bosses came in and said, “Pete Buttigieg, Elizabeth Warren, Bernie Sanders? These people are too radical. We’ll get old Joe Biden from Scranton, even though he’s not alert.”

And then when he was president, they kind of created a cabal that hid his dementia. And then when he was no longer useful and could not serve as a waxen effigy for a radical agenda under his name or his autopen, then they dumped him.

And yet, at that point, they should have had an open convention. But they didn’t. They anointed Kamala Harris, who had been a candidate in 2020—a dismal candidate—and had not won one delegate. Her campaign, truncated though it was, was a dismal failure. I mean, she went through a billion dollars.

She really didn’t have a message. She avoided the press. When she did try to speak extemporaneously, it was a word salad. And she was just an unimpressive candidate.

More importantly, though, they didn’t have issues and policies that reflected their core values but would also appeal to the middle class.

Bill Clinton was a liberal, but he ran in ’92 and ’96 on a hundred new police officers; abortion should be legal, safe, but rare; school uniforms; juveniles who commit violent crimes should be punished accordingly; there should be a secure border; illegal immigration is wrong. And then he made a populist appeal to the middle class.

[3]The Democrats are not going there. They don’t want to talk about the middle class because their policies—open borders, the Green New Deal, critical race theory, critical legal theory, defund the police—all that has to be rejected because they’re anathema to the middle class. They won’t do it.

Look what happened in 2008 when John McCain lost to Barack Obama. He didn’t do very well at all. He was a moderate Republican.

About 10,000 Republicans were unimpressed and stayed home, or 10,000—10 million independents, or whatever we want to call them.

But the point is, there were millions of voters who would've voted for a Republican candidate had he just appealed to the middle class. Instead, there wasn't much difference—if you look at their respective campaigns—between John McCain and Barack Obama.

And when John McCain lost, there was a Republican autopsy. And what did they find? Well, they picked Michael Steele for Republican National Committee chairman because he was black and he was a McCainite. But he wasn't the medicine for the cause of John McCain's defeat.

Remember what they also did? They started idolizing Barack Obama. David Frum, a Republican strategist, had a very infamous essay where he compared Barack Obama to what he said was a new head of the Republican Party, Rush Limbaugh. And he said, Rush is white, he's fat, he's had multiple marriages. He's not a good example.

That wasn't the point. The point was that Rush Limbaugh had some ideas—not all of them—that could be incorporated into a new Republican message. Close the border. Protect American citizens. Try to create a new policy that favors the middle class on matters of trade and tariffs. Avoid optional wars in the Middle East—on the ground, at least—that rely on the middle class that you have neglected during globalization to fight for you. Try to be fiscally responsible.

All those were core Republican values, and yet when you looked at that Republican autopsy of 2009, it was essentially: Try to out-identity politics the other side, or let in people from south of the border illegally. It was not a corrective.

Bottom line is, until the Democrats look in the mirror and say, "We have a message that nobody wants in the middle class. It's antithetical to the middle class on crime, on immigration, on energy, on foreign policy, on the economy," they'll never change.

They're like addicts. They can't live with DEI, with the Green New Deal, with this utopian globalization, and they can't live without it.

2.7.25 'Tough Love' for Mexico's President Meddling in US Politics (2025-07-31 21:47)

. I'd like to talk about [1]illegal immigration, but specifically about the new president of Mexico, Claudia Sheinbaum.

She's been very vocal about U.S. policy [2]toward Mexico. For example, she said she would offer legal counsel to her citizens that were here illegally that were picked up, she thought, unfairly or too violently by Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

She also said that the United States had no business taxing remittances—that is money that Mexican nationals here, for the most part illegally, send back to Mexico.

She said, "Do not come into Mexican national ground if you're going after the cartels." That's understandable, but the cartels are going into our ground.

So, what I'm getting at is she's very, very intrusive in American politics. But here's the problem: A recent Pew poll, taken just last year, showed a striking asymmetry. Whereas 61 % of Mexican citizens have a favorable view of the United States, only 31 % of Americans have a favorable view of Mexico.

Now, why is that? Well, Sheinbaum should ask herself that question. First of all, Mexico is running up a $171 billion surplus with us. Remember, it was supposed to be the North American Free Trade Agreement. There wasn't supposed to be, at least eventually, surpluses or deficits. Canada, the United States, and Mexico were all supposed to trade freely and equitably. That didn't happen.

Why is Mexico running a $171 billion trade surplus with the United States? Because China is avoiding tariffs by sending products to Mexico, which then Mexico assembles and exports with less duty into the United States. In other words, she's using a gimmick, as all Mexican presidents have recently, to get around tariffs and to run up surpluses, contrary to the spirit and law of that old agreement.

Second, the cartels are sending [3]fentanyl—but the thing about fentanyl is the raw product comes from China. The Mexican government could stop that. But the raw product comes from China, it's assembled in Mexican cartel laboratories and factories, and then it's sent to the United States—but it's not always sent labeled as fentanyl. It's labeled as Valium. It's labeled as Ativan. It's labeled as Dexedrine. It's labeled as either illicit or prescription drugs. It contributes to 70,000 or 80,000 deaths per year of Americans, who either commit suicide through it, but the majority just simply overdose.

Mexico knows that. Why don't they stop it? Because, like the trade surplus, it creates foreign exchange— $20 billion or $30 billion comes into the cartels and is absorbed by the Mexican economy.

Finally, she's mad about remittances, and the tax on them is really paltry—1 % or 2 %, we'll see in the "Big, Beautiful Bill." But there's a trillion dollars that go out from foreign nationals, for the most part, in the United States all over the world. In the case of Mexico, it's the largest source of direct foreign exchange, $63 billion.

But here's the rub. Many of these people sending back that money to Mexico are on local, state, federal entitlements for housing, for food, for education, for health care. In other words, we the taxpayers subsidize illegal aliens so that they can free up cash to send back to people in Mexico in dire poverty that can't find redress of grievances from Sheinbaum's own government.

And so, there's a lot of problems between us and Mexico, and the cure—the solution—is not for her to start editorializing on the shortfalls of American foreign policy toward Mexico or our own domestic policy. I've got a better idea.

Sheinbaum, why don't you do the following? Why don't you say that Mexican nationals are your citizens? They're key to your economic growth. You don't want them to leave your country. You have a new revisionist reform plan that you're going to offer them social services so that they don't flee to the United States. You're going to keep your own people in your own country.

No. 2: You're gonna forbid the importation, at all cost, of fentanyl into your country, and you're gonna go after the cartels and shut them down.

No. 3: You're gonna call up [4]President Donald Trump and you're gonna say, "In three years, there will be no surplus and no trade deficit on either side. We want to be good neighbors and we want to be equitable."

And therefore, there would be no need for you to intervene in our politics and lecturing us on what we're doing wrong and where we are exposed and all of the misdemeanors and felonies you spot in our policy.

Why am I saying that? Because the problem with Mexican-American relationships, as those polls reveal, is on your side.

Don't run up surpluses by mercantile dealings with an existential enemy of the United States, China. Do not count on [5]American taxpayers to subsidize your own citizens who entered illegally to send back $63 billion to your failing economy. And do not lecture us about the cartels—what we should and should not do about it—when you are enabling them to kill 70,000 Americans as a source of foreign exchange inside Mexico.

That's tough love, but it's also honest.

2.7.26 New Details Emerge on Obama's Role in Russiagate Scandal (2025-07-31 21:49)

I'd like to talk about the ongoing melodrama of what former President Barack Obama knew or did not know in his involvement with [1]Russian collusion, the hoax that plagued the Donald Trump 2016 campaign, tried to undermine his transition in 2016 and 2017, and ate up the first 22 months of his presidency in 2017 and 2018, and was found to be completely bogus.

There are three blind mice involved in this tale: John Brennan, the former CIA director; James Clapper, the former director of national intelligence; and James Comey, the former FBI director. And they all have new manifestations of their untruthfulness.

Let's start with John Brennan. He's very angry right now because the trove that was released by [2]National Intelligence Director Tulsi Gabbard of new documents and investigations may or may not have criminal referrals come out of them, and Attorney General Pam Bondi may file new charges.

The problem that Brennan has is that he went to a meeting and he presented a false picture of CIA assessments.

The so-called CIA heads of various divisions found no Russian collusion. They said to John Brennan, "There's nothing there that we can see that Donald Trump colluded with the Russians." He rejected that, cherry-picked four or five other analysts, and then presented a false picture to [3]Barack Obama. Or did he? Or did Barack Obama request that he do that? It'll be "he said, he said," but it's more likely that Barack Obama asked John Brennan to come up with the correct CIA assessments.

Sort of like Lavrentiy Beria, the head of the Soviet secret police during the Cold War and at the end of World War II. He said, "I have the criminal. You find me the crime." So: "I have the criminal, Donald Trump. All I need is Russian collusion." And that was the methodology that they proceeded by.

The problem with Brennan, though, is, in the process of preparing this false assessment, he said again and again, both publicly but also under testimony, he didn't know anything about the Steele dossier. Didn't know anything about it. He didn't read it. It didn't compute into CIA assessment. That was a lie.

We know now from other testimonies, especially from the trove, that he did draw on the fake Steele dossier. He referenced it to other people.

And the problem with John Brennan is this isn't the first time he's misled us. He lied about the Senate staffer computers. That was under oath. He lied, remember, about Predator drones, when he said there was no collateral damage. And remember he lied also as one of the 51 intelligence authorities who tried to float that bogus idea that [4]Hunter Biden's laptop was cooked up in Russia.

Then we come to James Clapper. He was sitting at this meeting in December of 2016, where he gave a false assessment and he misrepresented what the 18 intelligence agencies under his direction had found.

They had not found Russian collusion, and yet he participated in this. He went so far as later to thanking and giving credit to Barack Obama for demanding that they find Russian collusion. He said, "If he hadn't have ordered us to do this, we wouldn't have found it." I.e., the subtext is, "There was no evidence in our intelligence agency for it, so we concocted it on the directive of Barack Obama.”

But remember, he lied too. He swore under oath to the U.S. Congress that the National Security Agency had never spied on Americans. That was an abject lie. And he was part of the 51 intelligent authorities who also lied to the American people in 2020 on the eve of the second debate when Joe Biden denied that Hunter lied, Hunter Biden’s laptop was authentic. He quoted the 51 authorities. The FBI, remember, at that time, had it in its possession and had already authenticated it as genuine.

Then we come to James Comey. He also says that he had really nothing to do with the Steele dossier. The fact is, he was completely acquainted with it. He offered, his FBI offered a million dollars. They were so desperate to validate it. They said to Christopher Steele, “Just give us some proof. We can use this. We’ll give you a million dollars.” He couldn’t even come up with the substantive arguments to corroborate his own dossier, so he didn’t get the million dollars.

More importantly, James Comey has a problem. He leaked, on an FBI device, a conversation he had memorialized to The New York Times via a third party.

James Comey, remember, went before the House Oversight Committee, as I said earlier, and lied 245 times. If you say, “I don’t remember, I don’t recall, I don’t know,”—can you imagine an FBI director with all that knowledge at his fingertips saying, “I don’t remember, I don’t know,” about the most important investigation in recent history?

Let’s sum up these three blind mice. There’s new evidence that Barack Obama asked intelligence, investigatory heads—like John Brennan, like James Clapper and James Comey—to “find me evidence that you haven’t found yet so that we can continue the Russian collusion hoax after it was ineffective in the campaign, [5]Hillary Clinton lost the election. Now we want to sabotage.” This is the subtext of the transition and his presidency. “You go back—we only have a few weeks left, I’m a lame-duck president—and bring me the right assessments.”

And that’s exactly what they did, and that’s why they’re terrified that new information is coming forth that suggests to the American people what they did and how they were culpable.

2.7.27 Hunter's Meltdown Exposes the Biden Machine (2025-07-31 21:51)

Hello, this is Victor Davis Hanson for The Daily Signal. I would like to talk a little bit about the strange, bizarre, endless, run-on, crazy interview that [1]Hunter Biden, former President Joe Biden's son, gave with Andrew Callaghan, a so-called Generation Z internet influencer.

In this long interview, it was a spirited defense of his father, claiming that he was not demented at all, that he was in full control of his faculties, and he had a wonderful administration, and he was unfortunately aborted, kicked out, deposed by a sinister array of characters, whom he accused of being incompetent.

So he attacked George Clooney, who had written a letter about, in an op-ed about Joe Biden's cognitive problems. He went after David Axelrod, who was also an advocate of removing Biden and putting in [2]then-Vice President Kamala Harris, said his only claim to fame is he won one election. That's kind of true, in the case of former President Barack Obama. And as Hunter said, Obama was the reason he was elected, not Axelrod. He went after James Carville. He went after Jake Tapper. He went after the entire Democratic establishment.

But what was very strange about what he did, he revealed himself. He attacked grifters in the Democratic Party that made a lot of money. That's what he did. He said, "These people were unethical." That's what he was.

Remember, he was a tax cheat. He never reported, fully, the income that he made by trading off his father's name. He never truly gave us the full account of the Biden consortium—what his uncle, aunt, cousins, what they were actually doing to get such an enormous amount of money. He never explained why he accepted a pardon from his father. He never explained why his father actually signed his pardon, in opposition to what he did with everybody else, almost, with an autopen.

And then it got very bizarre. He never mentioned that he had dated his brother's widow and got her hooked on dangerous drugs. In fact, when he mentioned drugs, I thought he might refer to the cocaine that was found in a mail slot [3]in the West Wing. He didn't. Instead, he gave a defense of cocaine and suggested it's not nearly as toxic as alcohol.

When he was asked about the laptop—and remember the laptop was in the possession of the FBI for one year and they authenticated it as genuine, and they knew it was genuine. At the same time, they kept silent when “51 intelligence authorities” lied to the American people. And [4]Joe Biden used that lie in the second debate of the 2020 campaign to say that [5]Donald Trump was lying, that this laptop “had all the earmarks of Russian” information efforts—meaning “disinformation.”

He didn’t mention any of that. In fact, he just said about the laptop—in which he is seen using drugs, he’s in pornographic poses, but most importantly, he references his father as “the big guy” and “the 10 % guy,” and he laments that he is the bagman for the family.

It’s very incriminating. But he doesn’t—as he has before—he has never denied that it was his. He never denies it’s his. He just says, “It’s irrelevant. If anybody had a laptop and you looked into it, all kinds of stuff would come out.”

He doesn’t talk about his art, that con where he was doodling and blowing paint on through his nose and then hawking that art to buyers, who wanted influence with his father.

His protestations that his father was heroic, that he was one of the best Democratic senators we’ve had, that his presidency was a smashing success are laughable.

So what am I getting at? What I’m getting at is this: It’s very dangerous to think that for four years we had a president who was mentally challenged, cognitively disabled, suffering dementia. And the close circle around them—whether they were former Obama operatives or Biden senatorial family, or his own real family—that these people were running the country.

And the last year or two, if you look at photographs, videos of Biden giving a speech, Biden traveling, there’s one constant. It’s Hunter Biden. Hunter Biden was his eyes and his ears. And he was a close—and maybe the closest—adviser to his father.

And after listening to that video, you can appreciate just how close we came to utter chaos and disruption, that a mentally challenged president and his addicted son had the most power of anybody in the entire world and were running this government with the help of who knows who. We have no idea.

Bottom line, if you listen to even a clip of that interview, it’s frightening that this man was anywhere near the presidency. And how he got near the presidency and how the president was the president is a scandal in itself of historical proportions.

2.8 August

2.8.1 Experts Were Wrong. The Economy's Strong—But the Fed Won't Budge. (2025-08-07 09:42)

I'd like to talk about [1]the economy here at the beginning of August. We've just finished July. We have some of the July reports, but mostly, they're still from June. If you look at the three or four main categories that adjudicate the health or the malady of an economy, they're pretty good.

GDP came in at 3.0. That was not predicted to be that high. The inflation rate may have just come out for July. There are different reports, but it's about 2.7 %. It was 2.6 % in May. January was 3.0 %. For the year, it's about 2.4 %. So, inflation is still tolerable. It's not growing—an annualized rate at 2.4 %.

So, you have a good GDP, you have a good inflation rate, you have a good jobs report. We're at about 4.1 % unemployment in the month of June. We picked up 150,000 new jobs—that wasn't predicted. As far as money coming into the Treasury and going out, we had a historical May. We'll wait and see what June and July are like, but we actually had more money coming into the Treasury than the government spent.

I want to gauge the reaction to this good news. Of course, we expect the Left to discount it. Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., said that these figures are all bogus, even though they're from non-administration sources, government bureaucracies. We also had a member of Congress come on and say that Donald Trump fudged them.

On the GDP, we had The Wall Street Journal say, that's just because GDP is measured also by imports and exports, and we had fewer imports and more exports. But isn't that good? But they said that was an aberration.

So, we've had people attack this. Most of the people said, as far as more money coming in than going out, that's only because of May, and it will never be true again.

Well, we've had Mays in 2024 or 2023, all the way back to 2017, the first year of the Trump administration. This was the only one in which we had more money coming in—a surplus.

Then we get to the question of Jerome Powell. He's the head of the Federal Reserve. Usually, the Fed cuts rates when they're worried about political and economic instability, and that means, basically, a recession.

Now, remember that The Wall Street Journal, New York Times, Washington Post, and our main media organs all told us in May when Donald Trump was talking about "art of the deal" tariffs, "I'm gonna announce a high tariff, then negotiate down to 10 or 15 %," which is precisely what he did.

But nevertheless, they said at the beginning of August, midsummer, we were going to have high inflation or stagflation, bad job growth, static GDP, and a trade war along with a Wall Street collapse. Basically, a recession.

Well, Wall Street stock prices are at historical highs. Every one of those predictions was wrong. So, if they were wrong and [2]the economy is not booming but strong, why would Powell keep interest rates at that 4.5 % fed rate that translates into almost over 6 % and near 7 % 30-year mortgages?

After all, the Fed is supposed to lower rates when we have recession. With all this recessionary talk, you thought that he would lower rates. Now, he says he's looking at [3]the economy and he's not lowering rates because he doesn't yet see a recession?

But he's been told that he was worried about [4]the economy. If he's worried about a trade war and tariffs and soft job growth—which was predicted but didn't happen—why doesn't he lower interest rates?

And the fact is, that if you look at the interest rates that he did cut right before the 2024 election and his all-over-the-map attitude toward interest rates today, there is no logic.

So, now he's rejected the earlier prognosis that we were in a recession. It makes no sense.

Why is this important? Why is this important when the Washington Post says that the numbers are rigged or we're really not as strong as we think we are with GDP, or Powell can't be consistent and adjudicate rates going up or down based on recession or boom?

We're paying $3 billion a day in interest. A day. Our defense budget costs less—that trillion-dollar defense budget—than the interest payments, per year. Donald Trump is trying to cut taxes and deregulate and grow [5]the economy without increasing the deficit he inherited at about $2 trillion.

He thinks that eventually, an expanded economy will bring in new revenue—sort of supply-side economics—but in the short-term, he does not want to grow that deficit by giving tax cuts. So, what is he doing? He thinks the tariffs will bring in—without hurting GDP here or abroad—about a third of a trillion dollars.

He thinks if he can decrease the interest rate by a point or a point and a half, he might get another third of a trillion—maybe cut the interest cost by $1 billion a day down to $2 billion from $3 billion. So, you're about one-third of the way to cut the deficit. That's pretty good when you had tax cuts.

That won't happen if the interest rates stay high and the economy stays solid and doesn't give you any reason or worry over an inflationary spiral, which it hasn't so far. Bottom line, things are going very well. All of the experts were wrong, and yet the experts do not admit they were wrong.

They say, "We were wrong," privately, "but we're going to be proved right because either we hope or we expect the economy to do poorly."

My guess is, even if the economy cools down and does poorly, Powell will not cut interest rates. He has a personal stake in this. He feels aggrieved. He feels he has to be vindicated and he's stubborn and he will not show the same flexibility he did during the campaign year 2024.

2.8.2 Leftist Elites Seek to Divide Us by Race (2025-08-07 09:43)

Recently, a large group of [1]black youths began pummeling several white adults in downtown Cincinnati.

The original altercation apparently broke out between a black and white male in [2]he-said/he-said fashion. But that dispute soon turned into a virtual free-for-all.

Numerous male and female black youths sucker-punched a middle-aged woman and a man. Others continued to kick or [3]body slam the victims, who were sprawled on their backs and seemingly unconscious. There were many disturbing aspects to the beat-downs.

One, [4]the violence broke out along racial and age fault lines. After the initial one-on-one dispute, groups of black youths swarmed solitary older white bystanders to pound them.

Two, the surrounding assembled group of black youths not only failed to intervene to restrain the bullies. They also recorded the beatings for [5]social media and were heard cheering on the one-sided violence.

Three, there was neither a police presence nor any timely Good Samaritan interventions.

Instead, what ended the attacks was simply the fact that at least two of the targets appeared nearly comatose. So their assailants apparently concluded that their agenda of beating whites into unconsciousness was mostly complete.

Four, oddly few of the usual black spokespeople who habitually comment on interracial violence were to be seen.

During the fake Jussie Smollett attack, self-appointed leaders from Al Sharpton to Kamala Harris immediately issued warnings about so-called systemic white racism that had reared its ugly head to victimize Smollett.

Yet when it was revealed Smollett had concocted the entire charade—and even hired his own assaulters—there were few if any retractions from those once so eager to shout “racist!”

Such demagoguery is a well-known pattern dating back to the days of the Tawana Brawley rape hoax, the Duke Lacrosse charade, the Covington kids ruse, the Michael Ford “Hands-up-Don’t Shoot” fabrication, the “pseudo-transformation of George Zimmerman into a ‘white Hispanic,’” or the NASCAR noose fable.

Racists too often concoct white racist attackers and go silent when the evidence proves fabricated—only to be primed to manipulate the next hoax.

Five, the media and authorities did their best to either hide or play down the violence.

City leaders, the chief of police, and the media variously blamed the mass black-on-white violence on 1) social media, 2) the original one-on-one dispute, 3) alcohol, 4) the lack of civilian intervention to stop the violence, and 5) a festival atmosphere—anything except endemic racial hatred shown toward whites from the crowd of black youths.

Six, had a gang of white toughs beat middle-aged African-Americans senseless, recorded it, and cheered on the violence, there would have been immediate national outrage.

Nor did anyone wish to raise the taboo topic of inordinate black crime rates, disproportionate to respective demographic realities. In rare interracial violent crimes, the asymmetrical ratio of black-on-white versus white-on-black assaults ranges from three to five times greater.

Seven, the quiet of the left-wing media to the reprehensible violence stands in marked contrast with their usual rush-to-judgment racialism in two near-simultaneous incidents.

When a shooter of mixed African-American heritage recently entered a New York City corporate headquarters and executed four innocents, CNN falsely raised the speculation that a “white male” was perhaps responsible—despite the photograph of the suspect, who was as clearly male as he was not white.

Media and municipal officials jumped to explain the violence as due to the killer's alleged past traumatic brain injury or because of his access to a semi-automatic weapon—or anything other than his hate-filled plan to murder an NFL executive.

Actress and model Sydney Sweeney just cut a jeans commercial in front of a poster that said, “Sydney Sweeney has great genes” —with “genes” crossed out and replaced with “jeans.” The left then exploded, alleging the ad was a supposed Hitlerian reference to white eugenics.

Yet the eugenics movement in America was mostly a product of left-wing progressives, from Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger to Democrat president Woodrow Wilson.

And the ad's sponsor, American Eagle, had previously used all sorts of models from all racial backgrounds. All might agree that the ad simply shows both tight, sexy jeans and a naturally attractive wearer—period.

The country is descending into a tribal morass of double standards and racial fixations.

The diversity/equity/inclusion industry, the defund-the-police madness, and the perpetual left-wing hunt for “white racism/white privilege/white rage” —from the prior Pentagon hierarchy to the lunatic fringe of Jasmine Crockett, Joy Reid, and Zohran Mamdani—have all legitimized double standards while lowering the bar of the once unacceptable.

When our careerist left-wing elites seek to divide us by race and make it essential, not incidental, to our identities, that tribalist message filters throughout communities.

The ensuing signal is that “payback” violence is OK—on the expectation that there are no consequences for interracial violence—as long as the victim is white and the assaulter is not.

2.8.3 The Left Doesn't Hate Sydney Sweeney's Jeans. It Hates Beauty. (2025-08-07 09:44)

There's been a recent hysteria over a provocative commercial, [1]a jeans commercial by American Eagle.

It portrays the young blond model [2]Sydney Sweeney—she's also an actress—putting on or taking off a pair of tight, tight jeans, and the background lettering or messaging is “Sydney Sweeney has great genes,” and the gene “G,” as in chromosomes, is crossed out, replaced by J-E-A-N-S. And the message is that she's a natural beauty, but that she's a natural beauty in part because she has on American Eagle jeans. End of story—not quite.

The Left went hysterical. And they said this was objectifying whiteness, that we were privileging white people over people of color, we were talking about eugenics because of the word genes. And they just thought this was intolerable. And they even compared it to Hitler, and they were off to the races, to the Hitler Third Reich comparisons.

But this is what's odd about it. We have all sorts of models that pose for jean commercials. American Eagle has had black women, people, Hispanics, everybody.

And do you remember the ad by Levi's for Beyonce? Levi's has her portrayed with a cowboy hat, a yellow wig, and in a country-western setting with Levi jeans. I thought it was wonderful. She's beautiful. She has the same type of figure as Sydney Sweeney.

Nobody objected, nobody said, “Beyonce is objectifying whiteness because, as an African American, she's got a blond wig on. She is emulating the white cowboy, country-western modern culture, and she's got these tight jeans and it's then appealing to a particular audience.”

No one said that, of course, because that's not what Sydney Sweeney was doing. So, what was she doing? No. 1, she was telling people that she's attractive and that you can be attractive. Maybe not to the same degree as Sydney Sweeney if you put on American Eagle jeans, but it will help you to be more attractive. And indeed, people are going out and buying more American Eagle jeans on the theory of the advertisers that you too can be Sydney Sweeney. And that's the essence, isn't it, of all advertising?

The second thing that was going on, she's also sending a message to the younger generation: We gotta get back to classical beauty. Aristotle said, "Beauty is based on proportion, mathematics, and it's imprinted on our brains." He's talking about architecture, landscape, trees. Why is a tree beautiful?

And in terms of women, it's imprinted on our brains that women are thinner than heavier, more wash beast figure than not, more buxom than not. And we have tried to say that that's not fair, that everybody can't be like that. Therefore, we're not gonna do that. We're not gonna portray it. We're not gonna emphasize that.

She's saying to the younger generation, "You react to me because it's imprinted on your brains that I have a thin waist and ample posterior and I'm well endowed. I have a big bosom and that appeals to you and I'm going to show you."

That's all it was.

The other ironies about it, when you want to go down the "everything is race" category, you have to be very careful to know your history. They kept saying, "This is eugenics. You mentioned genes." What was the eugenics movement? It was a late 19th-century, early 20th-century progressive movement. It wasn't Democrat or Republican, it was progressive, the idea that we're going to use science to determine gene pools and then breed people accordingly, supposedly.

And who were the great practitioners? Well, they were progressive Republicans like Teddy Roosevelt, but [3]Woodrow Wilson was a stalwart, Helen Keller. But most famously, Margaret Sanger, the creator of Planned Parenthood, even Ruth Bader Ginsburg, the late Supreme Court justice. Remember, she, in a New Yorker interview, remarked that she didn't understand the objections to abortion because, she said, "Aren't we aborting, basically, the right people?" "Right" meaning—I don't know what she quite meant, but selectively.

So, eugenics is a left-wing historical phenomenon and it's very ironic for [4]the Left to accuse someone who's not a eugenicist, the makers of this ad, with eugenics, when they could look to themselves and maybe in the age of erasure, get rid of Margaret Sanger's association with [5]Planned Parenthood.

And so, finally, a final warning or a piece of advice from Aristotle: We act to beauty by proportion and mathematics. As I said, Beyonce is beautiful, not because she's black or not because she's not white, or Sydney Sweeney is beautiful, not because of her skin color, but because she has, as Aristotle would say, perfect symmetry.

And that's a universal idea that translates into appreciation of young women with figures like that. And it transcends the hysteria and the madness of our contemporary, racially fixed culture.

2.8.4 Jerome Powell's Feud With Trump Could Cost You Big (2025-08-11 09:39)

There's been a lot of controversy recently about the relationship between the chairman of [1]the Federal Reserve, Jerome Powell, and President Donald Trump.

And the argument from the Trump side is that the economy does not show signs of inflation. People had argued, especially perhaps Powell himself, that the tariffs and a trade war and gargantuan stock increases would create inflation. Therefore, he had to keep interest rates high at about 4.3 %, which translates into 30-year mortgages, over 7 %.

On the other hand, Donald Trump said, "There's no evidence there's an inflation and we would like to get some stimulus to avoid a recession."

In other words, why don't you go down a point or maybe even two points in the manner that we saw at the early years of the Biden administration, before former [2]President Joe Biden's hyperinflation. Which the Fed, remember, was very slow to react. Former Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen assured us that inflation was nothing to worry about. That it was transitory. And the Fed was too slow. And we got up to a hyperinflation in 2022 of 9 %.

In general, remember how the Fed works: If there is a fear of recession, they lower interest rates, so then people have easier access to money. So that stimulates them to spend and to acquire and then to avoid a recession. If there's too much inflation, people are afraid that the economy will overheat and we'll get a boom and bust cycle. And the value of our money will diminish. So, interest rates go up.

Trump's argument, though, is that Powell is inconsistent. During March and April, when—to take one example—The Wall Street Journal was forecasting a “stock crash,” a “trade war,” “uncertainty over tariffs,” “anemic gross domestic product,” and all of the barometers, if you read paragraph after paragraph of story after story, it was doom and gloom in March and April.

At that point, you would've thought that Powell, who agreed, basically, with the consensus of the economic media and most of the economists, why didn't he intervene in fears that they were right, that we were headed toward a recession and lower rates? Instead, he didn't do anything. Now that all of those warnings turned out to be what? Nonfactual and incorrect. Suddenly, he hasn't lowered interest rates.

What we're getting at is that there is no sign of inflation. So, traditionally, if there's no sign of inflation and the economy's doing well and you want to make it even do better, why not go down a little bit?

So, what is going on? I think a lot of what's going on—to finish—is that Jerome Powell has been in this fight with [3]Donald Trump. He doesn't understand “Art of the Deal” language. Donald Trump has called him “Too Late Powell,” criticized him personally. He's dug down. And whether we like it or not, he's acting emotionally or angrily to Donald Trump. And he has been under threat of being fired. He does not want to show that he's going to back down and lose the independence of the Fed to the president.

The problem with that stance is it really hurts millions of Americans, who are trying to buy a home at 7 % interest, when the economy is not inflationary. And we're losing a wonderful opportunity.

More importantly is, remember, Donald Trump says he's going to reduce the deficit, but he's not going to touch Social Security. He's not gonna touch defense, Medicare, but he's gonna cut taxes and deregulate. So, until that stimulatory activity occurs and we get more revenue, we're going to be in a shortfall that the deficit either will not be cut or it will rise.

So, what is Donald Trump trying to do? He is trying to look at nontraditional ways of raising revenue or cutting expenses. And therefore, getting closer to a budget that could be balanced.

No. 1: The [4]Department of Government Efficiency people say that by the end of the year, they will cut $200 billion. That would be $200 billion off of a $2 trillion deficit. The tariff people, the secretary of treasury, Scott Bessent, says that we're going to get an additional third of a trillion dollars, $300 billion-plus, in tariff revenues. With those cuts and those additions in revenue, we might have a—I don't know—half a trillion dollars.

And Donald Trump, in his part, says, "Just lower the interest rate. And instead of paying $3 billion a day, we might pay $2 billion. And that over the year might save $300 billion."

You see where they're getting at? They're trying to get up to $800 billion and therefore cut the entire deficit by 40 % without raising taxes, without cutting Medicare, without cutting Social Security, without cutting defense. It's pretty hard to do, but that's the driving force behind the anger. It's not just that Powell may strangle the economy, but that he's killing Donald Trump's initiatives by this $3 billion a day in interest rates.

Finally, Powell's gotta kind of shrug off the attacks by Trump. His duty is, yes, it's to be independent, but it's to be consistent. He can't show us that fears of a recession lead to lower interest rates and fears of inflation lead to highest interest rates. We should never raise interest rates 60 days before a presidential election—he did that on Sept. 18—or cut interest, either one. But he cut interest on the Sept. 18, less than two months before the 2024 presidential election.

In some ways, in conclusion, he reminds me of [5]Merrick Garland. Merrick Garland, remember, was a Supreme Court nominee. And Sen. Mitch McConnell and the Republicans invoked in kind of a boomerang fashion the Biden rule that a lame-duck presidency, i.e., former President Barack Obama, could not nominate an 11th-hour Supreme Court nominee, which happened to be Merrick Garland.

They didn't even give him a chance to come up for a vote. He was very bitter. And as a reward out of that bitterness, Joe Biden made him attorney general.

And we know from the Jack Smith special counsel and the Robert Hur special counsel what the Justice Department did as far as the FBI overreach, that he was a very bitter and very angry person who let the political animus shown toward him affect him, and he was not a disinterested attorney general.

Let's hope that Powell learns that lesson, shrugs off criticism, and then shows a consistency through the Biden years and the Trump years that when he has data that show a stable or booming economy, he keeps interest stable or he raises them a little bit; and when he has a stable but weakening economy, in some ways, he lowers interest rates; and he's oblivious and impervious to what comes out of the White House.

2.8.5 DEI Will Implode. Here's Why. (2025-08-11 09:41)

DEI, the acronym for [1]diversity, equity, and inclusion, is dying.

We had this conversation three years ago. It was in the ascendance. But when [2]President Donald Trump came into power, by a series of executive orders, he tried to abolish it. And he could abolish it because entities that receive it and receive federal funds can be leveraged to drop it in order to retain their federal funding.

And why did Donald Trump not like it? Because he said the emperor has no clothes. It's a racially biased program. It predicates hiring, retention, promotion, tenure on the color of your skin and not the content of your character, or your gender or your sexual orientation.

And so, it's a winning issue for Donald Trump, when you look at the polls. It's not just that 60 % of so-called white people who often feel they're victimized by DEI are opposed, but Hispanics and blacks also poll that they are against it. And that's baffled people. But it's kind of obvious when you think about it. It's commonsensical.

One: They don't wanna be stigmatized when they have achieved a job through meritocratic criteria—their own ability or intellect or hard work. They don't wanna be called “a DEI hire.” And that would be a natural assumption, given that there's a system that rewards people on the basis of their color rather than their skills. So, people who are very skilled, who happen to be non-white, don't wanna be so stigmatized.

The other is a class situation. People in the black community and the Hispanic community, they say, “Wait a minute. The people who are wealthy, the people who were the children of orthodontists—the Obamas, the Eric Holders, the Joy Reids—these people don't need any help. And yet, they're given affirmative action in the name of us, the middle and lower classes that have no such avenues."

So, it's under assault within the communities who traditionally benefited from it.

But here's why it's going to implode and why Donald Trump is going to win this argument. There's at least three criticisms of diversity, equity, inclusion that they cannot answer.

Remember, we started out in 1965 as an answer to the Jim Crow South and the legacy of slavery and what was called "systematic racism" with affirmative action. At that time, the country was basically 89 % white and 11 % African American. And people said that African Americans, per capita, are much poorer than whites, statistically. Not that there weren't more poor whites than there were African Americans, there were, but statistically, per capita.

And so, therefore, it's time to "affirm" them and give them a boost on the basis of their skin color, to give them entry, to make sure that the civil rights laws not only gave you an equality of opportunity but, let's be honest, a quality of results. A quota system, so to speak. So, that was the idea behind it.

And the reason that it's not working now is threefold. First of all, from 1965—if you think about it, we're 35 years in the 20th century and 25 in the 21st. We're 60 years behind that. We've had three generations who grew up without Jim Crow and no knowledge of systemic racism, essentially. Maybe they call it, I don't know, "insidious," "systematic." But the point is, flagrant racial prejudice—three generations haven't seen it. But they have seen bias predicated on race through DEI.

The second thing: We're a multiracial society. So, we're no longer 90 %/10 %. We have almost more Hispanics than we do blacks. We have Asians. We have people from the Arab world. But more importantly, we're interracial. Many of these groups, 1 out of 3, marry someone not of their group.

So, when we see somebody, we don't know who they are, and their background is nebulous. And yet, if you're going to qualify for special preference, you can see what happens. It invites abuse of the system.

No more flagrantly was that shown than the New York Post headline—I think this week—when it said, "Elizabeth Warren meets Mamdani: Two liars who lied about who they were."

[3]Sen. Elizabeth Warren, remember—to get a coveted billet at Harvard Law School—said she was Native American. When called on it by Donald Trump, she had less than 0.001 %. And Zohran Mamdani, who was a wealthy Indian American from Uganda, born in Uganda, claimed in his college application that he was an African American, with the obvious intention to suggest he was a black American, which he wasn't.

I think the subtext of that cover story said, "Liars meet."

The point is, whether you're Ward Churchill or Elizabeth Warren or Mamdani, or all these people, you game the system and you try to suggest that you are a DEI person when you're not.

But how do you know you're not? Because the people who set up these things are so afraid of absolute standards: "One-sixteenth makes you black. One-sixteenth makes you a Native American. Oh, we're just like the old Confederacy one-drop rule." That's what those racists in the South did before and after the war. They considered somebody non-white with one drop—and here we're doing the same thing. Should we get DNA badges?

So, you can see it's impossible to determine who is whom. You can't. And the people who police DEI will not be honest—the admissions officer at Harvard, the admissions officer at Stanford, the HR department at Google—they will not tell you when and when not a person is a DEI because to do so would make them very eugenicist, wouldn't they? They would have to talk about race in explicit and off-putting terms.

Finally, there's one last reason. DEI was based on poverty and past documented racism. When [4]Barack Obama came into power in 2009, he redefined affirmative action and said, "It's not black/white binaries. It's 30 %. A huge number of Americans who are not white. They have claims against the majority. They are part of a Marxist binary of victimized and oppressed. And therefore, they need special consideration against the victimizers and the oppressors." The problem with this was class did not enter.

So, Mr. Mamdani says he's a minority and he is black, and he needs special preference. He also said he was gonna go after "white or affluent neighborhoods." He's Indian American. His family originally came from India. Indian Americans, according to our census, are the wealthiest, most privileged ethnic group in America.

So, what I'm getting at is your skin color no longer can be correlated, exactly, with your class. So you end up with a wealthy group—as I mentioned, a Joy Reid, an Eric Holder, a Barack Obama—getting special preferences for their children when maybe there’s a lot of poor, much poorer people in East Palestine that have no such recourse.

And finally, [5]affirmative action was based on historical discrimination and a complaint against the majority.

What does Mr. Mamdani have when he comes into the United States? What does Rep. Ilhan Omar have? What do Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez’s parents have? What did “the squad” members have?

Does it mean that when you walk one inch into the United States from southern Mexico and Michoacán, suddenly you can say, “I’ve been treated terribly by America. I need affirmative action”? If you’re from a wealthy Indian family in South Africa and you come in the United States, when you get to the airport, you say, “I’m a victim. They did it to me. I want affirmative action because I don’t look as white as everybody else”?

So, to sum up, DEI is imploding because you can’t tell who qualifies in a multiracial society. Nor would you want to know. Two: You can’t cite historical oppression that would justify reparatory action. And three: There’s no connection, necessarily, anymore between class, money, affluence, and skin color.

Add it all up and Donald Trump is going to win this war to abolish something that has turned nightmarish.

2.8.6 Uncharted Territory: Conservatives Face Unprecedented Challenges (2025-08-11 09:45)

In that 1960s version of the original “Star Trek,” James T. Kirk—William Shatner—the captain of the Enterprise, remember, he went out to explore deep outer space. And the mission statement was, in part, “to go boldly where no one else has gone before.” And then, each week, you met weird things that no one had anticipated.

All of the expert opinion hasn’t had a good track record, simply because they tried to apply old logic to new explorations that they weren’t sure what was happening or why they were happening or if they’d ever seen it before.

So, we were supposed to have a recession, a stock market collapse, poor gross domestic product, reduction in income. We didn’t have that, partly because we’ve never seen [2]a tariff applied across the board to countries, especially that were running surpluses with the United States. And apparently, we can lower—and we never thought we could—this $1 trillion deficit.

We don’t know the implications on the budget. We don’t know the implications on the economy. Our secretary of the interior, Doug Burgum, has announced that we may have $15 trillion in foreign exchange. We’ve never had anything approaching that number.

What are the economic implications of that, as far as job growth, new factories, new economic activity? We don’t know. We’re all worried that [3]President Donald Trump’s inherited $2 trillion annual budget deficit will not be reduced, at least in the foreseeable future, if not raised by the “Big, Beautiful Bill.” But on the other hand, we’ve never seen anybody try to cut $200 billion, which may be actualized at the end of the year, from the federal budget.

Scott Bessent, the treasury secretary, thinks there might be $300 billion in additional revenue. You get up to $500 or $600 billion taken away from the deficit and you’re almost, you know, at a $2 trillion—you’re almost over a quarter of the way there.

So, we’ve never seen anybody do that with that amount of tariff revenue. We’ve never seen anybody do that with that amount of federal cutting.

As far as the universities, we don’t know what the effect will be of taxing the endowments. Everybody’s shrilling and very shrill and saying, “This is terrible. It’s gonna wreck the universities. We don't know the effect of reducing the surcharges on federal grants from 50 % to 60 % down to 15 %. We don't know the effect of saying to the universities, 'You're violating the civil rights statutes of the 1960s, and especially, the 2023 Supreme Court ruling by having segregated dorms, segregated safe spaces, segregated affinity graduations.'"

But what if we can't expect, we can't anticipate what might happen, and what might happen might be very good?

Maybe if you stop fixating on race, people will get along better. Maybe they'll assimilate better. Maybe they'll be integrated if they live together and race is incidental, not essential, to where they sleep every night or where they go on campus. You know, get rid of safe spaces.

Maybe the university will cut the legions of administrators, that big administrative bloat, if they cannot charge the government 55 %. Maybe they'll learn how to run their labs or their computer stations or something on 15 %.

Maybe if we tax endowments, the universities will say, "Well, you know, our faculty, we're 95 % left-wing. The curriculum that we impose in the general education is all slanted. Maybe just to restore our tax-exempt status, we should try to be more enlightened, more disinterested."

And the same thing, finally, on the border. There is no [4]illegal immigration right now. And we were told that was impossible. The experts said, "You have to have comprehensive immigration reform." But we've never tried it before, the way that Donald Trump did.

We've never said, "We're gonna build a wall through the entire border space, from the Gulf to the Pacific." We've never said that we're going to stop catch and release, together with making people apply for refugee status before they get to the United States. We never said, "If you come across the United States, you will be deported." We've never said, "Here are the incentives for self-deportation." And a million people took it up.

What am I getting at? On the budget, on [5]the economy, on the universities, on the border—and I could apply this as well to the radical changes in military recruitment, in DEI—no one has ever said, "We're going to actually do what conservatives and Republicans have promised for a half-century."

And when you do that, and you actually carry through your promises, you're in unknown territory, you're "boldly going where no one has gone before," and traditional wisdom is not only correct in predicting what will follow.

2.8.7 Trump, Putin, and the Future of Ukraine's War (2025-08-18 21:59)

resident Donald Trump met [1]Russian President Vladimir Putin last week for the much-anticipated summit, I guess we would call it, in Anchorage, Alaska.

Remember the last time American diplomats of a high ranking—Jake Sullivan and Antony Blinken, the respective secretary of state and national security adviser to the Biden administration—met with the Chinese, they were humiliated and nothing came of it.

Trump thought he could get a ceasefire. After three hours, both Trump and Putin came out to give statements to the press. There was no question-and-answer.

Putin gave a long harangue. How would you characterize it? It was mostly a recital of Russian grievances and the need to be friendlier to America. It was an outreach, not to [2]Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy or Ukraine or Europe, but to America.

And it was in line with Russian strategy that they think Donald Trump is a strong leader, but also, he is more forgiving, or at least more malleable, about seeking a peace settlement rather than the “whatever it takes” attitude of the Biden administration. And he also believes that the Europeans are tired—after three and a half years—that Ukraine is exhausted. And so, he can appeal to Donald Trump to put an end to it on Russian terms.

What are the terms? Well, Trump didn't outline them in his portion of the post-summit report to the media and to the world. He wasn't depressed. He didn't say we should have had a ceasefire. He just said that there were a lot of elements that were, more or less, concluded successfully between Putin and Trump. But more importantly, for the big sticking points, he would have to talk to the Europeans, as was noted and necessary, and President Zelenskyy.

And we know what the outlines are, don't we? We've talked about them. Ukraine will not be in NATO. They don't have the military wherewithal. They have the moral edge and the moral right—but they don't have the military wherewithal. Nor does Europe or the United States want to go to that length to give it to them against nuclear Russia to reclaim the Donbas—all of the Donbas—or Crimea.

So, what the sticking point is, right now, these two armies are locked inside the Donbas. Basically, 50 to 100 miles on an undulating line from the Russian borders. And there could be a DMZ, like the one in Korea, and then that could be the basis for a permanent border. But the problem is that Putin has not got the entire Donbas and the regions around it. And the Ukrainians are stiffening.

Both sides are worn out. There's been a million and a half casualties that are wounded, dead, missing, captive. But Russia has greater reserves than does Ukraine. So, there's a desire on both sides to have an armistice.

The sticking points is that the Constitution does not allow Zelenskyy without an assent from his parliament to give away land to a foreign interloper. And Putin does not think, at this point, he has ground down the Ukrainians enough or acquired enough of their eastern territory to justify the full hearty invasion that's cost probably a million Russians.

But here's what I want to get to, very quickly. There's a lot of criticism of [3]Donald Trump because he didn't blast Vladimir Putin. I don't quite understand that.

Just remember that during World War II, Josef Stalin had killed 20 million of his own people. He had invaded free Poland, along with Nazi Germany. He had attacked free Finland in 1939 and '40 and then annexed 10 % of it. He had helped Germany from Sept. 1, 1939, to June 22, 1941. He was our enemy. And then suddenly, and only when Germany turned on him, did he come to us. And we accepted that alliance on the principle that he was useful. And we gave billions of dollars in aid. Thirty percent of the wherewithal of Stalin came from the British Empire or the United States government.

So, you know, President Franklin D. Roosevelt met with him at Yalta. He even called him "Uncle Joe." This was a man who killed 20 million of his own people.

In 1972, President Richard Nixon went to China, and he tried to have a reboot of the strategic global order and play off Russia against China to the self-interest of the United States. But the point was, he sat down with the greatest mass murderer in history, Mao Zedong, who was responsible for 70 million people dead.

Was Donald Trump not to meet with Putin? Or was he to employ the vocabulary of [4]President Joe Biden? “You’re a murderer. You’re a thug. You’re a criminal,” as Biden said of him. “And we’re gonna do whatever it takes.” Does he have support for that? For an unlimited blank check to Ukraine? No. So, he’s trying to get along with a killer in a way that past presidents have reached out to mass murderers.

The other thing is, very quickly, while there are the contours of a peace settlement, Donald Trump is not responsible for this war. He’s the most powerful man in the world. He wants to help Ukraine get a just settlement. He is working with the Europeans. He’s beefed up NATO. But remember this, in the last four administrations, Putin has invaded Georgia under President George Bush, they invaded Crimea and Donbas under President Barack Obama, they tried to take Kyiv under Biden. It didn’t go anywhere under Donald Trump.

Donald Trump was not the author of the failed “reset.” Remember the 2009 Geneva debacle, where Hillary Clinton pushed that “reset button” and we were supposed to be friendly with Russia. And basically, what we did is we said, “You should be democratic. You gotta be Western. You’re gonna have to have a liberalizing ... ” Well, they didn’t back it up. So, they were loud but carried a twig, rather than spoke softly with a club.

Donald Trump had nothing to do with American diplomat Victoria Nuland and all of that earlier effort to put Ukraine in [5]NATO and to interfere in the government of Ukraine. He had nothing to do with that. His children, he, none of them went over to Ukraine and tried to shake down the Ukrainian government to pour money into a presidential family, and then, as Joe Biden did, went over there and fired the prosecutor on threats. And he used our money to threaten the Ukrainians. He has no history of that.

He sent offensive weapons to Ukraine that Biden had embargoed. He was pretty tough on the Russians, in a way Biden never was. He said, “Don’t do the Nord Stream 2 pipeline, Germany. Don’t do it.” He killed a lot of the Wagner Group. He got out of an asymmetrical missile deal. But he had no fingerprints on the Ukrainian war.

He didn’t say, as Joe Biden did, when he came into office, “Our reaction as America will be contingent on whether it’s a minor invasion.” Think of that. That was a green light to Putin, as was his suspension of offensive military arms to Ukraine.

So, what am I getting at? The summit was about what we could expect. Putin wants to win over America so that America will back off from Ukraine, and so it can get some more mileage westward and further deteriorate or erode or detract the Ukrainian military. The Ukrainian military is pretty tough. It's hanging in there. It wants enough aid to leverage Putin. And between those two poles, there will be a DMZ.

And if there is a peace settlement, it will be the work—whether the Left likes it or not—of Donald Trump, the one world leader, among the three, that has nothing to do with this war. Didn't start on his watch. It wasn't a result of his policies. And it surely was not his responsibility that Vladimir Putin found himself inside Ukraine and threatening to destroy the independence of the Ukrainian people. That was not Donald Trump's doing, but it may well be his doing to stop it.

2.8.8 Who Has Been Busy Destroying Democracy? (2025-08-18 22:01)

Destroying democracy”—the latest theme of the Left—can be defined in many different ways.

How about attempting to destroy constitutional, ancient, and hallowed institutions simply to suit short-term political gains?

So, who in 2020, and now once again, has boasted about packing the 156-year-old, nine-justice Supreme Court?

Who talks frequently about destroying the 187-year-old [1]Senate filibuster—though only when they hold a Senate majority?

Who wants to bring in an insolvent left-wing Puerto Rico and redefine the 235-year-old [2]District of Columbia—by altering the Constitution—as two new states solely to obtain four additional liberal senators?

Who is trying to destroy the constitutionally mandated 235-year [3]Electoral College by circumventing it with the surrogate National Popular Vote Interstate Compact?

Does destroying democracy also entail weaponizing federal bureaucracies, turning them into rogue partisan arms of a president?

So, who ordered the CIA to concoct bogus [4]charges of “collusion” to sabotage Donald Trump’s 2016 campaign, the 2016-2017 transition, and the first 22 months of Trump’s first term?

Who prompted a cabal of “51 former intelligence officials” to lie to the American people on the eve of the last debate of the 2020 election that the [5]FBI-authenticated Hunter Biden laptop was instead the work of a “Russian intelligence operation?”

Who ordered the FBI to connive and partner with social media conglomerates to censor accurate news deemed unhelpful to the [6]2020 Biden campaign?

Who pulled off the greatest presidential coup in history by using surrogates in the shadows to run the cognitively debilitated Biden presidency, then by fiat canceled his reelection effort, and finally anointed as his replacement the new [7]nominee Kamala Harris, who had never won a single primary delegate?

Who ordered FBI SWAT teams to invade the home of a former president because of a classification dispute over 102 files out of some 13,000 stored there?

Who tried to remove an ex-president and leader of his party from [8]at least 25 state ballots to deprive millions of Americans of the opportunity to vote for or against him?

Who coordinated four local, state, and federal prosecutors to destroy a former and future president by charging him with fantasy crimes that were never before, and will never again be, lodged against anyone else?

Who appointed a federal prosecutor to go after the ex-president, who arranged for a high-ranking Justice Department official to step down to join a New York prosecutor’s efforts to destroy an ex-president, and who met in the White House with a Georgia county prosecutor seeking to destroy an ex-president—all on the same day—a mere 72 hours after Trump announced his 2024 reelection bid?

Who but the current Democrats ever impeached a president twice?

Has any party ever tried an ex-president in the Senate when he was out of office and a mere private citizen?

When have there ever been two near-miss [9]assassination attempts on a major party presidential candidate during a single presidential campaign?

Who [10]destroyed the southern border and broke federal law to allow in, without criminal or health background audits, some 10-12 million illegal aliens?

Who created 600 “sanctuary jurisdictions” for the sole purpose of nullifying federal immigration law, in the eerie spirit of the renegade old Confederacy?

Who allowed tens of thousands of rioters, arsonists, and violent protesters over four months in 2020 to destroy over $2 billion in property, kill some 35 people, injure 1,500 police officers, and torch a federal courthouse, a police precinct, and a historic church—all with de facto legal impunity?

How do the purported destroyers of democracy find themselves winning 60-70 % approval on most of the key issues of our times, while the supposed saviors of democracy are on the losing side of popular opinion?

How does a president “destroy democracy” by [11]his party winning the White House by both the popular and Electoral College vote, winning majorities in both the Senate and House by popular votes, and enjoying a 6-3 edge in the Supreme Court through judges appointed by popularly elected presidents?

So, what is behind these absurd charges?

Three catalysts: One, the new [12]anguished elitist Democratic Party alienated the middle classes through its Jacobin agenda and therefore lost the Congress, the presidency, and the Supreme Court, and now has no federal political power.

1298

Two, the Democratic Party is polling at record lows and yet remains hell-bent on alienating the traditional sources of its power—minorities, youth, and independents.

Three, Democrats cannot find any issues that the people support, nor any leaders to convince the people to embrace them.

So, it is no surprise that the panicked Democrats bark at the shadows—given that they know their revolutionary, neo-socialist agenda is destroying them. And yet, like all addicts, they choose destruction over abandoning their self-destructive fixations.

2.8.9 The Real Issue With a University President's Comments on Eliminating Whiteness (2025-08-18 22:02)

. Recently, [1]we discussed Dr. Luke Wood, the president of California State University of Sacramento, and a video that has been recently circulating in which he says he plans to “eliminate whiteness.” And there was a discussion whether whiteness is separate from or synonymous with being white.

And I suggested to you that this was a very deleterious and stupid thing to say, and it was divisive in a multiracial democracy. In other words, it's like saying that your image in the mirror, you can destroy that. But it has nothing to do with you, the real person who is projecting that image. In other words, that's just a reflection of who you are.

Whiteness, according to his logic, would be a reflection of people who are white. And he couldn't explain that when asked to.

But he and his university were upset that there were things that I said to you that he thought were factually incorrect—three or four of them. I'd like to go through them. And because I talk to you without notes and I don't read a script, I want to make sure that everything I say is accurate and factual.

So, let's review what California State University of Sacramento has sent to The Daily Signal and me to ask for a correction.

The first thing they said is, "California State University, Sacramento, also known as Sacramento State, is the only public university in the world's fourth-largest economy. It is not in the same city as UC Davis."

Two problems with that. I never said it was in the same city as UC Davis. I am a fifth-generation Californian. I can assure you, I know that UC Davis is in Davis, and Sacramento State, if I could use that term for CSU Sacramento, is in Sacramento. What I said was that it is "near" UC Davis. I think the adverb and adjective "near" is pretty accurate for UC Davis' relationship with California State University of Sacramento. They're only 20 miles apart.

But this is even more disturbing, when he said, "California State University of Sacramento, also known as Sacramento State, is the only public university in the world's fourth-largest economy."

There are 23 CSU universities. In other words, there's 22 state colleges other than Sacramento State. And there's nine Universities of California that are public universities. Sacramento State, in other words, is not "the only public university in the world's fourth-largest economy."

Maybe he meant it's the only public university in Sacramento, that is the capital of the fourth-largest economy. But that's not what he wrote. And that is not a correction of what I said.

He said, “Dr. Luke Wood has been president of Sacramento State since July 2023.”

I said, in fact, “about a year.” I’m not sure that “about a year” is that off from two years. It could be about a year. It could mean over a year. But I don’t think that’s a serious mistake.

The third is, he said, “Dr. Hanson said that Wood was at UC San Diego, when in fact he was at San Diego State.”

I confess that I confused San Diego State University and the University of California at San Diego. And I want to make that correction.

And finally, “Wood coined the term ‘racelighting,’ not ‘blacklighting.’”

I used the term “blacklighting.”

“The interview referenced in your video is several years old as well. Wood has since addressed the heavily edited clip on his X account. You can read his comment here.”

Two things. That’s a distinction without a difference. If you label something he is saying, when he’s talking about getting rid of whiteness and he says that he has developed or has embraced a theory called “racelighting” and I term that “blacklighting,” I’m sorry I didn’t use the specific term, but essentially, it’s the same.

He’s suggesting that people adopt a particular vocabulary, syntax, and messaging tailored only to black people, so that they don’t feel harmed or second-guessed. Or, in other words, they deserve a special discourse that’s not accorded to other minority groups or white people.

And he’s upset that he said that he co-founded racelighting and not founded it, as I said. Again, another distinction without a difference.

He seems to be upset that he gave an interview, he says, in 2017, and then it has been reposted, to which I replied on July 29, 2025. I didn’t say that this was dated in 2017. I was replying to a recently appearing video. And that's exactly what it was.

Apparently, Dr. Luke Wood—I think his full name is Jonathan Wood. Jonathan Luke Wood is upset because he gave an interview in which—and it was not sliced and diced. There's a long segment of 30 seconds or so. And you can see it, that segment has not been edited, when he says he wants to “eliminate whiteness.”

The problem is that he's on record saying it. It resurfaced. People saw it. And it spread like wildfire over the internet. Hence, my attention to it and my discourse to you about it.

But I can't help it if Dr. Wood has said things in his past that seem to be racist and divisive, and that now he is a president of a major California State University campus that's multiracial, and he has a responsibility to all different groups to be disinterested and treat people as people, in which race is incidental, not essential to whom they are.

And yet, nevertheless, he suggests that he's not responsible, I guess, for saying what he did because he said it in 2017 and it's been reappearing, most recently, in clips. He hasn't challenged that he didn't say it. He's addressed that he thinks he could have added context to it. But nevertheless, he said it.

And nevertheless, I think that it's really dangerous to have a president of a major public university in [2]California—in which, again, we are a multiracial society—to engage in such racially divisive language, whether he said it in 2017 or he said it today, or whether he said it on July 29.

What he needs to say is, “I don't believe that I'm going to eliminate whiteness. I don't have any particular grievance about white people or the projection of their culture, if I think that is what it is.”

In other words, Dr. Wood, I suggest you just calm down and instead of trying to attack people who represent your views fairly—and by the way, the corrections here had mistakes as well. So, it is hard to offer a correction for a correction that's false.

But I think it would be far wiser of you to just say, “I spoke out of turn. I do not want to eliminate whiteness. Whiteness is a vague term that I will not use anymore. It's polarizing and it has no place on a campus in California, much less coming from a president of that campus.”

2.8.10 Could Trump End War in Ukraine During Meeting With Putin? (2025-08-18 22:04)

This week there's a scheduled summit between [1]Russian President Vladimir Putin and President Donald Trump, and it's scheduled to be held in Anchorage, Alaska.

Apparently, this was a place that offered a great deal of security. It's a smaller, controllable city. It's in the United States, but on the other hand, it's one of the closest places, major cities, to Russia itself from the United States.

We don't have a very good history of summits. And many summits—as you remember, in March of 2017, Antony Blinken, the Biden secretary of state, and Jake Sullivan, the national security adviser, met with their Chinese communist counterparts. And they were dressed down and humiliated and really didn't say anything. And what followed then from that was further Chinese aggression toward Taiwan, the Chinese balloon, etc. So these summits are very important.

One thing that we're not hearing from the Left and the Never-Trump Right is that [2]Donald Trump is a "Putin asset," a "Putin puppet." I'm quoting pretty loosely, but accurately, what former National Intelligence Director James Clapper and former CIA Director John Brennan have been saying for 10 years on social media and on cable news.

And the reason they're not saying that Donald Trump is a Putin puppet and going to be had is that he gave Putin an "Art of the Deal" leeway when he first came into office and he doubled down on [3]Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy. He basically was saying, "Putin, see, I'm giving you an opportunity." Putin did not take it. Donald Trump pivoted and found out that he had to use leverage against Putin.

And the leverage he's going to use, or has threatened to use, is far more deleterious to Russia and far more dangerous and far more ambitious than anything imagined by former [4]President Joe Biden, namely, a secondary boycott. That would be to not trade with countries that trade with Russia. That could include the two largest countries in the world, India and China.

India had very close relations with us. We were trying to triangulate India against China. They have their own border disputes and long-standing disagreements. But if we secondary boycott India, that will be a rumination of our relations with India. So, what I'm getting at is Donald Trump's taking a lot of risk, a lot of risk in using a secondary boycott to pressure Putin.

Ninety percent of the issues are already solved. They have been for a year or two. We're now in a deadlock. Russia claims they've only lost 200,000 dead. But they more likely lost a million dead, wounded, missing, taken prisoner. We don't know the exact ratios of each. And probably Ukraine with their dead, missing, wounded, prisoners around, I don't know, 400,000 or 500,000. So this is like a Stalingrad or a Somme or a Verdun.

We know the general parameters. We've discussed them before. Ukraine will not be in [5]NATO. That's a concession to Putin. But it really isn't a concession because, privately, a lot of the NATO members did not want Ukraine because they had no intention of going all the way to the Donbas, should Russia invade again, on Article 5 of the NATO doctrine. They were not going to follow that. So they don't want Ukraine in NATO. Neither do we. I'm not sure Ukraine even does, privately.

Secondly, there was no military ability. There's a moral argument for, but no military ability, to take back Crimea and take back the Donbas.

So what we're discussing now is that the Russian army is about a hundred miles west from the border in Crimea, the Donbas, and then further west. In total, about a hundred miles. That would be the DMZ—in other words, the Demilitarized Zone, where we have a ceasefire, an armistice. And then we would haggle in a peace conference over exchanges of territory on either side. That's the outline of peace.

The problem is that—there's two problems. One: Ukraine's Constitution says no land—no land, not Crimea, not Donbas—nothing can be ceded to a foreign country without a plebiscite. And we don't know what the Ukrainian people will say. They polled they're tired of the war. They polled they don't want to give one inch of their sovereign territory.

On the other side, Putin himself knows that he has to report to the oligarchic and military hierarchy. And he doesn't know whether a hundred miles west, in addition to institutionalizing the possession of Crimea and the Donbas for good, whether that extra hundred miles from the border territory will justify the enormous losses, humiliation that the Russian military has suffered.

So, we're gonna have this summit. And Trump is going to say to Putin, "You can have no NATO Ukraine. You can have the Crimea. You can have the Donbas. I think I can get Zelenskyy and the Ukrainian people to agree. But we've gotta fight over how far west you are and whether you have to go back or will stay in place."

And then he's going to have to tell Zelenskyy, "We're supplying you. That's the only leverage we have against Putin, along with a secondary boycott. But you have to decide whether you're going to cede the Donbas, Crimea, and some of the territory. Because if you don't, there's not going to be peace. And if there's not going to be peace, we can't assure you a blank check forever."

So, that's what the parameters are.

And one thing that we do know, the Never-Trump Right, as I said, and the Left have ceased the "Donald Trump is a puppet," "Donald Trump is a sellout," "Donald Trump is a Russian asset" because nobody in the last four years, in the Biden administration, has met with the Russians and especially the last three years since the war started. Nobody made the attempt.

So, at least we have the principles: talking to each other, we know what the outlines of a peace agreement are. And it's just a matter of what each president has to take back to the powers that be and see if they've given too many or not enough concessions.

2.8.11 Trump's Counterrevolution Is Succeeding Beyond Expectations (2025-08-18 22:13)

We're watching the greatest counterrevolution in some 90 years. We have not seen any president try to radically change the political calculus and the nature of government since Franklin D. Roosevelt did it, from the Left, during the New Deal of the mid-1930s.

And what do I mean by that? [1]President Donald Trump closed the border. Nobody thought he could. He closed it. He has now deported over 100,000 criminal illegal aliens and 1 million have self-deported, of all statuses, who were here illegally.

He's basically declared war on DEI. And he's winning that argument. He has barred biological males from competing in [2]women's sports. He has full public support for doing that and he's making enormous inroads.

The universities are rushing and competing with each other to cut a deal with Donald Trump, and to agree to not gouge the federal government on federal grants through their surcharges of way over 40 % or 50 %; to follow civil rights legislation, the Supreme Court, and not discriminate by race or gender, as they do in admissions, hiring, promotion, tenure; and to be disinterested and be fair and follow, as I said, free speech canons in the Bill of Rights on campus.

What am I getting at? Donald Trump is winning on all of these social and cultural issues.

Abroad, we see that Iran no longer poses a nuclear threat for the immediate future; that Israel's enemies—whether Hezbollah or Hamas or Houthis—are in disarray or severely attrited; Iran is no longer a threat to the Gulf states or Israel, at least for the immediate future; and we see some progress with Ukrainian war.

People are angry about this counterrevolution for two reasons: It's succeeding and it's succeeding beyond anybody's wild expectation.

Naysayers, The Wall Street Journal news page said we would be in a recession now, [3]the tariffs would cause a trade war, and we would see the stock market collapse. The opposite has happened: $15 trillion of foreign investment promised and $300 billion in tariff revenue anticipated.

We don't know the eventual effects of these new tariffs, but for now, all of our economists who predicted gloom and doom were wrong. All of our cultural critics who said the universities would be destroyed by Donald Trump, that he would arrest innocent people who just happened to forget to get a visa, and he wouldn't go after criminals—they are wrong too.

So, people are angry about this counterrevolution because it's working. But there's another reason why they're angry. He's not addressing the symptoms, as he did in the first administration.

He doesn't have people around him, as he did in the first administration—a Rex Tillerson; a Bill Barr, a good man, but Bill Barr was not on the MAGA agenda; Jim Mattis; people like “anonymous” Omarosa Manigault Newman—all of these people who thought that they knew better than Donald Trump and they would either stop what he was trying to do or reinterpret what he was trying to do.

In other words, he has a team that is devoted to his counterrevolution, and more importantly, to the symptoms of the progressive project.

The symptoms of the progressive project are not just the Democrats exercising power in Congress or holding the White House, it's how they get that power.

And they get that power through PBS and NPR, now defunded; cable news and slanted network news, now under assault when they lie and defame and face court ramifications; the universities that indoctrinate people, now facing large fines, tax on their endowments, a renewed way of a new government attention toward student loans, $1.7 trillion program surcharges, as I said, and segregation on campus in dorms, graduation ceremonies. The universities are now under scrutiny. We're seeing the Department of Education itself being questioned.

And I mentioned before, in addition to education and [4]the media, Donald Trump is attacking the very idea that residency is synonymous with citizenship. That if you came here illegally, if you reside illegally, then you are eventually going to face a deportation—even if you have not been a violent criminal, and even if you haven't been served with deportation papers.

So, what he is trying to do is tell the American people that the Left exercises power, even when they do not control government, any branch of government. And they exercise power, even though on most of the issues, if not all of them, their constituency is only 40 %. The majority of the American people oppose their agenda.

And they do this through the bureaucracies, through the media, through the universities, through the popular culture. And these are the very sources that Donald Trump is asking them to reform. And the government is going to shrink. The government's gonna get out of the media business. The government's gonna take a hard look at universities who want and obtain federal funds.

And we're going to see the counterrevolution, I think, succeed, with one caveat. We're going to see in the next year a frenzy, a frantic, almost out-of-mind reaction from [5]the Left because they know that if this counterrevolution succeeds, it'll be very difficult for them to push down an unpopular agenda down the throats of the American people.

So, brace yourself. We're looking at the resistance coming up to the counterrevolution, and it's going to be fierce and unhinged.

2.8.12 Trump, Putin, and the Future of Ukraine's War (2025-08-22 02:39)

President Donald Trump met [1]Russian President Vladimir Putin last week for the much-anticipated summit, I guess we would call it, in Anchorage, Alaska.

Remember the last time American diplomats of a high ranking—Jake Sullivan and Antony Blinken, the respective secretary of state and national security adviser to the Biden administration—met with the Chinese, they were humiliated and nothing came of it.

Trump thought he could get a ceasefire. After three hours, both Trump and Putin came out to give statements to the press. There was no question-and-answer.

Putin gave a long harangue. How would you characterize it? It was mostly a recital of Russian grievances and the need to be friendlier to America. It was an outreach, not to [2]Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy or Ukraine or Europe, but to America.

And it was in line with Russian strategy that they think Donald Trump is a strong leader, but also, he is more forgiving, or at least more malleable, about seeking a peace settlement rather than the “whatever it takes” attitude of the Biden administration. And he also believes that the Europeans are tired—after three and a half years—that Ukraine is exhausted. And so, he can appeal to Donald Trump to put an end to it on Russian terms.

What are the terms? Well, Trump didn't outline them in his portion of the post-summit report to the media and to the world. He wasn't depressed. He didn't say we should have had a ceasefire. He just said that there were a lot of elements that were, more or less, concluded successfully between Putin and Trump. But more importantly, for the big sticking points, he would have to talk to the Europeans, as was noted and necessary, and President Zelenskyy.

And we know what the outlines are, don't we? We've talked about them. Ukraine will not be in NATO. They don't have the military wherewithal. They have the moral edge and the moral right—but they don't have the military wherewithal. Nor does Europe or the United States want to go to that length to give it to them against nuclear Russia to reclaim the Donbas—all of the Donbas—or Crimea.

So, what the sticking point is, right now, these two armies are locked inside the Donbas. Basically, 50 to 100 miles on an undulating line from the Russian borders. And there could be a DMZ, like the one in Korea, and then that could be the basis for a permanent border. But the problem is that Putin has not got the entire Donbas and the regions around it. And the Ukrainians are stiffening.

Both sides are worn out. There's been a million and a half casualties that are wounded, dead, missing, captive. But Russia has greater reserves than does Ukraine. So, there's a desire on both sides to have an armistice.

The sticking points is that the Constitution does not allow Zelenskyy without an assent from his parliament to give away land to a foreign interloper. And Putin does not think, at this point, he has ground down the Ukrainians enough or acquired enough of their eastern territory to justify the full hearty invasion that's cost probably a million Russians.

But here's what I want to get to, very quickly. There's a lot of criticism of [3]Donald Trump because he didn't blast Vladimir Putin. I don't quite understand that.

Just remember that during World War II, Josef Stalin had killed 20 million of his own people. He had invaded free Poland, along with Nazi Germany. He had attacked free Finland in 1939 and '40 and then annexed 10 % of it. He had helped Germany from Sept. 1, 1939, to June 22, 1941. He was our enemy. And then suddenly, and only when Germany turned on him, did he come to us. And we accepted that alliance on the principle that he was useful. And we gave billions of dollars in aid. Thirty percent of the wherewithal of Stalin came from the British Empire or the United States government.

So, you know, President Franklin D. Roosevelt met with him at Yalta. He even called him “Uncle Joe.” This was a man who killed 20 million of his own people.

In 1972, President Richard Nixon went to China, and he tried to have a reboot of the strategic global order and play off Russia against China to the self-interest of the United States. But the point was, he sat down with the greatest mass murderer in history, Mao Zedong, who was responsible for 70 million people dead.

Was Donald Trump not to meet with Putin? Or was he to employ the vocabulary of [4]President Joe Biden? “You’re a murderer. You’re a thug. You’re a criminal,” as Biden said of him. “And we’re gonna do whatever it takes.” Does he have support for that? For an unlimited blank check to Ukraine? No. So, he’s trying to get along with a killer in a way that past presidents have reached out to mass murderers.

The other thing is, very quickly, while there are the contours of a peace settlement, Donald Trump is not responsible for this war. He’s the most powerful man in the world. He wants to help Ukraine get a just settlement. He is working with the Europeans. He’s beefed up NATO. But remember this, in the last four administrations, Putin has invaded Georgia under President George Bush, they invaded Crimea and Donbas under President Barack Obama, they tried to take Kyiv under Biden. It didn’t go anywhere under Donald Trump.

Donald Trump was not the author of the failed “reset.” Remember the 2009 Geneva debacle, where Hillary Clinton pushed that “reset button” and we were supposed to be friendly with Russia. And basically, what we did is we said, “You should be democratic. You gotta be Western. You’re gonna have to have a liberalizing ... ” Well, they didn’t back it up. So, they were loud but carried a twig, rather than spoke softly with a club.

Donald Trump had nothing to do with American diplomat Victoria Nuland and all of that earlier effort to put Ukraine in [5]NATO and to interfere in the government of Ukraine. He had nothing to do with that. His children, he, none of them went over to Ukraine and tried to shake down the Ukrainian government to pour money into a presidential family, and then, as Joe Biden did, went over there and fired the prosecutor on threats. And he used our money to threaten the Ukrainians. He has no history of that.

He sent offensive weapons to Ukraine that Biden had embargoed. He was pretty tough on the Russians, in a way Biden never was. He said, “Don’t do the Nord Stream 2 pipeline, Germany. Don’t do it.” He killed a lot of the Wagner Group. He got out of an asymmetrical missile deal. But he had no fingerprints on the Ukrainian war.

He didn't say, as Joe Biden did, when he came into office, "Our reaction as America will be contingent on whether it's a minor invasion." Think of that. That was a green light to Putin, as was his suspension of offensive military arms to Ukraine.

So, what am I getting at? The summit was about what we could expect. Putin wants to win over America so that America will back off from Ukraine, and so it can get some more mileage westward and further deteriorate or erode or detract the Ukrainian military. The Ukrainian military is pretty tough. It's hanging in there. It wants enough aid to leverage Putin. And between those two poles, there will be a DMZ.

And if there is a peace settlement, it will be the work—whether the Left likes it or not—of Donald Trump, the one world leader, among the three, that has nothing to do with this war. Didn't start on his watch. It wasn't a result of his policies. And it surely was not his responsibility that Vladimir Putin found himself inside Ukraine and threatening to destroy the independence of the Ukrainian people. That was not Donald Trump's doing, but it may well be his doing to stop it.

2.8.13 Gavin Newsom's $250M Redistricting Power Grab (2025-08-22 02:41)

[1]California has been in the news recently because it's going to have an unusual redistricting effort. That means we're going to redraw the maps of our 52 congressional seats.

And we're gonna do that, according to our governor, because Texas has been doing that. And [2]California Gov. Gavin Newsom is running for president in 2028, so he wants to show that he is on the cutting edge of Democratic opposition to Texas.

But there's a problem. Texas doesn't have an independent commission—not that they're really independent, but in theory, they are. They just gerrymander. And Texas has an underrepresentation of Republicans in congressional seats.

What I mean by that, if you look at the aggregate vote in Texas for the president or for senators or for the state Legislature, and you get an aggregate Republican versus Democrat vote, and then you see how many seats they have and does that percentage represent it? The majority—no, it doesn't in Texas.

In fact, most red states, if the 50 states are ranked 1 to 50, do the number of congressional seats in this state represent the Republican or Democratic aggregate overall vote, as adjudicated by either state legislature races or statewide races, or the presidency or the senators? You can use different formulas, but they're pretty much the same, that red states do not—not that they don't gerrymander, but they don't gerrymander as effectively. So, that's why [3]Texas is taking this action, to get parity.

But what Gavin Newsom is doing is very strange. He is undermining an independent commission. It's been dominated by the Left, but he doesn't even trust it. He's not calling it back into session, necessarily. He's calling a special session with a predetermined map created by [4]Democrats to redistrict.

And here's the problem. California, like most blue states, such as Massachusetts or Illinois, New York, they are already heavily weighed toward Democrats. Here in California, depending on what formula we use, about 38 % to 40 % of the state typically vote for a Republican ticket—state or federal. And yet, if you look at their nine congressional seats, that's about 17 %. So, they're 20 % to 22 % underrepresented.

So, what Gavin Newsom is saying—"I'm gonna spend $250 million. And I'm gonna rush through the Legislature—dominated with supermajorities from my party—a bill to turn a proposition over to the people so they will vote to suspend this already [5]gerrymandered plan and get a hyper one so that we are going to go from 17 % of our congressional districts, probably down to about 8 %. And we will have 8 %, even though the state votes 38 % to 40 % Republican."

So, the problem is he's, A, challenging an independent commission that he used to praise; B, he's taken overrepresented Democratic congressional districts and he's trying to, even more, overrepresent them.

And he's trusting that the people will not mind spending a quarter of a billion dollars to have this rushed election before the next year's November, and then they will vote for it, and this will show that he is a fighter and on the cusp. But the national mood is against him because, as I said, most of the red states are underrepresented through gerrymandering, and most of the blue states are overrepresented.

What Gavin wants to do is, he's targeting Republican congresswomen and congressmen. And he thinks that he can redraw the districts and put two Republican incumbents in the same district. And then, one will either drop out or they'll have to run against each other, and one will win, and they will be diminished by half. He doesn't care about the 40 % of his own state that won't have any congressional representation. That's not in his plan.

This is all the act of commission. But what is Gavin doing about the state? We've had 12 million people leave the state the last 10 years—12 million. These were people not on public assistance. These are the entrepreneurial upper-middle class. They've gone.

We have the highest electric rates in the country, over 35 cents a kilowatt-hour. We're the highest except for Hawaii. We have the highest gas prices. And now we have this carbon fuel formula and this new inflation-adjusted gas tax. So, we're gonna have the highest gas taxes and the highest actual price of gasoline. And together they're going to go up to maybe $6 a gallon. But that's not the end.

He has driven out—through hyper-regulation and bullying and berating oil refineries, we're gonna drive two main ones out and we're not gonna have very many left. And if that should happen, gas could go up to $7 or $8 a gallon.

Is he talking about Pacific Palisades? It essentially hasn't been rebuilt, it's completely in cinders. Why? Because of California regulations, environmental, social, equity, DEI—you name it. No zoning going on. A big fight that they want to take this beautiful Pacific Palisades historic neighborhood and have high-density, low-income housing in many areas, etc., etc.

Bottom line: Here is Gavin Newsom using four-letter words, expletives, boasting that he is going to attack [6]President Donald Trump by spending a quarter-billion dollars to even make the notorious California congressional election map even more unfair as a reply to Texas, which is not—it's not fair now. They may be doing something extraordinary, but they're trying to get their congressional districts to reflect their party breakdown in their state.

And Gavin is doing this while he won't address gas, he won't address the flight of people, he won't address the highest taxes in the nation, aggregate, he won't address electricity prices.

And I just drove about 200 miles home today. I can tell you that if you get on the California freeways, such as they are, it's taking your life in your own hands. They have been unchanged, essentially, since the 1970s, when the population was not 41 million, but about 17 million. So, the population has doubled and the infrastructure is the same.

And Gavin Newsom is doing what? He's doing another performance art, wiggling his head, saying the F-word, the S-word, trying to dare Trump to stop him. All in performance art for his next presidential run.

Final observation: What he's counting on is nobody looks at the price of electricity, the price of food, the price of housing, the price of gas, on the infrastructure, crime rate, etc. in California because he, more than any other Californian, as a Bay Area city council person, as a San Francisco mayor, as a lieutenant governor, and as a governor, has ruined the state. He took a natural paradise and he turned it into purgatory.

2.8.14 What the Left Gets Wrong About Trump-Putin Summit (2025-08-22 02:44)

Last week, President Donald Trump completed his summit with [1]Russian President Vladimir Putin in Alaska. They both gave, as I said earlier, brief statements for the press. No questions.

And then that meeting was met with a storm of criticism from the Left, from senators, congressman, and pundits. They said that he'd given in too much for Putin, Putin had dominated him, Putin was gonna do this to him and that. They kind of forgot the idea that Putin came to the United States soil, not vice versa.

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt met with Josef Stalin, called him "Uncle Joe," the greatest mass murderer in Russian history. President Richard Nixon met with Mao Zedong, who is the greatest mass murderer in all of history and civilization.

But in any case, within, I don't know, 48 hours, he had arranged for the major heads of state of Europe to fly all the way—without much notice—to meet with him, along with [2]Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy. And they all were on the same page. They were all very complimentary. And they were, basically, sending a message to the world that a million and a half people have been dead, wounded, captured, missing on our European doorstep. And no one has an answer. And yet the Left still was angry about this.

And so, it begs the question, do you have any collective memory? The Ukraine war started when Vladimir Putin invaded the Crimea and Donbas under the presidency of Barack Obama. Remember the hot mic in Seoul, where he said, "Tell Vladimir that if he gives me space for my last election, I'll be flexible on missile defense"? Do you remember that? He also invaded, as you remember, in President Joe Biden's tenure. He tried to take Kyiv. He didn't during Donald Trump's four years.

So, I don't know what they want. What does [3]the Left want when they're so critical of this rapprochement between Europe and the United States, and a collective front against Putin?

What do they want? Do they want more of the Biden policy? Just give them enough to keep fighting and dying with no end in sight? With no plan, either, for strategic victory or for a settlement or a negotiation. Do they have any compassion that—a million more? Do they want another three years of this Stalingrad?

So, they offer no constructive suggestions. No shadow government is saying, "This is what we would do." This applies beyond, by the way, the Ukrainian war. It applies to illegal immigration, crime, and the tariffs. Just give us a constructive alternative. But instead, they don't.

There was a point in this European delegation that met with [4]Donald Trump where the president of Finland, Alexander Stubb, made a statement. And it was nonrecognized at the time, but it was very astute.

And he said, "I'm from a very small country. And we have an 800-mile-long border with Russia. And we were invaded by Russia." He was referring to the Winter War of November 1939 that lasted until 1940. And what he was saying is, "We managed to survive by negotiations and deterrence. A mixture of the two."

The message he was giving to Zelenskyy and the Europeans was his own country's story. After Josef Stalin did what Vladimir Putin did and says, "I'm going to take over Finland," and he invaded, the Finns, who were outnumbered 20-to-1, they put up a heroic defense. They probably inflicted half a million Russian casualties. They fought without parallel for November, December of '39, January, February. And finally, they were slowly being ground down.

So then, the president of Finland said to Josef Stalin, “I will cut a deal with you. You can take and annex 10 % of my country, but that’s it. We will fight you to the death if you try to take any more. We will lose, but we will inflict so much damage that you will be weakened with your partnership with Germany that might not last.”

And so, they did cut a deal.

What was the result? There was an independent Finland. It agreed not to join, in further years, the enemies of Russia and not to be an ally of [5]Russia. It was like Austria or Switzerland. It retained 90 % of its territory. Was it appeasing? No. It fought tooth and nail to get that deal. And it stopped Stalin from absorbing all of Finland.

So, President Stubb—who was a close friend of Donald Trump—said to this delegation, “We’ve found a solution.” And what he was really signaling to Mr. Zelenskyy is, if you can give up 10 % to 15 % of this disputed land that you have with Putin, however unjust it is, however unfair, however tyrannical Putin is, and then pledge to be a neutral country, with help from the West to deter further aggression, you can cut a deal and save your country.

And yet, given those negotiations, the Left was not sympathetic. And so, all I’m asking them is, please give us an alternative strategy. How long do you wanna fight? Who is gonna fight? How many deaths, wounded are you willing to incur to push Vladimir Putin all the way back to where he was prior to the invasion of 2014, when Barack Obama allowed him to come in? Just a question.

Otherwise, I think you should take the advice of Alexander Stubb, the president of Finland, who offers a valuable lesson in how to deal with Russian aggression against a smaller power.

2.8.15 California's Illegal Alien Sanctuary Policies Have a Body Count (2025-08-22 02:46)

over the last 20 years, I've noticed that it is not just that the [1]California infrastructure has gotten much worse as the population has incrementally increased to 41 million people.

We have an infrastructure of the 1970s, when we had 20 million people. And now we have twice the number of people driving and the infrastructure is even worse than it was 50 years ago. And we may have somewhere around 100 million cars or 140 million cars, the estimates range, in California register.

But what I'm getting at is this: It's very dangerous now to drive on California freeways. There are either two lanes or three lanes, maximum. And we've had a new trend where truck drivers will get in the middle lane, on a three-lane freeway, and just stay there. And then you have two lanes of solid truck traffic and only one lane—in the left, if it's three lanes—for cars. The truck drivers seem not to be as respectful of traffic as in the past.

I bring this up because an illegal alien, Harjinder Singh from India, crossed over into the United States illegally in 2018. And he was ordered to leave. He ignored that during the [2]Biden administration. He was issued a work permit that was revoked by the Trump administration later when it came in.

But that's controversial, but what is not controversial? Singh, who could not read or speak English, essentially, could only identify one or two traffic signs, for some reason was given a work permit. But more importantly, he was given a California driver's license, even though he was known to be an illegal alien and not proficient in English.

And California thinks that as the home of the most [3]illegal aliens in the country—a state in which 27 % of the people were not born in the United States and it has the largest sanctuary city infrastructure, where they do not comply with Immigration and Customs Enforcement requests to deport criminal illegal aliens—that it's unique and it's self-contained. It's not. People that it grants licenses to or residence to, who are here illegally and are not familiar with traffic laws, they go all over the United States.

So, what happened this past week, Singh was driving a semi-truck in Florida, and for some reason he decided—a major thoroughfare—that he was just going to make a U-turn and cut across the divider and go in the opposite direction, in the middle of fast-moving traffic. And so, the inevitable happened. As he's making this turn, his own camera shows him nonchalantly looking around as a car has no choice but to hit his semi-trailer. And two people were killed instantly. The third died in the hospital.

What was very disturbing was the expression on Singh's face. It was calm. He looked around. It was almost as if, "Oh. I made a U-turn. Somebody hit my truck. I wonder what happened?" He didn't get out and try to help anybody. He stood at the side of the road, finally.

But why was he driving? He was driving because California issued him a license when they knew he was an unlawful resident of the United States and he was not proficient in English, at least enough to be able to read rudimentary traffic signs and signals.

In other words, he killed three people. And he's now charged with vehicular manslaughter because of the lax policy of California.

What I'm getting at is, when I drive, I see a lot of drivers like that. I don't know what their immigration status is. I don't know where they're born. All I know is that there are so many trucks on the California freeway. The infrastructure is so poor and this generation of truck drivers does not abide by the prior courtesies and policies of previous generations of truck drivers. It makes driving in California an experience like "Road Warrior" or "Mad Max." And the trucks dominate, sometimes, all the lanes for periods of time on California freeways. And more importantly, they drive outside of California.

So, [4]California Gov. Gavin Newsom is in a fight with [5]President Donald Trump—back and forth—who issued him a temporary work permit. But I think Gavin Newsom, who champions the cause of unlawful immigrants, is going to lose that argument against Donald Trump, who tries to deport them.

But more importantly, it's beyond controversy. Gavin Newsom's California issued this man a driver's license. This man was not a U.S. citizen. He was not here legally, and he could not read or write English, apparently. And the wages of that, we found out in Florida, were the death of three innocent people. And no remorse. No apologies on the part of California or Gavin Newsom.

Bottom line: California is dangerous to itself, in a myriad of ways, but it's also dangerous to everybody outside of California because its pathologies are not contained within its borders.

2.8.16 Hypocritical Mark Millie (2025-08-25 10:20)

I've read Mao Zedong. I've read, I've read Karl Marx. I've read Lenin. That doesn't make me a communist," Milley said .

What would our military be like if Marines were taught to assess their fellow marines' trustworthiness or capability based on the color of their skin? This week, senior research fellow Dakota Wood talks about how woke policies like critical race theory would destroy the military.

[1]Michelle Cordero: From The Heritage Foundation, I'm Michelle Cordero, and this is Heritage Explains.

General Mark Milley: First of all, on the issue of critical race theory, et cetera, I'll obviously have to get much smarter on whatever the theory is, but I do think it's important, actually, for those of us in uniform to be open-minded and be widely read. The United States Military Academy is a university, and it is important that we train and we understand, and I want to understand white rage, and I'm white.

Cordero: That's General Mark Milley, America's top military officer, defending the teaching of [2]critical race theory to Army cadets at West Point. Milley's remarks come on the heels of Admiral Michael Gilday placing Ibram X Kendi's 2019 book, How to Be an Antiracist, on the Navy's reading list. Here's an exchange between Gilday and Congressman Jim Banks in front of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Congressman Jim Banks: Kendi's book states that capitalism is essentially racist, and Kendi is clear that racism must be eliminated. Yes or no, do you personally consider advocating for the destruction of American capitalism to be extremist?

Admiral Michael Gilday: Here's what I know, Congressman.

Congressman Jim Banks: It's a yes or no question, admiral.

Admiral Michael Gilday: There is racism in the United States Navy.

Congressman Jim Banks: Admiral, you recommended every sailor in the United States Navy read this book. It's a yes or no question.

Admiral Michael Gilday: I'm not forcing anybody to read the book. It's on a recommended reading list.

Congressman Jim Banks: Admiral, did you read the book?

Admiral Michael Gilday: I did.

Cordero: Critical race theory makes race the prism through which all aspects of American life are viewed. It categorizes individuals into groups of oppressors and victims, and it's a philosophy that's infecting everything from politics to education, the workplace, and now the military. Our guest today says that success in combat depends on cohesion and competence, and that critical race theory would destroy that. What would our military be like if Marines were taught to assess their fellow Marines' trustworthiness or capability based on the color of their skin? Dakota Wood served America for two decades in the United States Marine Corps and is a senior research fellow for defense programs. Our conversation after this short break.

>>> [3]Critical Race Theory Will Destroy Our Military

[4]Dakota Wood: I joined, came out of the Naval academy in 1985, which seems like forever ago. Then, I was commissioned in the Marine Corps. I served 20 years in the Marines from 1985 to 2005. For me, the organizations I was with, the first one was a mixture of men and women. It was a truck unit that you would transport people and gear and supplies and all that stuff. Then, I was reassigned a year later to an infantry battalion, which was all male. Again, that's motor transport, the truck component to an infantry battalion. It gives you exposure to young men and women who have joined the military, in my case the Marine Corps, for a variety of reasons, but they came from all over the country. It's a wonderful introduction, especially a kid from Northeastern Oklahoma at the time, where I went to high school, that there was something bigger than the rural areas. My high school was, the graduating class was 63 people. Right?

Cordero: Wow.

Wood: Yeah, I'm not saying it was completely homogenous, all the same sort of folks, but there was a certain culture with that. Joining the military as young officer, you're just exposed to much bigger things and broader perspectives and different sorts of people.

Cordero: You'd say it's a diverse group of Marines that you served with?

Wood: Oh my goodness, yes, especially in that infantry battalion. Within that group in particular, my maintenance chief, Staff Sergeant probably been in about 12-13 years or so was from American Samoa. You talk about different. I mean, this is a completely different childhood, a different environment, personal habits, speech patterns, all those sorts of things. My operations chief was African-American, he'd come from a completely different part of the world in the United States, as opposed to the south Pacific, different background, different personal history, certainly different skin color, that kind of stuff. The more junior enlisted side, we had kids that had come out of Texas and New Jersey and New York and California. You can imagine the diverse array of musical tastes and what they ate during their lunch break and the humor and the whole bit, but what really brought everybody together regardless of their religious affiliation or their beliefs, their home life, the economic background, they came from their neighborhoods, their own personal experiences in schools. I mean, all of those things, right, which are extraordinarily diverse, is that in joining the military, they all go through the same training.

Wood: They either went through a Marine Corps recruit depot, Parris Island in South Carolina or in San Diego, California, it's either Eastern part of the country or Western part of the country, but it's the same uniform, same kind of drill instructors yelling at you, the same, "Hey, you got to climb the wall or the obstacle course, or fire a rifle at the rifle range a certain way." There were certain standards that had to be met. If you had made it through boot camp or basic training or [inaudible 00:06:07] get assigned to the unit, it's these common shared experiences you're assigned to the same unit. Everybody can either drive the vehicle or they can't. You can perform the maintenance function or you can't. You're cleaning up at the end of the workday or you're getting ready to load up the ship and sail off to Okinawa, Japan, those sorts of things that we did.

>>> [5]VIRTUAL: Policy Pulse: Critical Race Theory in the Military

Wood: In spite of the diverse backgrounds, there was a unifying principle in joining the Marine Corps, meeting standard, getting the job done. If you didn't do that, it didn't matter where you came from or what you looked like, you weren't getting the job done and you were going to be taken to task for that. But this diverse collection of Americans were unified in purpose, in unit, and experiences. I thought it was just a wonderful representation of what America has come to represent, going from small to large, right? The detail kind of tactical example, really representing what America represents to the rest of the world.

Cordero: Isn't it that way by design?

Wood: It is, you're recruited as a new enlisted member, you're taking a particular type of oath, an officer is slightly different wording, but you're pledging allegiance to the constitution of the United States, you're serving the same country. You're there to take orders and do the best you can to keep America safe from enemies abroad, you often work or live in fairly difficult conditions. Certainly, when you deploy to combat there's a lot of hazard that goes along with that, but even in peace time stuff, there's some long work days and the expectations are the same for everyone. Right? You believe in what you're doing, maybe you joined for different reasons, but once you're in this melting pot, this commonly understood and appreciated performance-based organization that expects high output, the standards are very high. If you're meeting those standards, how can you argue with that? Right? Different personalities, but you're all getting the job done.

Wood: Again, it was a unifying sort of thing where you could look to the left or the right, same [inaudible 00:08:23], same uniform, same rank on the collar, corporal and lance corporal, captain, and whatever that might've been, the differences, but everybody had their place in that organization. You're expected to measure up with that. I don't know, in combat you get wounded, what do you care the skin color, the ethnicity, the religious beliefs of the medic, the corpsman who is rendering assistance?

Cordero: I asked you these questions and we're getting to this point, because you wrote that critical race theory would destroy the military, how would it do that?

Wood: By definition, you are focusing via critical race theory on unique characteristics that differentiate people with one from another. As CRT, or critical race theory, has been described in the news for the last couple of months, I guess, if not longer, that there are classes of people that are constantly in competition. Right? That whites are inherently oppressors, that the constitution was constructed in a way that would formalize racial oppression via slavery or whatever that might be, that there are oppressed peoples. In this case, it would be blacks that are perpetually oppressed, but that could also apply to Asians that come in, or Hispanics or Latinos, perhaps more importantly, or maybe it's women versus men. It's this division oppressed and oppressors and that people are in particular positions because of their race. Right? That you have a position of prominence because you're white or because you're black and you were elevated to that position for tokenism or something along those lines.

Wood: In other words, you didn't get there by merit because you are capable or work hard or developed the skills, earned that right, you are only in that position because of your race or your ethnicity. In a military organization, if I have Latinos and Samoans and blacks and whites and city kids and country kids and all that stuff, are they now supposed to look at each other through this lens, right, of superficial characteristics, as opposed to appreciating I've got a Marine to my right and Marine to my left and behind me in front of me that I'm supporting or being supported by. Or, do I say, "Oh, you're the white guy." Or, "You're the black guy." Or, "You're the Latino woman." Or something like that and I view you through that lens. I mean, that can only be disruptive.

Wood: I mean, it breaks down this unity of purpose and unity of identity. The whole point of pushing everybody through the same basic training is that everybody appreciates you've had the same experience. You've met the same standards, same expectations have been put upon you. Apparently, all that is meaningless. I should only look at you because you're a female or a white or a black, or whatever that might be and that's how you're defined. Right? I mean, it's the antithesis of out of many, one, right? E pluribus Unum. Right? It's the antithesis of a melting pot of assuming a common identity for a common purpose.

Cordero: If you take that and we say that this is going to break the military. With a broken military, what do we have?

Wood: Well, not a very good defensive posture, that's for sure. When you get in to, again, a combat situation would be the ultimate expression of this, I've deployed to a few different war zones. When you're in the thick of things, the last thing you need to have in the back of your mind is "Can I trust the person from whom I'm expecting support?" Or, if somebody calls for support, do I hesitate and assess first, well, what is that person's race? Where did that person come from? They don't like rural kids and country music. Maybe I don't respond to a fellow Marine who came from an urban environment and listens to a different type of music. Right? This hesitancy, this questioning purpose, so let's say there's a black in a platoon and he's got a white platoon leader and the white platoon leader orders the individual to rush the machine gun nest from the enemy.

Wood: Well, am I ordering that person because they're black and I don't like them, or am I ordering that person because they are the most capable [inaudible 00:13:08] in the platoon. They are more likely, because of their skill set and mentality and all this other stuff to actually accomplish the mission. Right? When we introduce questions and these ambiguities and these frictions, it breaks down the coherence of the units, it breaks down the discipline to either give an order or to receive an order. Should I not order that person to do this because it might be interpreted that I am selectively conveying favor? Right? Or putting this person in danger based on the differences between my background and the other person's background, or the skin color and stuff. These critical race theory and similar sorts of identity politics things introduced into a military environment degrade that trust relationship.

Wood: I think it upends the whole idea of appreciating this commonality of experience in duty and obligation and mutual responsibility and mutual respect. Right? That you achieved your position or hold a position or do a job because of your capabilities, not because your gender or your race or your religious identity or something along those lines. Right? Again, it's the opposite. It destroys the inherent discipline and unity and commonality that you want military units to have in order to be effective in the most high stress situations that you can imagine.

Cordero: I want to take a second to flip this on its head a little bit. I try and do this every episode. As you're talking about this, to me, it all sounds very clear as to why this is a bad idea, but obviously someone thinks a good idea. Can you shed any light onto that perspective?

Wood: I think that there are things that we can indulge in and imagine in purely academic or theoretical situations. Right? I can imagine a perfect world where countries only interact in terms of trade and shared ideas and ideals and values and those sorts of things. Right? The reality of the world is a bit different. Right? You could have a megalomaniac as a leader or some kind of an oppressive regime or the communist party weren't ruling out of Beijing or something like that. Regardless of Western traditions or values or respect for sovereignty, they might invade, right? Or take, or try to impose their will. Well, why would somebody do that? Well, it's the nature of people, regimes are competition. It's an example of the ideal versus the reality.

Wood: In academia, we can deconstruct Western ideas of literature or art. Perhaps that's an interesting intellectual exercise, to always question, well, maybe the artist represented this, or maybe differences between the races manifest in a particular way. Or, if you look at the ideal encapsulated in the US constitution, right, the ideal in that and what we're always striving forward to, and then you look at historical incidents, the civil war was supposed to have done away with slavery. Yet, what did we see right in the immediate aftermath? There were parts of the south in particular that didn't want to let go of that. We saw a lot of racial upheaval in the twenties and thirties and the fifties. I mean, it's just, it's been an issue. Right? We've seen a huge waves of immigration into the United States in the late 1800s, early 1900s.

Wood: The old signs, "Irish need not apply." Suspensions when John F. Kennedy was running for president, ugh, a Catholic in the White House might be under the control of the Pope in Rome. Right? Even on a religious thing among white people, Protestants versus Catholics. It's not unique to racial things, right, but you can have these kinds of discussions in theoretical constructs, in academic settings. Then, there is this friction about how do we actually apply them and make them realities in the real world. Whereas we can never achieve perfection in reality, reality is also proof that all the worst attributes never fully manifest either. Right?

Wood: My experience in the Marine Corps was, yes, there are different people, but it's amazing how people get past the superficial aspects, right, of skin color for example, or speech patterns, or musical things, and actually focus on what really matters and that's mutual respect. It's mission accomplishment. It's I've got a brother or sister in uniform who need some assistance that I'm there for them. Right? Or you want to see them achieve so I'm going to get that person that school slot or help them on their way in studying for the next exam for promotion or whatever that might be.

Wood: I think in a macro, a very large perspective, the United States in particular has enjoyed 30 years of peace and prosperity. I mean, the big scheme of things, at the end of the Cold War, during that period we were worried about thermo nuclear war and you had massive armies facing off in Europe between the Warsaw pact and NATO and stuff. The reality of what war might mean tended to focus people. When all that went away and we had the happy decade in the 1990s and everybody's making money and you can just get kind of loose and silly in your thinking, and we can come up with theoretical problems.

Wood: When you look at the real world, truck drivers and postal carriers and store clerks and doctors and lawyers, who has ascended to the heights of the presidency, who are major sports figures and entertainment figures and all those sorts of things, I just don't see where the evidence really supports the theoretical problems that critical race theory is espousing. Right? I think most people that I've talked to that are still in the military and have to go into these kinds of training sessions or awareness sessions that they hear what's being proposed. Then, they look at the reality around them and there's this huge disconnect. I think that erodes the integrity and credibility of the system that the government or these authorities are telling me something that doesn't resonate with my personal experience.

Cordero: That brings me to my last question for you. That's do we know if these trainings are already happening in our military today?

Wood: Yeah, in various ways. I mean, the Navy has really taken some hits. The chief of Naval Operations Admiral Gilday has been taken to task by various members of Congress for this reading list and all the services have reading lists. The idea is, hey, these are works, literary works or books that talk about various things, whether it's a military history or leadership techniques or whatever there might be. We would recommend that you read these to gain from the experiences of others who have committed to paper, and it's a way to just kind of broaden your own experience base. Right? Some of these books on the Navy's reading list have really been perpetuating, or they're about critical race theory. The Chief of Naval operations, the CNO was challenged. Do you believe in this? There was some equivocation. Yes, we do have some problems with racial tensions or with male-female relationships, these sorts of bit. Well, you will have those things, but does it constitute a service wide endemic, systemic, structured sort of prejudicial thing. That just is not the case.

Wood: From reading lists to these training packages, a bunch of PowerPoint slides that have some of these points illustrated on them, and you'll have a moderator or somebody that facilitates discussion, and they are presenting this stuff to units, whether it's on ships or air force squadrons, or Marine Corp platoons, and companies, headquarters units states side, or field units that are abroad, they're being presented this sort of material. What I'm hearing and my colleagues outside of the military are hearing from those who've continued to serve is that people leave these sessions to shaking their head. They're saying this just doesn't make any sense. It appears to be an intentional drive to create problems within the military that ultimately if pursued would degrade the performance and the effectiveness and the cohesion that you actually want in the military, and it just begs the question of why would somebody want to do this?

Wood: The only conclusion I can come to is it's a liberal, progressive agenda where you have these, for lack of a better word, academics or activists that want to push a particular view of America and relationships between the races and male and female genders and whatnot for whatever reason, but they're imposing this. I guess, I think a very important point that people don't perhaps fully appreciate is the military is wonderful because it receives orders and it executes those orders. We don't want a US military that is in opposition to civilian authority. I mean, can you imagine that? I didn't like that order, so I'm not going to follow it. We don't want that world. The military, if they receive a lawful order and however stupid it might be, if it's not illegal, they're going to try to implement it as best they can.

Wood: Where a president's administration like the Biden administration today has political appointees imposing these things, right? In lawful positions, or if they direct a uniform military to do these things, it's not really within the purview of the military to say, "No, we're not going to do that." They're going to try to carry these things out as best they can. If the military in some ways can not speak for itself, I think it's incumbent upon those outside the military, like us, like the general American public to say this isn't right. This is injurious. Veterans can speak from their own experiences across the decades about how disastrous this might be and what the effect could have been on their own units when they served. This popular push back will influence their elected officials. I think that's probably the most effective way to combat this.

Cordero: Dakota Wood, thank you so much for talking with us on this difficult topic.

Wood: Great pleasure. Thanks for having me.

Cordero: That's it for this week's episode of Heritage Explains. Thanks for listening. We'll see you next week.

2.8.17 Trump, Bolton, and the FBI Raid Details the Media Isn't Telling You (2025-08-28 11:25)

. Last week, the FBI—under the aegis of the Department of Justice—raided John Bolton, the former national security adviser to [1]President Donald Trump during his first term. And they raided his home and his house. And they took away documents, which allegedly, the target of the raid were these documents.

Bolton was not arrested. He was not indicted. There was no effort aimed at him personally. But the accusation, apparently, was that he had removed [2]classified documents.

Almost immediately, the Left and the “Never Trump” Right, said, “See, we told you Donald Trump is on a revenge tour. First it was John Brennan, and then James Clapper, then James Comey. He’ll go after Anthony Fauci. Anybody that doesn’t have a pardon is fair game.”

But there’s more to the story than that. In 2019, when Trump fired John Bolton as national security adviser, he was writing a book. And he sold that book on the premise that he had been in the room. The title was, essentially, “This happened in the room” or “What happened in the room.” And he took prodigious notes.

So, he was supposed to be this anti-Trump, high-level appointee and famous in the conservative circles as a war hawk and interventionist. But he had intimate knowledge about how Donald Trump functioned abroad with major allies and enemies and rivals and neutrals and how he was at home. And he wrote this damning book, memoir about Trump.

The Trump DOJ said, “He’s just trying to write this right during the campaign season. And he’s a surrogate for the Biden campaign, in his bitterness. He’s angry. But more importantly, he is using this classified information through the filter of the notes he took and he is going to hurt U.S. national security.”

So, they filed, the DOJ, a motion to stop the publication.

The book was almost out. A federal judge, Royce Lamberth, looked at it and he thought—he basically said, “Well, I can’t really stop the book. It’s gonna be released in a few days.” But in kind of a rare excursus, he said, “John Bolton, you’re doing something wrong. You are violating, likely, national security laws. And if you don't stop, you'll be subject, at some point, to criminal prosecution." And then he let it rest.

Then the DOJ kept investigating. Donald Trump lost the election. During the transition, they looked at it—the Biden transition. When [3]President Joe Biden came into office, they dropped it by June. Six months.

So now the question is, did they go in to get these documents last week because they were on a revenge tour? Retribution against Bolton because he's been all over left-wing cable news, specifically CNN and, more importantly, MSNBC. And he's been blasting Donald Trump on everything: the Iran bombing, the Ukraine war, using federal troops in Washington. And therefore, he made himself a target. And this is "old hat," that he says. "Everybody has adjudicated this."

There's two things to watch to see whether Bolton is accurate. But I would, before I'd finish, by talking about those two criteria. I will say that when Donald Trump's home was raided on Aug. 9, 2022, John Bolton spoke out. And he said, "Let's not prejudge, you," basically, you pro-Trumpers, "let's just let all the evidence, you know, be seen before we make snap judgments." Meaning, you know, he's probably guilty.

But more importantly, then he said, "Donald Trump was just—anything that came across his desk. He saw french fries, he got 'em. He saw classified documents, he did, just because he could." And then on another occasion, "He has no respect for classification. And that's a lie, that he personally classified these."

So, he was very critical of anybody who objected to what he thought was an FBI-legitimate raid on Mar-a-Lago.

Now it's ironic. We'll see if he uses the same tropes and themes to protect himself in the way that he blasted Trump about a similar raid. But what we're looking at is to see if it was justified or whether it was vengeful. And if it's just about an old matter four years ago that the [4]Biden administration, for political reasons, dropped, but a federal judge said, "You know what? There's something there," but it was dropped, to go back and rehash that I don't think is gonna be worth it.

And maybe it was a vengeful shot across the bow to Bolton. He probably wouldn't be charged. But also, to other people like Comey and Clapper and Brennan, Fauci, Mark Milley: "All of you, be careful. You've done something wrong and we're gonna investigate you. And that's gonna cost you a lot of money for legal counsel." That would not be good, if that were true.

But here's why I don't think it's quite like that. To get the FBI's permission to go into the Bolton home, you had to have two different federal judges examine the request—the permission to enter the Bolton home and office. And they did give it. And they're disinterested third parties.

Second, why did the Biden administration drop this investigation? They never even told us. And apparently, they dropped it because Bolton had become an ally of the Left. And they did not want to put him in legal jeopardy.

And third, and finally, there were leaks, rumors that the FBI went in there not to examine the old charges of his notes that were used improperly to write his critical anti-Trump book, but because there had been allegations, for a long time, that John Bolton transferred classified information. That doesn't mean he downloaded attachments, necessarily—CIA or FBI analyses or [5]national security assessments. It just meant that he was trying to transfer some information that he should not to his family, as if he could evade surveillance by intelligence authorities of any impropriety.

If he did that and he actually—as some of the rumors say—then it's a different story. That would be new information.

And that would mean that John Bolton—maybe to write his notes, maybe to enhance his career as a consultant, or think tanker, or as an author, or just a gadfly—was going back and looking at things that transpired during his first-term service. And it was only a year. But nevertheless, to chronicle it, he didn't just write it down in his notebook, which could be found and subpoenaed, but he sent emails to particular people, namely his family, to memorialize that. If that's true, he has legal jeopardy.

So it's either, likely, something that should not have happened—a vengeful tour, revenge, retribution, payback. I think, more likely, there's something there or two—as I said—two federal judges would not have given permission to look. And if he did transfer files that were classified, the penalties fall under the Espionage Act. And they can be over 10 to 20 years in imprisonment.

So, we'll see what's going to happen. But meanwhile, the Left is alleging retribution. And the Trump DOJ and FBI said, "Just hold it. Hold it. Hold it. Wait till you read the actual request for an intervention or so-called raid. And let's see what we found and then make an assessment."

2.8.18 Why America's Natural Ally, India, Is Pulling Closer to Russia and China (2025-08-28 11:28)

We're currently in a little rough patch with India.

Narendra Modi, who's been the prime minister for 11 years—a very powerful figure within India and a player on the national scene—he's a center-right politician, if not, you know, unabashedly right-wing. So, he would be a natural partner for the United States under [1]President Donald Trump. And they did have very close relations in the first term.

And Trump sees India as a large, English-speaking counterweight to China. It's got 1.4 billion people. China's a little bit bigger, but China has a falling—drastically falling—birth rate. India's pretty steady.

So, India seems like it's going to be more ascendant in the future, even more than [2]China. And they've had a lot of border disputes along the Himalayan area, as they have with Islamic Pakistan. It's also the largest democracy in the world.

So, you add up all of these ingredients and it seems like a natural ally of the United States in general and Donald Trump in particular: conservative governance, suspicious of China, democratic, English-speaking, closer to the United States than Islamic Pakistan, which has given us, you know, that was the sojourn or a base for Osama bin Laden.

And then, more importantly, Indian Americans are now numbering 5 million or 6 million people. We've opened the borders wide open to people immigrating from [3]India. And they immigrate often with a lot. They have English facility—gets them a leg up on other immigrants. And more importantly, they come with capital and skills. And they're a very influential minority, very successful minority in the United States. And we welcome them with open arms.

So, you would think that the Modi-Trump, Indian-American relationship would be great, but it's not. And why isn't it? Well, one reason is that India traditionally ran large surpluses with us, given their tariffs and our lack of tariffs for India. But recently, that has closed.

And now Indian economists and American economists and politicians disagree whether India has a big surplus with the United States in trade or a small—depending on how you count material goods, services, remittances, etc.

By the way, there's about $35 billion to $40 billion in remittances that go to India. It's right behind Mexico and Central America.

So, it should be a very profitable relationship, especially for India to have all of its citizens free to come to the United States. And millions apparently do, and they get billions of dollars in remittances. They run a trade surplus with us. And we have a lot of commonalities as English-speaking democracies. But we're not.

And so, why aren't we? One of the greatest problems is Donald Trump slapped a tariff. And he said, "India's tariffs are too high." And they replied, "Well, if you look at services and the other intangibles that I mentioned, maybe it's not that bad. And we're working on it." But Trump really did put high tariffs on India.

The second thing is, India buys a huge amount of Russian oil, along with China. We're talking about secondary boycotts in the Trump administration and the United States. And what I mean by that is Trump will put high tariffs, if not sanctions, on countries that buy oil—buy Russian oil. Not just [4]Russia itself that sells its oil.

This is very controversial because in the Indian mind, we're not going to, necessarily, sanction Germany or some Europeans that buy Russian energy, natural gas and oil. Nor have we taken on the Chinese juggernaut that buys Russian oil.

So, India is saying, "Why are you picking on us, a rival of China, and so much commonality?"

And Trump would reply: "Because you've been buying Russian oil for over three and a half years and fueling the Russian war machine that invaded [5]Ukraine. And we're now at delicate, critical periods in the Ukraine-Russian war. And if you were just to back off, voluntarily, the purchases of Russian oil, and maybe we could then pressure China and maybe I could consider tariffs."

And Prime Minister Modi said, "No." And he not only said no, but he wasn't going to be bullied around. And one of the results is now he is triangulating with China and Russia. So, he's developing better relations with his traditional rival and enemy, China, and he's cementing his relations with Russia.

Remember, during the Cold War, Russia was very close to India. India was a veritable proxy of Russia. We backed Islamic Pakistan. So, in those wars between Pakistan and India, there was a Russian-American dimension. We were on the wrong side of it, in my opinion, because India was an English-speaking democracy. Pakistan was an Islamic autocracy, de facto.

But my point is that it has strong ties, historically, with Russia and it's developing ties with China, and it's pulling away from us, despite the fact that we allow them trade concessions, asymmetrical tariffs, generous remittances to be sent back. And it's the second-largest immigrant group in the United States.

2.8.19 Which Democrat Will Merge Into the 2028 Sane Lane? (2025-08-28 11:34)

Supposedly, the tiresome comedy stylings of Gavin Newsom – he's the equivalent of a Wednesday night prop comic opener down at the Gooberville Giggle Works – have thrust him into the forefront of the Democrat race for the 2028 nomination. What a sad and pathetic state of affairs that is. He's trying to claim the Fighter Lane. You see, he fights by hiring a couple of they/them mediocrities to run his social media account, pumping out an endless series of tweets that are nearly as funny as leprosy. They are directed at Trump, who ignores them; if a nitwit tweets in the forest, does it make a sound? This is fighting in the eyes of the Democrat activist class; this is pathetic in the eyes of normal people.

A lot of them are trying to crowd into the Fighter Lane. We need somebody who's going to fight the perilous peril that is Donald Trump and his authoritarian authoritarianism that's literally fascist Nazism! Of course, the fighting is entirely performance art. You've got Pete Buttigieg out there promising to fight. This Navy veteran – he's all yours, swabbies! – looks less like a bruiser than someone you want to give a wedgie, and who would eagerly receive it. Illinois governor/behemoth JB Pritzker seeks to waddle into the fighter lane, too, though if he does, he's going to have to wear a sign on his back reading "Wide Load." Well, he does have weight on his potential opponents – he outweighs all of them put together – but the dude's not going to have endurance for the long haul; he breaks a sweat resting.

The Fighter Lane would be crowded just with JB alone, but with Gov. Hairstyle, Alfred McKins-E Neuman, Spartacus Booker, Big Chief Warren, and others potentially competing, the smart play would be to seek another lane. Call it the Sane Lane. That's the lane where the candidate embraces normality and lets the lunatics tear each other apart over their total dedication to left-wing insanity and hatred of Trump.

What does the Sane Lane look like? Well, it looks a lot like the way we ended up with Bill Clinton. For those of you who weren't around when Bill Clinton came out of nowhere in 1992 – he had been the governor of a southern state and was known primarily for giving the longest and most boring Democrat convention speech in history. He did it despite having a libido limited only by the angle of his Peyronie's disease. He did it because he had some charisma, and he took the radical position that crime is bad and people should work instead of getting welfare

Yes, at the time, most Democrats were saying the same kind of thing that the Democrats now are saying about crime and people working instead of being on welfare. They were for crime and against people working instead of being on welfare. But Bill Clinton understood that normal Americans did not see things that way. He was liberal on everything else, probably driven harder to the left by that hideous shrew of a wife, to the extent he ever interacted with her after allegedly implanting Chelsea. But the fact that he was willing to put criminals in jail and to make welfare cheats work had the effect of making it safe for normal people to consider him. The fact that he had a personality helped, too. After all, the cycle before, candidate Michael Dukakisbot had been unable to manage to say that he would want to off a guy who raped and murdered his wife. You know, if you can't take the position that you'd want to waste a guy who did your spouse, you're certainly not going to protect the rest of us.

Bill Clinton won by merging into the Sane Lane. But who's going to do that this time? The Sane Lane is wide open, just waiting for somebody normal to come along.

Now, it's not only going to be crime and welfare where the Democrat choosing to race down the Sane Lane is going to have to be a heretic. No, the Democrats have managed to embrace a much wider variety of bizarre social pathologies that normal people totally reject than they espoused back in 1992, and they were pretty sick weirdos then. Today, the Democrats as a whole are on the 20 percent side of 80 percent issues like mutilating kids to conform to their Munchausen mommies' delusions, allowing perverted dudes in locker rooms and on playing fields with girls, open borders, urban chaos, and DEI, to name a few.

And it's not just pure policy positions. It's, if not charisma, at least not being a repellant weirdo. Bill Clinton seemed pleasant, perhaps a bit of a rascal. He did not give the impression that he hated working-class people; instead, he gave the impression that he understood and appreciated them. That's hard to grasp for the typical smug blue-bubble professional managerial class Democrat whose closest brush with people who work for a living is asking his illegal alien nanny to make sure that Kaden's steel-cut oats are gluten-free.

There are some other candidates who might try the Sane Lane. Gretchen Whitmer is one (HT [1]@NanHayworth). Sure, Michigan sends out mos def Stepford Wife vibes, but she knows her state and understands that she needs the votes of people who used to be Dems but voted for Trump. Still, it'll be hard for her to distance herself from the obsessions of her suburban Chardonnay lady demo - assuming she tries to.

I recently [2]wrote about Ro Khanna, the Silicon Valley congressman who makes an effort not to come across as hating the normies. That's his selling point, and it's a big one. But lately, he's signed onto every leftist shibboleth that's undulating out there in the ether. One of the things you've got to do if you're going to be in the Sane Lane is have a Sistah Soulja moment. She was the third-tier rapper who wondered aloud why we didn't have a Kill Whitey Week back in 1992. Today, that's pretty much a plank of the Democrat platform; no one in the Fighter Lane would ever stand up and say, "No, I don't think you ought to murder white people." Trump would be against murdering white people, so most of them would have to be for it. But Bill Clinton said it, and that put him on the map. He went against the hard left of his party, solidifying the feeling of security normies had voting for him.

I expect Ro Khanna would concede that no, you shouldn't murder white people, and since he's a smart guy, he wouldn't add a bunch of qualifiers to that like most of the other Democrat dummies would. But that's about all you're getting out of him. He doesn't seem to hate MAGA folks. Everything else on the Democratic agenda he's on board for, from DEI to taxing you into the poor house. Khanna makes a very good first impression - I found him likable and intelligent - but it's the second impression that's going to be a problem when he has to start explaining why he thinks some men menstruate, especially since he's obviously too smart to believe that nonsense.

Rahm Emanuel is another Democrat who could conceivably try out a test ride in the Sane Lane. He's recently been on with Hugh Hewitt and Megyn Kelly, and he tries to come across as reasonable. He agrees that boys should not play in girls' sports and concedes that this is going to put a target on his back from his left. But that's as far as he goes. When you start pushing him on whether he thinks children should be castrated to conform to delusions of being the other gender, he'll pivot to tell you the real problem is that we don't give enough money to public school teachers. It's going to be hard driving in the Sane Lane if your party's enforcers require you to embrace insanity.

But what if there was a sane Democrat candidate, one who could pass as normal, one who could forthrightly say that crime is bad, that we shouldn't discriminate against anybody based on immutable characteristics, and that the trans stuff has gone from treating weird people with respect to putting them on a pedestal at the expense of everyone else? One who could say, "You know, Trump is right not to want black and other people to get murdered in our blue cities." What if you had a Democrat who just wanted things to be normal, which is what Joe Biden said he wanted but didn't deliver – though, in his defense, he was a human eggplant who was too senile to form a coherent sentence. And what if this hypothetical candidate came out and said that he opposes Trump, but he doesn't think Trump is Hitler, and he doesn't think Trump's supporters are Nazis?

That's one heck of a needle to thread, adhering to Democrat ideology at some level while repudiating enough of it to win normies without alienating the blue hair brigades. The Democrats are coming off the 2024 defeat that they still don't understand. They think it's because Kamala was a drunken mid-wit trollop, which is true, but not the reason she lost. America would be happy to have a drunken mid-wit trollop who created a booming economy, security, and a sense of normalcy. Kamala lost because a majority of Americans despise the kind of cultural, economic, and political nonsense the Democrat Party stands for. But the Democrats are stuck in a Seymour Skinner death spiral: "[3]No, it's the voters who are wrong."

This means the Democrats are going to think that the answer is to go harder left, and you find that in the Fighter Lane, not the Sane Lane. What needs to happen is what happened in 1972 and 1984, elections following the loss of an alleged moderate. They need to get beaten so badly that their desire to win overcomes their desire to please the left. And for that reason, in 2028, the Sane Lane is probably going to dead-end.

2.8.20 Air Force Reverses This Biden Administration Decision on Ashli Babbitt (2025-08-28 11:39)

The U.S. Air Force will provide full military funeral honors to Ashli Babbitt, the Air Force veteran fatally shot inside the U.S. Capitol on Jan. 6, 2021, by then-Capitol Police Lt. Michael Byrd.

The development comes after Judicial Watch wrote to Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth urging him to “make a new determination granting military funeral honors” for Babbitt, which had been denied by the Biden administration. Senior counsel Robert Sticht asked Hegseth to consider two recent updates related to the case.

First, on January 20, 2025, President Trump granted clemency for certain offenses relating to the events at or near the United States Capitol on January 6, 2021. The Presidential proclamation states, “This proclamation ends a grave national injustice that has been perpetrated upon the American people over the last four years and begins a process of national reconciliation.” President Trump (a) commuted the sentences of certain individuals convicted of offenses related to events that occurred at or near the U.S. Capitol on January 6, 2021; (b) granted a full, complete and unconditional pardon to all other individuals convicted of [similar] offenses....

Second ... on July 2, 2025, the United States of America paid a damage award of nearly five million dollars to settle a wrongful death lawsuit that Judicial Watch and I brought forward on behalf of the Estate of Ashli Babbitt and her husband Aaron Babbitt to ensure justice and accountability for the fatal shooting of Ashli Babbitt on January 6, 2021. Once again, Gen. Kelly’s denial of military funeral honors for Ashli’s funeral cannot be reconciled with this landmark legal settlement. Many well-documented facts now clearly show that the fatal shooting was not justified.

For example, Ashli was the only official homicide on January 6, 2021. Ashli, age 35, was unarmed when she was fatally shot. She stood 5’3” tall and weighed 115 pounds. Her hands were up in the air, empty, and in plain view of Lt. Byrd and four armed officers behind him. Seven additional armed officers were behind Ashli, including four Containment and Emergency Response Team officers. Ashli posed no threat to the safety of any officer nor any Member of Congress who stayed after Member evacuation. Ashli was begging officers to call for backup before she was shot. Officers ignored Ashli. The only shot fired that day was the one Lt. Byrd fired to kill Ashli. Lt. Byrd was not in uniform. Lt. Byrd did not identify himself as a police officer or otherwise make his presence known to Ashli. Lt. Byrd also did not give Ashli any warnings or commands before firing the shot that killed her. Ashli never saw Lt. Byrd because he was hidden from her view. She was ambushed and defenseless. Multiple witnesses at the scene yelled, “you just murdered her.” Lt. Byrd later told the world on NBC Nightly News that he “had no clue” about the individual he shot. “I didn’t even know it was a female until hours, way later ... that night,” he said. ([1]Judicial Watch)

Persuaded by developments since the initial request was denied in 2021 and the circumstances of her death, Under Secretary of the Air Force Matthew L. Lohmeier wrote to Babbitt’s husband and mother telling them he believe the "previous determination was incorrect."

Judicial Watch President Tom Fitton praised the decision.

"Ashli Babbitt's family is grateful to President Trump, Secretary Hegseth and Under Secretary Lohmeier for reversing the Biden Defense Department's cruel decision to deny Ashli funeral honors as a distinguished veteran of the Air Force," said Fitton. "Judicial Watch's team spent years investigating, litigating, and exposing the truth about Ashli's homicide. Judicial Watch is proud to have done its part in bringing her family a measure of justice and accountability for Ashli's outrageous killing. And our battle for justice will continue."
